

THE

EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

TO THE

CORINTHIANS.

By the same Author. LECTURES on the HISTORY of the JEWISH CHURCH Pred Series. Asknown Severe. For the JEWISH LECTURES on the HISTORY of the JEWISH CHURCH known for the MENTORY of the LECTURES on the HISTORY of the EASTERN CHURCH Faces, to go to the HISTORY of the EASTERN CHURCH Faces, to go. 5.

HISTORY. Plans. 8vo. 16s.

Blustrations. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

With a Memoir. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

of THE PRINCE OF WALES. Sec. St.

SINAI and PALESTINE, IN CONNEXION WITH THEIR

The BIBLE in the HOLY LAND. Extracted from the above for Village Schools &c. Woodcuts. Fcp. 8vo. 2s. 6d. HISTORICAL MEMORIALS of CANTERBURY.

SERMONS in the EAST PREACHED during the Tour

SERMONS on the UNITY of EVANGELICAL and APOSTOLICAL TEACHING, Post 8vc. 7s. 6d. BISHOP STANLEY'S ADDRESSES and CHARGES.

EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

TO THE

CORINTHIANS.

WITH CRITICAL NOTES AND DISSERTATIONS.

By ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY, D.D.
DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.

THIRD EDITION.

LONDON:

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET. 1865.

FOXDOR

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO. NEW-STREET SQUARE

ADVERTISEMENT

то

THE SECOND EDITION.

THE CHANGES in this edition are chiefly those of compression and correction. The scale of the notes has been considerably reduced, and a somewhat more prominent place has been given to the Dissertations; so as to render the critical part of the work subordinate to the historical, and the whole more available as an elucidation of the most important records of the early Christian Church. I trust, also, that the present volume will be found free from the numerous minute errors. whether of the press or otherwise, with which the first edition unfortunately abounded. Among the friendly critics to whom I owe the notice of many of these errors, I cannot refrain from naming Mr. Nesbitt, Professor of Greek in the Queen's College, Galway: Mr. Phinn, of Coxley, Wells; and Mr. Lightfoot, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. I gladly take this opportunity of acknowledging my obligations, as on a former occasion, to my friend Mr. Grove, of Sydenham, for the careful revision to which he has subjected the sheets in this edition.*

^{*} The changes made in the Third Edition are too trifling to be noticed.

PREFACE.

In many respects every commentary on the Epistles of St. Paul must traverse the same ground, and pursue the same plan. But, partly as a justification of entering afresh on a field so often trodden, partly as an explanation of the design of this work, it may be advisable briefly to state the peculiarities of the Apostle's argument generally, and of these two Epistles in particular, which I have endeavoured to bear in mind.

Unlike the style of regular treatises, the language of St. Paul's Epistles partakes in an eminent degree of the roughness and abruptness of the most familiar letters, whilst it also labours with the fervour and vehemence of the most impassioned oratory. Dictated for the most part, not written, his Epistles partake of the character of speeches rather than of compositions. He is in them the speaking Prophet, not the silent Scribe. He almost always conceives himself as 'present in Spirity,' as 'speaking' to his readers face to face; his Epistle, in his mind, becomes himself; and through it he appears among them as Elijah before Ahab, as himself before Felix. Every sentence is aimed at some special object—is influenced by some immediate impulse—is lit up by some personal joy, or darkened by some personal sorrow or apprehension. For this reason it is necessary, beyond what is required in ordinary writings, to keep constantly before us both the Apostle and his readers; what they expected from him, what he expected from them, and what was the mood or association with which he dictated, not merely the Epistle in general, but, so far as we can ascertain, each particular portion.

viii PREFACE.

Further, the Apostle's style is of that irregular and complex kind which often requires an analysis of every particle of a sentence, in order to exhibit its structure and purpose. In some respects its outward aspect closely resembles that of two men, very different from each other and from him-Thucydides and Oliver Cromwell.1 In all three there is a disproportion between thought and language, the thought straining the language till it cracks in the process - a shipwreck of grammar and logic, as the sentences are whirled through the author's mind-a growth of words and thoughts out of and into each other, often to the utter entanglement of the argument which is framed out of them. In the case of St. Paul, there are also peculiar forms of speech, which he finds it impossible to resist, and which whilst, from their frequent recurrence, they help to explain each other, almost always act with disturbing force on the sentences in which they occur. Such. for example, is his habit of balancing two parts of a sentence against each other - the joint product, as it

¹ No Greek scholar need be reminded of the characteristics here intended in the style of Thucydides. No one who reads the speeches of the Protector (as edited by Mr. Carlyle) can fail to see what is intended in the case of Cromwell.

were, of the Hebrew parallelism and the Greek syllogism or dilemma. Or again, the unexpected burst into doxology or solemn asseveration. Or the appropriation of the arguments of those against whom, or for whom he is pleading, to his own person—the 'transferring' to himself 'in a figure' what properly belongs to others. Or the long digressions, almost after the manner of Herodotus, suggested by a word, a reminiscence, an apprehension. Or the sudden rise into successive stages of flight, through the various stages of spiritual life, not halting till he reaches the throne of God; the exact image (if one may borrow an illustration from common literature) of the ascent of faith, so beautifully portrayed in Southey's description of the upward voyage of the Glendoveer to Mount Calasay.

Yet, further, it has been attempted to follow out, not only the train of argument and the construction of sentences, but the image presented by each separate word. Never was there a truer description of any style than that which Luther gives of the style of the Apostle: 'The words of St. Paul are not dead words: they are living creatures, and have hands and feet.' Each word has, as it were, a law, a life, a force of its own. It has grown up under the shade of some adiacent argument, or it has been tinged with the colouring of its Hebrew original, or of some neighbouring passage in the version of the Seventy, or has been animated with a vigour before unknown, through the Christian and Apostolical use to which it is now for the first time applied. And it propagates itself through new sentences, words, paragraphs, chapters, grown out of it as out of some prolific seed of the natural world.

Yet again, the arguments and words of the Apostle, unlike those of common writers, have furnished materials for systems, for opinions, for doctrines, for practices—sometimes rightly, sometimes wrongly deduced from them; but still so far connected with them, that the image of the Apostolical Epistles can never be complete, unless we note the associations with which the lapse of many centuries has invested them.

And, finally, there is hardly any considerable section of the Epistle that has not exercised some important influence, or contained some important lesson, for all the future history of mankind; some truth, which is here for the first time clearly set forth—some duty, which is here most energetically urged—some trait of the Apostle's character, which is here most completely illustrated.

So to draw forth the contents of the two Epistles has been my object in the following pages. To this object I have endeavoured strictly to confine myself. To enumerate the conflicting interpretations of each passage, except where the various interpretations themselves are necessary to represent the meaning or complete the history of the passage-to frame new systems from the text of the Apostle-or to justify and attack existing systems by his language-would have been to divert the attention from the very subject which requires the closest concentration. Such a course will, perhaps, disappoint some readers; but it is a course which may safely be left to vindicate itself. Not only must we remember, according to the old saying, that the Scripture is its own best interpreter; but also that, by being left to interpret itself, it actually yields new instruction which else would be lost or overlooked. To any one who thus carefully endeavours to reproduce 'the argument, the whole argument, and nothing but the argument' of the Apostle, the page, which before secmed dead and colourless, will be lit up at once by living pictures, by the lights and shades of many trains of complex thought, which belong strictly to its history, and can only be arrived at through a study of its history. Words and ideas which have often been confined to the use of particular sections or parties of the Church, when seen in their original meaning and connexion recover their independence, and once more have visibly a long race to run through the mouths of many generations. The direct, practical, personal application which the Apostle's arguments had, at the time when they were originally used, if at first sight it might seem to limit the universality of their meaning, on second thoughts opens, deepens, and widens their application a hundredfold, in proportion as we see the close connexion which they had with the practical life of man.

Thus much would apply to most, if not to all, of the Pauline Epistles. The two Epistles to Corinth have a special interest of their own. In the first place, they are, in one word, the historical Epistles. The First Epistle to Corinth gives a clearer insight than any other portion of the New Testament into the institutions, feelings, opinions of the Church, of the earlier period of the Apostolic age. Written, with the exception of the two Epistles to Thessalonica, first of any of St. Paul's Epistles, and, so far as we know, first of any of the writings of the New Testament, it is in every sense the earliest chapter of the history of the Christian Church. The Second Epistle, though possessing less of general interest, is yet the most important document in relation to the history of the Apostle himself. No other portions of the New Testament throw an equal amount of light at once on his personal character and feelings and on the facts of his life. The illustrations which the First Epistle furnishes of the general history of the Apostolical Church, the Second Epistle furnishes of the biography of St. Paul. Both these lessons it has been the purpose of the following pages to draw out as fully as possible.

It may be further remarked, that the two Epistles to the Corinthians disclose a remarkable passage in the Apostle's life, as a distinct whole. The incidents, on which the two letters turn, have a continuous interest - a beginning, middle, and end of their own. Something of the same kind may be seen in the Epistles to the Thessalonians, and also in the four Epistles of the Roman Imprisonment. But in none can we trace so clearly, as in the two successive addresses to Corinth, the fluctuations of feeling-the change of plan-the effect produced by the tidings from his converts on the Apostle-by the conduct and words of the Apostle on his converts. Writers of fiction sometimes tell their story through epistolary correspondence. The story of the real life of the Apostle is told through the medium of the two letters to the Corinthians; and it has been here attempted to present that story in its different aspects, as it is gradually unrolled before our eyes.

The arrangement, which has been planned with a view to these several points, is as follows:

Each Epistle, and each Section of each Epistle, is prefaced by a statement of the circumstances necessary to render intelligible the position which the Apostle takes up. Each Section, wherever the case admits of such a distribution, is followed by a statement of the results, either in Christian history or Christian truth, which that Section has contributed to establish. In some instances, as in the 11th, 12th, and 14th Chapters of the First Epistle, these remarks have necessarily assumed the form of distinct Essays on the several subjects of the Apostolical Eucharist and Worship, and the Gifts of the Spirit. But, as a general rule, they are confined to the especial object of each particular argument.

To each Section I have attached a Translation and appended a Paraphrase of its contents. For the principle on which the Translation is made, I refer to the note at the end of the Preface. The Paraphrase is intended to bring out the meaning of the respective Sections, as explained in the preceding annotations. The risk, thus incurred, of diluting, and, it may be feared, at times lowering the dignity and simplicity of the original, is obvious. But the convenience of presenting the argument in a brief summary is such as to overweigh the contrary disadvantages.

In the Notes, I have, as a general rule, given only such quotations as seemed absolutely needed to establish the points in question; and have also excluded all reference to individual commentators. It will, of course, be understood that, so far as they were known to me, they have all been consulted; and it is hoped that no interpretation of a passage has been rejected or adopted, without due consideration of the arguments that have been urged for or against it. Special explanations or

"tions are mentioned only in the following cases; namely, where the interpretations have in themselves a distinct historical value, as representatives of great schools of theology, or where, as often in the case of xiv PREFACE

Bengel, the wisdom or beauty of their expression demands a distinct record; or finally, where the works referred to are repertorics of quotations from Jewish or classical authors, as in the case of Wetstein, Schöttgen, Liehtfoot, and Hevdenreich.

The genuineness of these Epistles has never been disputed; and, as the internal evidence is a sufficient guarantee of that genuineness without any external support, it is needless to say more on this subject than to point out the great interest, attaching to two absolutely undisputed documents of such importance to the history of the period. Whatever facts or statements are proved by these Epistles, will be accepted as proved by the severest criticism that has ever been applied to any ancient remains of whatever kind.

The Text is that which Lachmann has published as the nearest approach to the authentic text of the first three centuries. The grounds for preferring his text to any other are elsewhere stated. It may be enough here to observe, that whilst, on the one hand, the differences between this and the Received Text very rarely affect the sense, on the other hand, they materially increase the force and simplicity of the style; and it is this consideration which to one unskilled in MSS. is the most convincing proof of their antiquity. There is a rudeness in form, an abruptness in construction, a vivacity in expression, which convey an irresistible

¹ Most of the commentaries on the Epistles to the Corinthians are contained in the great collections, ancient and modern, of annotations on the New Testament. The special writers on these two Epistles are few in number,—Heydenreich, Billroth, Osiander, Meyer, and Reiche, in Germany, are the most important.

To these I would add a MS. commentary on a large portion of these Episties by Mr. Bonsmy Price, to which I had the advantage of access several years ago, when I first undertook this work.

² See Professor Jowett's Preface to the Epistles to the Thessalonians.

PREFACE, XV

impression of primitive originality, analogous to that which is produced by an ancient edifice compared with a modern imitation.

The variations in the Received Text' are inserted at the foot of the Text, with the exception of such as are of perpetual recurrence (such as οὖτω for οὖτως, and ∂ττῶ for ∂ττῖ before vowels). In the Commentary they are only noticed in cases either where the authority is nearly equal, or where they suggest some general remark.

For the sake of understanding the occasional references to the MSS. as well as with the view of giving in a concise form the basis of the Text which has been followed, it may be as well to extract from the prefaces of Wetstein, Tischendorf, and Dean Alford, in their respective editions of the New Testament, the names of the chief MSS. on which the Greek text of the Epistles to the Corinthians is founded.

The two Epistles to the Corinthians are contained, with more or less completeness, in eleven uncial MSS. written between the 4th and 9th centuries.

The 5th century. A. 'the Alexandrine,' in the British Museum.

Deficient 2 Cor. iv. 13—xii. 6.

The 4th century. B. 'the Vatican,' at Rome.

The 5th century. C. 'of Ephrem,' at Paris. Deficient 1 Cor. vii.

18—ix. 6; xiii. 8—xv. 40; 2 Cor. x. 8—
xiii. 18.

The 6th century. D*. 'Claromoutanus' (so called from Beza's belief that it was taken from the Monastery of Clermont, near Beauvais), in the Imperial

¹ The only important variations are those in I Cor. vii. 5, 33, ix. 15, siii. 3, xx. 51; 2 Cor. x. 12, xii. 1.

xvi PREFACE.

of D.

Library at Paris. It has been touched by several hands, whose corrections are marked D1. D2. D3. 1 Cor. xiv. 13-22 supplied by a later hand.

or later.

The 10th century E. Once in the Abbey of St. Germain des Prés at Paris, and hence called 'Sangermanensis,' but now at St. Petersburg. A faulty conv

The 9th century. F. 'Augiensis' (so called from the Monastery of Reichenau - 'Augia major' or 'dives'in Switzerland), at Trin. Coll. Cambridge. Deficient 1 Cor. iii. 8-16; vi. 7-14.

The 9th century. G. 'Boernerianus' (so called from Professor Boerner, its former owner), in the Royal Library at Dresden. Deficient as F.

The 6th century. H. 'Coislinianus' (so called from its first possessor Bishop Coislin, of Metz), in the Imperial Library at Paris. Mere fragments, only containing fifteen verses of the First Epistle (x. 22-29, and xi. 9-16).

The 7th century. Fa, 'Coislinianus 1' (so called from the same Bishop), at Paris. A few quotations in the scholia to a LXX. MS., only containing two verses of the First Epistle (vii. 39, xi. 29), and three of the Second (iii, 13, ix, 7, xi, 33). I. 'Petropolitanus,' contains among other fragments 1 Cor. xv. 53-xvi. 9.

The 5th century.

K. 'Mosquensis,' at Moscow. Deficient 1 Cor. The 9th century. i. 1-vi. 13: viii. 7-11.

The 9th century. L. 'Angelicus Romanus' (so called from the Angelican Library in which it is contained). at Rome. With this most of the readings of the Received Text agree.

> Hamburgensis et Londinensis, containing l Cor. xv. 52-2 Cor. i. 15, and 2 Cor. x. 13xii. 5.

At the close of the Second Epistle I have subjoined in an Appendix, the apocryphal correspondence between the Corinthians and St. Paul, preserved in the Church of Armenia.

NOTE

THE CORRECTED ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS.

In the Authorised Version of 1611, the Epistles were translated by the Fifth out of the Six Companies or Committees appointed for the whole work. It consisted of seven persons, Dr. Barlow, Dr. Hutchinson, Dr. Spencer, Mr. Fenton, Mr. Rabbett, Mr. Sanderson, Mr. Dakins; each of whom translated a part, to be submitted to the revision of the whole Committee.

To which of these, therefore, the translation of the Epistles to the Corinthians in its present form is to be ascribed, cannot now be ascertained. But inasmuch as the version of these Epistles in 1611, in common with that of the whole Bible, was professedly based on the 'Bishops' Bible' of 1568, and inasmuch as the alterations from that earlier Version are very slight, the virtual translators of the Epistles to the Cornithians, as we now have them, are those who were concerned in that work in the reign of Elizabeth. Of these, the name of the translator of the First Epistle is learned from the initials affixed, G. G.—Dr. Gabriel Goodman, Dean of Westminster. The Second Epistle having no such marks, its translator is not known.

I have given here the text of the Authorised Version, with such corrections only as were required for the sake of more faithfully representing the sense of the original. They are as follows: 2

See 'The English Hexapla,' pp. 143, 156.

² For an explanation of the mode adopted to denote these corrections, see p. 20.

- (I) Such as are produced by a restoration of the text of the ancient MSS, as represented by Lachmann.
- (II) Such as are produced by a better system of punctuation.
 (III) Such as are produced by transposing the words into
- a nearer conformity with the original order.

 (IV) Such as are produced by bringing out the emphasis of words, apparent in the original text either from the use of the pronoun, or from the place of the words in the sentence.
 - (V) Such as are required by inaccuracy of translation. Of these inaccuracies:
- (1) Some few are from mere carelessness, without any authority in the Received Text, or any assignable motive: e.g. in 1 Cor. i. 4 'Jesus Christ' is substituted for 'Christ Jesus', in 1 Cor. i. 7 'coming' for 'revelation' (this is peculiar to Version of 1611); in 1 Cor. iii. 19 'own' is inserted, in vii. 37 it is omitted.
- (2) Some few must probably be ascribed to theological fear or partiality. In 1 Cor. ix. 27 the word ἀδόκμως is translated 'cast away,' instead of its usual rendering, 'reprobate,' apparently in order to avoid the conclusion that the Apostle might fall away from grace. In 1 Cor. xi. 27 the words kelf) πώτη are rendered 'eat and drink,' in order to avoid the inference that the Eucharist might be received under one kind.
- (3) Some few are not so much inaccuracies as obsolete expressions. In I Cor. iv. 4 μαστης σένουδε is rendered 'I know nothing by myself,' where 'by' is used in a provincial and antiquated sense for 'against.' The word 'of 'is used for 'from,' as in 2 Cor. xii. 20; 'without 'for 'bey'nd Par 2 Cor. xii. 20; 'without 'for 'beyond,' in 2 Cor. x. 15; and so with others. Under this head should perhaps be placed the rendering of δοδλον by 'servant,' instead of 'slave,' which originated partly in the fact that 'servants' at the period of the Translation, being of a more servile character, might more properly be taken as the class corresponding to the ancient domestic slaves, partly in the fact that our word 'slave' is comparatively modern, and is only used twice in the Authorised Version—Jer. ii. 14; Rev. xviii. 13.
- (4) Some are not mistranslations so much as retentions of the original Greek (or Latin) words, a practice which increased in the two versions of 1568 and 1611; e.g. 'mysteries' for μυστήρια, instead of 'secrete;' 'heresies' for αἰρθσεις, instead

- of 'sects;' 'charity' for ἀγάπη, from the Vulgate caritas, instead of 'love.'
- (5) Some are occasioned by the uncertainty of the Greek idiom of the New Testament. Of these there are three classes of cases.
- (a) The Greek sorist is usually rendered by a present or perfect. That in some cases it may or must be so rendered, is hardly to be doubted. But its preterite signification is so much the most usual, that I have thought it best, as a general rule, so to represent it in the English. As a remarkable instance may be quoted 1 Cor. vi. 11, 'Ye were washed, ye were sanctified, ye were justified,' instead of 'Ye are washed, ye are sanctified, or are justified.'
- (b) The article is imperfectly given in the Authorised Version. Thus in 1 Cor. i. 22, 'Jouêase and 'Eλλργεs are rendered 'the Jews' and 'the Greeks,' instead of 'Jews' and 'Greeks,' a slight variation, but one which mars the full force of the meaning, 'such characters as Jews,' or 'as Greeks.' In 1 Cor. v. 9, on the other hand, έγραψα ἐν τῷ ἐπαντολῷ, '1 wrote in the [with conveys a sense only compatible with the (erroneous) supposition that there was a lost Ēpistle. At the same time there are cases where the rule can hardly be applied, as in Maxeδόνε, Maxeδόνε in 2 Cor. ix. 2, 4, or in the title of the Epistles Πρὸ Κορμθίου.
- (c) The universal use of the subjunctive in dependent clauses makes it difficult to draw the distinction between 'might' and 'may,' which in classical Greek is effected by the use of the optative in those cases where our idiom requires 'might.' But here, as in the case of the sorist, I have endeavoured to represent the idiom of the New Testament by rendering the subjunctive 'may' as often as possible. Thus in 2 Cor. xii. 8, 856θ, μα. . . Δηγελον Σανακά, ΐνα με κολαφίζη, 'there was given me a messenger of Satan that he may buffet me;'the English idiom would admit and perhaps require 'might;' but the possible force of κολαφίζη can only be shown by retaining 'may.'
- (6) There is a want of due appreciation of the various shades of meaning in words, and a consequent carelessness as to using, if possible, one and the same English word for one and the same Greek word. Beyond a certain point such uniformity and exactness are unattainable. The diversity of the two languages is an insuperable obstacle, and even in the original language the same word is used often in such different senses, as to render the same version impossible. But within reasonable limits the object may be secured; and in a style like the Apostle's, where so much turns on the use of particular words, such precision is of considerable importance. It has therefore been my object to select in each case the English word which, either from its own appropriateness, or from its being the one most generally used, would most easily represent the Greek word wherever it courred; if possible not using the same English word for more than one Greek word, nor translating the same Greek word by more than one English word, or at most two (and two are always sufficient), so as to prevent the rise of any confusion between them.

Thus, for example, it may be impossible to find one English word which will meet every use of παρακαλείν and its derivatives. But (with perhaps one exception, 2 Cor. xi. 8, τὸν κόμουν παρεκάλεσα, where the context compels us to throw into it the sense of 'entreaty') every passage may be rendered either by 'exhort' or 'comfort.' Instead of this, the Authorised Verseon has used, almost indiscriminately, 'comfort,' console', verseon has used, almost indiscriminately for the context,' desire,' exhort: 'e.g. in 2 Cor. i. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, where the force of the passage mainly depends on the recurrence of precisely the same word, and where there is not a shadow of reason for altering it, it is translated six times 'comfort.' and four times' consolation.'

Again, δύναμις may mostly be translated with equal propriety 'power,' or 'strength,' or in some passages the one, in some the other may be more appropriate; and the same may be said of 'infirmity,' or 'weakness,' as a rendering of ἀσθένεια. But vet in 2 Cor. xi. 21-xiii. 4, where the whole continuity of thought depends on the opposition between the two being vividly preserved, and its cognate words are in the Authorised Version, rendered four times 'weakness,' and four times 'infirmity;' and δύναμις, in like manner, twice 'strength,' and three times 'power.' So layupos and Suvaros might with equal propriety be translated 'mighty,' and 'strong;' but for the convenience of 1 Cor. i. 25-28, and 2 Cor. xii. 7-10, I have chosen 'mighty' for Loyupos, and 'strong' for Suparos. έξουσία and its derivatives come more properly under the name of 'right' than any other corresponding English word; but 'power' will perhaps be most suitable to all the places where it occurs. See especially 1 Cor. vi. 12.

λόγος, in all cases but 1 Cor. i. 5, may be translated 'word.'
The advantage may be seen in 1 Cor. i. 17, 18.

κρύμω and its derivatives, which in these Epistles are of frequent and emphatic occurrence, may all be comprehended under 'judge;' with the exception perhaps of διακρίων as in 1 Cor. iv. 7, xi. 29, 32, and συγκρίων as in 1 Cor. ii. 13; 2 Cor. x. 12. See sepecially 1 Cor. ii. 14, 15.

χάριs may be rendered 'grace,' not as the best word, but as the one which most effectually meets all the cases.

the one which most electronly meets and the cases, and the cases, dynage, dyna lowing may also be mentioned:

```
ἀγάπη, 'love.'
βεβαιοῦν, 'to confirm;' κυροῦν, 'to establish.'
```

```
διάκονος 'minister;' δούλος, 'slave; 'υπηρέτης, 'servant.'
```

δοκιμή, 'proof,' and its derivatives, 'approved,' unapproved. διαθήκη, 'covenant.'

icavos, 'sufficient.' See 2 Cor. ii. 16, iii. 6.

 $\theta \lambda(\beta si\nu, \theta \lambda \tilde{r}\psi s$, 'trouble;' $\lambda \tilde{\nu} \pi \eta, \lambda \nu \pi s \tilde{u}\nu$, 'sorrow,' 'to make sorry.'

```
κόσμος, 'world;' αἰών, 'age.'
```

καταργείν, ' to make to vanish away.'

καταρτίζεω, ' to join together.' καυχᾶσθαι, ' to boast.'

λαλῶ, 'I speak;' λέγω and φημί, 'I say,' or 'I tell.'

Λαλω, 'I speak; 'Λεγω and φημώ, 'I say,' or 'I tell.' πέποιθα, 'I have confidence;' θαδρῶ, 'I am bold;' χαίρω, 'I rejoice,' except in 2 Cor. xiii. 11.

τέκυν, 'child;' νήπιος, 'babe;' παιδίον, 'little child;' νίος, 'son.' See 1 Cor. xiv. 20.

The perpetually recurring particle δέ I have rendered by 'but,' and,' and 'now;' reserving the longer forms of 'howbeit,' &c. for ἀλλά.

For the sake of preserving the proper emphasis on 'man' for ἄνθρωπος, I have substituted 'one' in the translations of οὐδείς and τις, wherever they occur.

The agitation respecting the Revision of the Authorised, Version, which has arisen since the first edition of this work, may make it necessary to state explicitly that the translation here given is not put forward as a sample of what would be desirable in a popular and authorised translation of the New Testament. My object, on the contrary, has been to put the English reader as nearly as possible in possession, not merely of the sense, but of the abruptness, the obscurity, the singularity of the style, of the original text: and for this purpose I have felt justified in sacrificing much of the perspicuity and convenience of diction, which no translation designed for general use could venture to abandon.

CONTENTS.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE SECOND EDITION					PAC
ADVERTISEMENT TO THE DECOMP EDITION				•
Preface					v
NOTE ON THE TRANSLATION					x٧
INTRODUCTION TO THE FIRST EPISTLE
Corinth at the period of the Epistles .
Corinth, the capital of Greece
The Corinthian Church the chief exam	ple o	ſа	Genti!	le Church
Outward appearance of Corinth Internal condition of Corinth Greek civilisation
Foreign elements
Arrival of St. Paul
Teaching of St. Paul
Importance of the crisis					1
Effect of his teaching					1
His removal to Ephesus				Ċ	1
Disorders of the Corinthian Church .					1
Tidings of these disorders					1
Situation of St. Paul at the reception of				Ċ	1
Arrival of a letter from the Corinthians				•	ī
The First Epistle				:	î
Scene of the Epistle; Ephesus .				•	î
Time of the Epistle; Spring			-	•	î
Amanuensis	:	:	•	٠	1
Continue of A. Polista				•	1
Effects of the Epistle		•		•	1
Manager and the Episte	•	•		•	1

FIRST EPISTLE.

PLAN OF THE EPISTLE						2
SALUTATION AND INTRODUCTION.	Ch T 1					2
The Apostolical Salutations	Спар. 1. 1—	υ.			•	2
-			· .		•	-
CHARGES AGAINST THE CORINTIIIAN		10	-VI. 2	20.
(I) THE FACTIONS. Chap. L 10			•	•	•	2
(1) Description of the Faction			17			3
The Apostle's View of			٠.		٠	3
(2) Simplicity of the Apost		-	-	. 18-
The Cross of Christ			•		•	3
(3) Contrast of Human and	Diving W	·	Cha	:	6	4
—iii.4	DIVINE W		Cua	p. 11		4
The Apostle's View of	Spiritual W			:	:	5
(4) The Leaders of the Parti						5
The Apostle's View o					d
Taught						7
(II) THE INTERCOURSE WITH HE.	ATHENS.
Chap. IV. 21-VI.						7
(1) The case of Incest. Cha						7
(2) Digression on the Lawsui					٠	8
(3) The case of Incest, resur					٠	8
Apostolic Liberty and	Apostolic Di	sciplin			•	9
Answers of St. Paul to the Let Chap. VII. 1-XIV		ORINTEI	an C	BURCI	ı.
(I) MARRIAGE. Chap. VII. 1-4	10	٠.				91
The Apostle's View of	Celibacy					11
(II) THE SACRIPICIAL FEASTS OF	тне Неатне	N8.
Chap. VIII. 1—XI.	1				. :	12
 General Warning. Chap 						126
Christian Self-denial						134
(2) His own Example of Self						136
The Apostle's View of						165
(3) Apostolical Communion.						164
Evil of the Sacrificial The Apostle's View of						167
denial	A namyo I nuu		oj			75
woulds					•

ONTENTS.	XXV

	PAG
(III) Worship and Assemblies. Chap. XI. 2—XIV. 40.	17
 Disuse of Female Head-dress. Chap. xi. 2—16. The Apostle's View of Social and National Distinctions
(2) Disputes in the Public Assemblies, and especially at the Lord's Supper. Chap. xi. 16—34	. 19
The Apostle's View of the Lord's Supper	. 20
(3) The Spiritual Gifts. Chap. xii. 1—xiv. 40.
(a) Unity and Variety of Spiritual Gifts. Chap. xii.
	21
The Miracles and the Organisation of the Apostolic Age
(b) Love, the greatest of Gifts. Chap. xii. 31-xiii. 13
The Apostolical Doctrine of Love
(c) The Gift of Tongues and the Gift of Prophesying.
	24
The Superiority of Prophesying to Speaking with 25
The Office of the Understanding in Christian
Worship	269
	27
	277
THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD. Chap. XV. 1-58.	28
(1) The Resurrection of Christ. Chap. xv. 1-11	28
The First Creed and the First Evidence of Christianity	294
(2) The Resurrection of the Dead. Chap. xv. 12-34 .	290
The Apostle's Hope of Immortality	311
	314
	325
Conclusion of the Epistle. Chap. XVI. 1—24.	328
SECOND EPISTLE.
Introduction.
	345
	345
	345
b

xxvi contents.

								PAGE
Arrival at Troas .								346
Meeting with Titus at Phili	nni	:		:	:	:		346
								347
Tidings from Corinth . Punishment of the incests	ious	marr	iage					347
Revolt of the Jewish part	tv							347
Contribution for Jerusalem								348
Style of the Epistle								348
Its contents					:			349
								351
Effects of the Second Epistle Later traces of the Judaizer	s in	the '	Clem	entin	ea 1			351
Plan of the Epistle							٠	855
SALUTATION AND INTRODUCTION.	Char	ь Т	111					356
The Apostle's Sympathy .					:	:		360
In aposto o Sympung .		•	•	•	•		•	000
(I) THE TIDINGS BROUGHT BY TIT	rus.	Cha	p. I. 1	2	_VII.	16.
(1) The Apostle's Confider	nce	in t	he Co	rinth	ians.	Cha	p.
i. 12—ii. 11 .						. '	٠.	363
i. 12—ii. 11 . His Relation to the C	hure	ch				:		377
(2) The Arrival of Titus.	Cha	p. ii.	12-	16a				378
The Meeting with Ti
•
Chap. II. 165VI.		f1881	on.
(1) The Plainness and Cles	arnes	s of	the A	nosto	lical S	Servic	A
Chan, ii. 16b_iv.	6			pooro				383
Chap. ii. 16b—iv. The Plainness of the	Απο	stolic	al Se	rvice	:	:	Ì	384
(2) The Difficulties and the
iv. 7—v. 10
His Prospect of Death	h .						٠.	421
(3) The Apostle's Motive
vi. 10 . , .
The Reconciliation of	the	W_{or}	ld bu	Chris	t's De	ath.	٠.	440
			3	0
THE ARRIVAL OF TITUS. Chap. V	I. 1	L—1	3					448
Digression on Intercourse w	ITE	HEAT	HENS.
Chap. VI. 14VII.	1 .							448
_
THE ARRIVAL OF TITUS, RESUMED.	Ch	ap, 1	VII. 2	-16	•			456
The Apostle's Delight in Hun	nan .	Inter	course					461

CONTENTS.	xxvii
-----------	-------

F.A.
(II) THE COLLECTION FOR THE CHURCHES IN JUDÆA.
Chap. VIII. 1——IX. 15
 The Example of the Macedonian Churches. Chap. viii.
1—15
The Poverty of Christ
(2) The Mission of Titus. Chap. viii. 16—24 47
(8) The Spirit in which the Collection is to be made. Chap.
ix. 1—15
(III) THE APOSTLE'S VINDICATION. Chap. X XIII.
(I) THE APOSTLE'S ASSERTION OF HIS INTENTION TO EXERT HIS Apostolical Authority. Chap. X. 1-6 49
(II) HIS BOAST OF HIS CLAIMS. Chap. X. 7-XII. 18 50
(1) Reality of his Boast. Chap. x. 7-18 50
(2) His Excuse for it in his Affection for the Corinthians.
Chap. xi. 1—15
(3) His Excuse for it in his Weakness. Chap. xi. 16-
xii. 10
The Sufferings of the Apostle; the Thorn in the Flesh 54
Explanations, Warnings, and Salutations. Chap. XII. 11——XIII. 13
Chap. Att. 11——Att. 10
THE EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS IN RELATION TO THE GOSPEL HISTORY.
Historical character of the two Epistles
Their relation to the Gospels
(I) Allusions to sayings of Christ
(II) Allusions to the acts of the life of Christ 572
The Nativity — The Ministry and Miracles, 573.
The Passion, 574. 'The Lord's Supper-The Resurrection, 575. The Ascension, 576.
Resemblance to the Gospel according to St. Luke . 576
(III) Allusions to the character of Christ 577
His greatness, 577. His Wisdom — Truth, 580.
Freedom-Toleration, 581. Gentleness-Love-Strength perfected in weakness, 582.

xxviii contents.

(IV) Causes of the Apostle's silence The life and death of Christ					583
teaching	,				584
The spiritual character of all h	is te	aching			585
Effect of the life of Christ or	the	Apostle's	wri	ings
and character				. 58	7-8

APPENDIX.

THE	APOCRY	PHAI	. Epis	TLE	5 OF	THE	C	ORINTE	HANS	TO S	т. Р	AUL,
	AND OF	St.	PAUL	TO	THE	Cori	NTE	HIANS,	PRESE	RVED	IN	THE CHURCH	OF	ARMEN	IA									591

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

CORINTH, at the time of the Christian era, was very different from the city of which we read in the narratives of Corinth at Thucydides and Xenophon. The supremacy which the period of the had been enjoyed at earlier periods of Greek history Epistles. by Argos, Sparta, Athens, and Thebes, in turn, had, in the last stages of that eventful drama, come round to Corinth, often before the ally and rival, but never till the last years of its independent existence the superior, of the other Grecian commonwealths. When the native vigour of the other states of Greece had been broken by the general submission to Alexander and his successors,1 Corinth rose at once to that eminence which the strength of her position as the key of the Peloponnesus, and the convenience of her central situation for purposes of communication and commerce, would naturally have secured to her, Accordingly, the last glory of the Martinmas summer of Greece, in the days of the Achgan League, was shed almost exclusively on Corinth.2 Here the nominal independence of the Greek nation was proclaimed by Flamininus. Here also descended the final blow by which that show of freedom was destroyed by Mummius. The greatness of the closing history of Corinth

¹ An excellent description of the state of Corinth at this period is to be found in Leake's Morea, vol. iii. c. 28. Compare also the quotations from classical authors in Wetstein's Notes on 1 Cor. i. 1; the Life and Epistles of St. Paul, by the Rev. W. J. Conybeare and the Rev. J. S.

Howson, vol. i. ch. 12; and the article 'Corinthus' in Dr. Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Geography. ² Corinthus totius Græciæ lumen.' — Cic. pro Leg. Man. 5. 'Achaise caput, Græciæ decus.'— Florus; ii.

is best attested by the greatness of its fall. The triumph of Capitoline Jove had ever witnessed. As a storebouse of Grecian total act and civilisation, it seems to have been held equal to Athens itself. For months and years it became the quarry from which the Roman nobles adorned their villas with marbles, paintings, and statues. The mass of gold, silver, and bronze, melted down in the general conflagration, was so great that the rich material formed from it was currently known in the empire under the name of 'Corinthian brass.' A still stronger proof of the innortance of the city was furnished by the precautions which the conquerors took against its again becoming the centre of that autional life of which it had been the last home. The inhabitants were entirely disarmed, and, for a hundred years, it was literally a city of ruins.

The recollection of its greatness in the last days of Greece, as well as the naforal advantages of its situation, caused Julius Cesar to select it as the site of a Roman settlement, which he established under the title of "Colonia Julia Corinthus," or 'Laus Juli Corinthus," in the same year (n. c. 46) in which, in pursuance of his usual policy, he founded a similar colony at Carthage. This 'New Corinth' accordingly be-Corinth, the came, like its predecessor, but by a more direct and original of formal acknowledgement, the capital of the whole of Greece, known by the name of "Achasa," in other words,—inasmuch as this southern division comprehended the whole country south of Thessalv, and as the northern division of Greece, known by the name of Actures; in other works, inasmuch as this southern division comprehended the whole country south of Thessaly, and as the northern division of 'Macedonia' had never inabibed thoroughly the spirit of Grecian culture,—the capital of Greece itself.

This peculiarity in the political position of Corinth, which naturally drew the steps of the Apostle to its walls, lends a special interest to the two Epistles addressed to its inhabitants. When labouring there, he was labouring not merely for Corinth, but for the great people of which it was now the representative; the Epistles which he wrote to the Christians of Corinth were in fact—as is implied in the opening ' of the second—Epistles to the whole Greek nation: they included within their range not merely Corinth the capital, but Athens the university, of Greece; and apoke not only to those who had listened to him in the house of Justus and Gaius or the synagogue of Crispus. but to those who had heard him beneath the shade of the Acropolis or on the rock-hewn seats of the Areonagus. Most of the Churches to which his Epistles were written, although nominally Gentile, were communities in which the Jewish element was predominant, or exposed to influences which rendered his notice of it predominant. The First Epistle to Corinth, alone of the larger Epistles, addresses itself to rinthian a Church where the Gentile element is stronger than Church, the the Jewish; or, at least, where Christianity is expressly exhibited in its relation to the feelings, customs, and a Gentile difficulties, not of Jewish, but of Gentile Christians. Church.

¹ 2 Cor. i. 1: 'The church of the saints which are in all Achaia,' God which is at Corinth, with all

The importance with which these Epistles are thus invested is evident. Greece, indeed, was now a subject-province without life or energy of its own; Grecian religion and philosophy were very different from what they had been in the days of Pericles; the illustrations of these Epistles have to be sought, not from Plato, but from Plutarch; not from Sophocles, but from Menander; not from the unadulterated purity of Athenian taste and knowledge, but from the mixed populations and mixed belief of a degenerate race, bound together under the sway of the pro-consul Gallio, Still, with every drawback, we are here allowed to witness the earliest conflict of Christianity with the culture and the vices of the ancient classical world; here we have an insight into the principles 1 which regulated the Apostle's choice or rejection of the customs of that vast fabric of heathen society which was then emphatically called 'the world;' here we trace the mode in which he combated the false pride, the false knowledge, the false liberality, the false freedom, the false display, the false philosophy to which an intellectual age, especially in a declining nation, is constantly liable; here, more than anywhere else in his writings, his allusions and illustrations are borrowed not merely from Jewish customs and feelings, but from the literature, the amusements, the education, the worship, of Greece and of Rome.3 It is the Apostle of the Gentiles, as it were, in his own peculiar sphere, in the midst of questions

¹ See 1 Cor. v. 1-10; vi. 1, 10, 12; vii. 12-24; viii. 1-13; ix. 21, 22; x. 20, 21; xi. 2-16. The grounds of these allusions, and of all which follow, will be explained in the notes on the Epistles.

² See i. 17; iii. 4, 18-23; iv. 7-13; vi. 4, 12-20; viii. 1-7; x. 1-15, 23-38; xii.; xiv.; xv. 35-41. 3 See iii. 1, 2, 13; iv. 9, 13; ix. 24-27; xi. 14; xii. 12-20; xv. 31, 33; 2 Cor. ii. 14-16; v. 10.

evoked by his own peculiar mission, watching over churches of his own creation; 'if not an Apostle to others, doubtless to them,' 'n ot pulling down, but building up, feeling that on the success of his work then, the whole success and value of his past and future work depended. 'The seal of his Apostleship were they in the Lord.'?

From this general character of the Church of Corinth, we may now descend into the minuter details, which illusappearance trate more particularly the circumstances under which of Corinth. the First Epistle was written. The outward aspect which the city of Corinth presented at the time of St. Paul is well known. From the summit of the Acrocorinthus, or huge rocky hill at the foot of which the town was situated, the eye takes in at a glance, what is slowly conveyed by books, the secret of its importance, as in classical, so also in sacred history. To the right and to the left extend the winding shores of the 'double sea,' whose blue waters, threading their way through islands and promontories innumerable, open to east and west the communication which made it once and again the natural resting-place in the Apostle's journeys. From that little bay at Cenchreæ he was to take his departure for Ephesus and Jerusalem; up the course of that western gulf lay the direct route to Rome and to the far West, which even now he hoped to follow, and along which, at his second visit, he sent his Epistle to the Romans. In front lie the hills of northern Greece; and on the coast of Attica, discerned by the glitter of its crown of temples, the Acropolis of Athens, the last scene of St. Paul's preaching before he crossed the Saronic gulf. Behind rise the mountains of Peloponnesus, the highlands of Greece; into their remote fastnesses there was no call for the Apostle to enter; and accordingly, in the city which guards their entrance, we see, in all probability, the southernmost point of his future travels. What was the appearance of the city itself we know to a certain extent from the detailed description of it by Pausanias one hundred years later. At present one Doric temple alone remains of all the splendid edifices then standing; but the immediate vicinity presents various features to which the Apostle's allusions have given an immortal interest. The level plain, and the broken gullies of the isthmus, are still clothed with the low pine, which can still be identified by its modern name (πευκή), from whose branches of emerald green were woven the garlands for the Isthmian games, contrasted by the Apostle 2 with the unfading crown of the Christian combatant. In its eastern declivities are to be seen the vestiges of that 'stadium,' in which all ran with such energy as to be taken as the example of Christian selfdenial and exertion. On the outskirts of the city may be traced the vast area of the amphitheatre,4 which conveyed to the Corinthians a lively image of the Apostle's 'fighting with beasts,'s or of his 'being set forth as the last in the file of combatants appointed unto death,' a 'spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men.' 6 Around stood the temples resting on their columns-columns of the 'Corinthian order' which made the name of 'Corinthian buildings' (Ephyrææ ædes) proverbial for magnificence; and which standing as they did in their ancient glory amidst the new streets erected by Cæsar on the ruins left by Mummius, may well have suggested the comparison of the 'gold, silver, and precious "marbles," surviving the conflagration in which all meaner edifices of wood and thatch had perished.7

It is not so easy to imagine the internal as the external aspect of the city. That it was again a flourishing Internal town is clear. The commerce which had been sus- condition of pended during its century of desolation, had now had Corinth. nearly another century to recover itself; and the attempt of Nero to dig a canal through the isthmus, very nearly about the time of the Epistle, shows the importance attached to it as an emporium between the East and West. The Isthmian Greek civigames, too, which even during the time of its desertion lisation. had still been celebrated under the charge of the neighbouring state of Sicvon, attracted many strangers to the spot every alternate year, and were afterwards continued even down to

¹ See Sibthorpe's Flora Greeca. vol. x. p. 39, pl. 949. 2 1 Cor. ix. 25.

³ I Cor. ix. 24, 'race.' Leake's Mores, iii. 286.

^{4 1} Cor. iv. 9. The remains of the theatre are close to the stadium. (Leake's Morea, iii. 286.) Those of the amphitheatre are nearer to the forum. (Ib. 244.) Its area is 290 feet by 190, i.e. considerably larger than that of Verona. At one end are the remains of a subterraneous entrance for wild beasts or gladiators. As Pausanias does not mention it, it may be later than the time of the Apostle. 5 1 Cor. xv. 32.

^{6 1} Cor. iv. 9.

^{7 1} Cor. iii. 12. See Paus. Cor.

i. 3; ii. 7. Heydenreich, Prolegom. in Ep. I. ad Cor. p. vii.

the time of Julian.1 Though less remarkable for its wealth than in its earlier days, it must have been conspicuous, as is implied in various passages in these Epistles,2 amongst the poverty-stricken towns of the rest of Greece.3 With the confluence of strangers and of commerce, were associated the luxury and licentiousness which gave the name of Corinth an infamous notoriety,4 and which, connected as they were in the case of the Temple of Aphrodite with religious rites, sufficiently explain the denunciations of sensuality to which the Apostle gives utterance in these Epistles 5 more frequently and elaborately than elsewhere. On the other hand, it was celebrated for maintaining the character of a highly polished and literary society, such as (even without taking into account its connexion with Greek civilisation generally) furnishes a natural basis for much both of the praise and blame with which the First Epistle abounds, in regard to intellectual gifts.6 'At Corinth, you would learn and hear even from inanimate objects' -- so said a Greck teacher within a century from this time-'so great are the treasures of literature in every direction, wherever you do but glance, both in the streets themselves and in the colonnades; not to speak of the gymnasia and schools, and the general spirit of instruction and inquiry."7

Thus far it was merely the type of a Greek commercial city, such as might have existed in the earlier ages Foreign of Grecian history. But the elements of which its population was composed were, in great part, such as Periander would have been startled to find under the shadow of his ancient citadel. The Greek language here, as elsewhere in Greece and in the East generally, was, except on coins and in legal documents, the general medium of communication. But to many of the Corinthians, as to the Apostle himself, it was

¹ Paus. Cor. 2. Libenius, D. xxv. 2 1 Cor. iv. 8; xvi. 2; 2 Cor. viii. 2, 10; ix. 2, 5-11.

³ Lucian introduces Merichus as τον πλούσιον, τον πάνυ πλούσιον, τον έκ Κορίνθου, τον πολλάς όλκάδας Ιχοντα, οὐ ἀνεψιός 'Αριστίας, πλούσιος καὶ αὐτός ὧν.—Dial. Mort. κὶ. 1. See also the passages from Aristides and Alciphron, quoted by Wetstein on 1 Cor. i. 2.

⁴ In the words Κορινθιάζισθαι, Κορινθία κόρα, &c. It is needless to refer more particularly to the numerous passages quoted at length in Wetstein on I Cor. i. 2, from Aristophanes, Plato, Cicero, Strabo, Dion Chrysostomus, Athenœus, Lucian, and Eustathius.

^{5 1} Cor. v. 1; vi. 9-20; x. 7, 8;

² Cor. vi. 14-vii. 1. * 1 Cor. i. 22-ii. 16; i. 4, 5; iv. 7, 8; viii. 1; x. 15; xiii. 1-9; xv. 35. 7 Aristides in Neptun. p. 23, in

Wetstein on 1 Cor. i. 2.

doubtless an acquired tongue. The new inhabitants, to the Romans at least, were known by a new name, to distinguish them from the old Greek inhabitants; not 'Corinthii,' but 'Corinthienses,' 1 The settlement of Cæsar consisted not of native Greeks, but of foreigners; 2 some, doubtless, were Italians, descendants of the first colonists from Cæsar's army.3 But most even of the original settlers were freedmen; 4 and with this agrees the fact that the Corinthian names which occur in the New Testament 5 are mostly such as indicate a servile origin. It is also probable that the much closer intercourse between Greece and the East, which had been brought about by the conquests of Alexander, would make itself especially felt in a commercial city like Corinth. The Orontes (to use the expression of Juvenal) could certainly have mixed its waters with those of Pirene before it was finally blended with the Tiber. And at this moment there was a reflux of the Jewish population from Rome back towards the East, in consequence of the decree of exile lately published by the Emperor Claudius.6 A Jewish synagogue existed with its rulers; and it is evident that the Apostle's converts were familiar with the phraseology of the Old Testament. Even of those who appear as bearing distinctly Greek or Roman names-Erastus, Sosthenes, Crispus, and Justus-two at least were Jews, and one a proselyte. Situated as it was, half-way between Rome and Ephesus, men of all nations seem to have been constantly passing and repassing to one and the other through Corinth. Aquila of Pontus, with his wife Priscilla, are heard of now at Rome,7 now at Corinth,8 now at Ephesus,9 Physbe of Conchreæ goes without difficulty from Corinth to Rome.10 Fortu-

¹ Festus: 4 Corinthienses ex eo dici cœperunt, ex quo coloni Corinthum sunt deducti, qui antea Coristhii sunt dicti.' This was after the analogy of Hispanienses and Hispani, Sicilienses and Siculi. In Greek the distinction was not made, else the Epistles would have been addressed πρός Κορινθιές. There is not the least reason to infer from this, or from any other of the facts here mentioned, that Latin was habitually spoken at Corinth; and the whole structure of the Epistles repels such an hypothesis.

² Paus. Cor. 2 : Κόρινθον οἰκοῦσιν οίδεις των άρχαιων - Εποικοι δε άπο-

σταλίντις ύπὸ 'Ρωμαίων.

³ to orpariwritor. - Plut. Casar.

⁴ Strabo, viii. 520 A.: πολθν δί χρόνον έρημος μείνασα ή Κόρινθος άνελήρθη πάλιν έπο Καίσαρος τοῦ θιοῦ διὰ τήν εὐφεΐαν ἐποίκους πέμψαντος τοῦ ἀπελευθερικοῦ γένοις πλείστους. Η visited Corinth just after the settlement.

^{5 1} Cor. i. 14, 16; xvi. 17; Rom. xvi. 21-23; Acts xviii, 8, 17, a Acts xviii. 2.

⁷ Rom. xvi. 3, 4

⁸ Acts xviii. 1, 2.

^{9 1} Cor. xvi. 19.

¹⁰ Rom, xvi. 1.

natus, Achaicus, and Stephanas went from Corinth to visit the Apostle at Enhesus.

Such was the city of Corinth at the time when the Apostle Arrival of entered its walls. From the wealthy and luxurious inhabitants themselves that visit could have attracted but little attention. A solitary Eastern traveller (for St. Paul was alone 3 when he arrived) would be lost at once in the constant ebb and flow of strangers crossing each other at the Isthmus. But by the Apostle his arrival must have been regarded as of supreme importance. It was the climax, so to speak, of the second, and in some respects the greatest, of his journeys. On his previous voyage he had been accompanied by Barnabas and Mark, both closely connected with the parent Church at Jerusalem, and Barnabas possessed of an authority, outwardly at least, hardly inferior to his own. Now, for the first time, he had left Antioch completely independent; Silas and Timotheus were subordinate to him, not he in any sense to them; the world was all before him where to choose, and he was evidently determined to press on as far as the horizon of his hopes extended. These hopes were, indeed, even then confined to Asia Minor; but, when thrice overruled by preternatural intimations, 3 he at last took the resolution-memorable for all time-of crossing over into Europe. It would seem as if, from the first, he had resolved to reach Corinth. The whole tone of the narrative is that of an onward march; and, although his departure from most of the Macedonian cities was hastened by the violence of the Jewish residents, it is obvious that he was proceeding gradually southward; and when he arrived at Athens, he paused there, not as a final resting-place, but merely to wait for Silas and Timotheus , and at last, impatient of the delay 5, took his departure and arrived at Corinth. Here was the capital of Achaia, and beyond this, so far as we know, he never advanced. Here, not for a short period of three weeks (as mostly heretofore), but for a time, hitherto unparalleled in his journeys, of a year and a half, he found his first Gentile home.

In Corinth, as elsewhere, he first turned to his own countrymen. The house of Aquila and Priscilla, always open to strangers,6 provided him with an abode;7 and there, in company with them, according to the rule which he had already adopted

^{1 1} Cor. xvi. 17. * 1 Thess. iii. 1.

Acts xvi. 6, 7, 10. Acts xvii. 15, 16.

^{5 1} Thess. iii. 1.

^{4 1} Cor. xvi. 19; Rom. xvi. 5. 7 Acts xviii. 2, 3,

in Macedonia,1 he maintained himself by manual labour in the trade of tent-making, which he had learned in his childhood in his native city; and his frequent allusions to it imply that his appearance at Corinth in this capacity left a deep and lasting impression. For some weeks he taught in the syn- Teaching of agogue, apparently as a Jew; warned, perhaps, by his St. Paul. experience in the northern cities, of the danger of exciting an onposition from the Jews before he had established a firm footing. But, on the arrival of his two companions from Macedonia, probably with the tidings of the zeal of the Thessalonian Christians, which incited him to write to them his two earliest Epistles-he could no longer restrain himself, 'he was pressed in the spirit,' and 'testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Messiah.'2 Instantly the same hostile demonstrations, the same burst of invective,3 which he had encountered at Thessalonica and Berœa, broke out in Corinth also. But he was now determined to stand his ground; and, instead of giving way to the storm and leaving the place, he fulfilled the precept of the Gospel,4 partly in the letter, partly in the spirit; he stood up in the synagogue, and, in the face of his indignant countrymen, shook out from his robes the dust, not of the city, where he determined now more than ever to remain, but of the synagogue, which he was determined now finally to abandon, and, leaving the responsibility on themselves, declared his intention of 'going henceforth to the Gentiles.' He had not far 'to go,' Hard by the synagogue itself was the house of a proselyte, Justus, which he turned immediately, so to speak, into a rival synagogue. His congregation consisted partly of the Jews who were struck by his teaching, amongst whom was to be reckoned Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, whom he baptized with his own hands.6 But it included the increasing number of Gentile converts, amongst whom the household of Stephanas were the earliest. In the midst of this mixed audience he 'sat,' 7 after the manner of the Rabbis, and taught with unabated fervour 'the Cross of Christ.'s The only further interruption which he sustained from the hostility of his countrymen, was the tumult, headed by Sosthenes, the successor of Crispus: but this was baffled by the imperturbable indifference of the proconsul Gallio, who, in accordance with the πορεύσομαι. Acts xviii, 6.
 1 Cor. i. 14.

^{1 1} Thess. ii. 9. 2 Acts xviii. 5.

³ αντιτοσσομίνων, βλασφημούντων.

⁴ Matt. x. 14

Acts xviii. 6.

ἐκάθισε. Acts xviii. 11.
 1 Cor. ii. 2.

principles of the Roman law, as well as with the philosophical calmness of his own disposition, positively refused to hear a case which appeared to him not to fall within his jurisdiction.

How critical this epoch was considered in the Apostle's Importance life, is evident from the mention of the vision which appeared to him on the night of his expulsion from crisis. the synagogue, in which the Lord exhorted him to lay aside all fear, and to speak boldly. The promise to the original Apostles, 'I am with you,' was distinctly addressed to him, combined with the declaration that the reward of his labour would be great-' for I have much people in this city.' 2 The language used in the vision implies both the anxiety under which he laboured, and the importance of his not giving way to it; as though he felt that he was now entering on a new and untried sphere, and needed special support to sustain him through it.

That the result justified the experiment is known to us from Effect of his the First Epistle. To a degenerate state of society, such as that which existed in the capital of Greece at that time; to a worn-out creed, which consisted rather in a superstitious apprehension 3 of unseen powers than in any firm belief of an over-ruling Providence; to a worn-out philosophy which had sunk from the sublime aspirations of Plato and the practical wisdom of Aristotle into the subtleties of the later Stoics or Enicureans: to a worn-out national character, in which little but the worst parts of the Greek mind survived,the appearance of a man thoroughly convinced of the truth of his belief, dwelling not on rhetorical systems, but on simple facts, and with a sagacity and penetration which even the most worldly-minded could not gainsay, must have been as life from the dead. There were some converts 4 doubtless from the wealthier citizens; but the chief impression was produced on the lower orders of society: 'not many mighty, not many noble, not many wise,' but slaves and artisans formed the class from which the Christian society at Corinth was mainly drawn.

¹ See the description of his character in the quotations in Wetstein on Acts xviii. 12. Acta xviii, 10.

³ See the sketch of Paganism, in the first chapter of Neander's His-tory of the Christian Church.

So Erastue the tressurer of the city, οἰκονόμος τῆς πύλεως (Rom. xvi. and Crispus, the president of the Jewish synagogue (Acts xviii. 8; 1 Cor. i. 14), are mentioned by name. Compare 1 Cor. xi. 22: vii.

^{30, 31;} and xvi. 2; 2 Cor. ix. 7, 10.

Through all these converts ran the same electric shock; they became a distinct body, separate from their countrymen and neighbours, and in their own persons they exhibited the most remarkable outward proof of the reality of their convenion; not, indeed, by their altered lives, for in this respect they were often greatly deficient, but by the sudden display of gifts of all kinds, such as they had either not possessed before or possessed only in a much lower degree. To the Apostle himself they looked with a veneration which must have been long unknown to any Grecian heart. No other Christian teacher had as yet interfered with his paramount claim over them; he was 'their father;' I and by his precepts' they endeavoured to regulate the whole course of their lives.

It was after eighteen months' residence amongst such followers that the Apostle took his departure from the Hisromoral port of Cenchrese for Ephesus. This great city now to Ephesus. became his home even more than Corinth had been before. Thither he returned, after a short interval spent in Judæa,3 and followed nearly the same plan as that which he had adopted at Corinth; first trying to establish his footing in the synagogue, and then erecting a separate school or synagogue in the house of one of his converts. Thus passed away three years from the time of his departure from Corinth. Towards the end of this period he received accounts which greatly agitated him. The Corinthian Church, like almost all the early Christian societies, combined two distinct elements: first, that consisting of Jews or of proselytes, formed from the class which the Apostle had originally addressed, and therefore exercising considerable influence over the whole body of which it was the nucleus; secondly, the mass of Gentile converts which sprang up during the latter stages of the Apostle's preaching, and which at Corinth, from the peculiar circumstances of the case, must have much outnumbered the others.4 While St. Paul Disorders remained at Corinth, the jealousy between these two of the Cosections of the Church had lain dormant; but when Church he was removed, their animosities, encouraged no doubt by the factious spirit so inveterate in the Greek race, burst forth; and the Christian community was divided into various parties, formed by the various crossings of these two main divisions. The Gentile party was in the ascendant, both from

^{1 1} Cor. iv. 14, 15; 2 Cor. xi. 2.
2 παραδόσεις. 1 Cor. xi. 1.

Acts xx. 31.
 See 1 Cor. xii. 2.

their superior numbers, and also from the as yet undiminished influence of the Apostle. But, whether from the visit of Peter and 'the brethren of the Lord,' or teachers preaching in their name, or from some unknown cause, the Jewish party,2 after St. Paul's departure, gained sufficient ground to call themselves by a distinct name, and to impugn his authority, first covertly,3 and then a few months later, openly and vehemently.4 In the interval between his first and second visit to Ephesus, the Corinthian Church had also received the instructions of the great Alexandrian teacher Apollos, who had been sent thither by Aquila and Priscilla : and his name thus had become a rallying point for one section of the Church, -probably that which hung half-way between the extreme Jewish and the extreme Gentile party. Apollos himself had left Corinth, and returned to Ephesus; but his partisans still continued to foment the factions. To the evils of this party spirit was added the tendency of the Gentile faction to carry their views of freedom to the extreme of license. The profiigacy which disgraced the heathen population of Corinth was not only practised, but openly avowed, by some of the advocates of Christian liberty.6 The disputes were carried to such a pitch, and the boundaries between the heathen and Christian parts of the community were so little regarded, that lawsuits between Christians were brought into the Roman and Greek courts of iustice.7 The sacrificial feasts were attended without scruple, even when held in the colonnades of the temples.8 The Christian women threw off the head-dress which the customs of Greece and of the East required: 9 the most solemn ordinance of Christian brotherhood was turned into the careless festivity of a Grecian banquet.10 And even the better points of their character, which had formed the basis of the Apostle's commendations and of their own advance in Christian knowledge and power, had been pushed to excess. The strong taste for intellectual speculation, which three centuries of political servitude had not been able to subdue in the Greek mind, led them to attach an undue importance to those points in their teachers, or

^{1 1} Cor. ix. 5. ² The more detailed representation of this party is reserved for the notes on 1 Cor. i. 10, and the Introduction to the Second Epistle.

³ 1 Cor. ix. 1-5. 4 2 Cor. x .- xii.

⁵ 1 Cor. xvi. 12. 6 v. 1; vi. 10. viii. 4-13; x. 14-33.
 xi. 2-16.

⁷ vi. 1-8. 10 xi. 17-34.

in Christianity itself, which most nearly resembled the rhetorical display or the logical subtleties in which the sophists and rhetoricians of later Greece indulged: hence apparently the slight put by some on the simplicity of the preaching of Paul; hence the exaltation of purely intellectual excellences, and (as in the case of the Crucifixion of Christ, and the general Resurrection) the exaggeration of purely intellectual difficulties;2 hence, in some instances, an adoption of the extreme view of some of the old philosophers, regarding an entire separation from the world as necessary; 3 hence an over-estimate of those preternatural gifts which tended to astonish and excite, and an unjust depreciation of those which tended only to instruction and to improvement.4 These views, combined with an overweening consciousness of the position which the Corinthian congregation held in the Christian world as the most highly favoured of all the Gentile churches, not only induced them to look down with contempt on all other Christian bodies,5 but also soured in the hearts of individuals the milk of human kindness. and extinguished the light of Christian love, which ought to have been the characteristic mark of every Christian society.6 With these dangers, which, as proceeding chiefly from the Gentile element in Corinth, affected the larger part of the community, were united others from the opposite quarter. The Jewish part of the Church was not likely to amalgamate easily with such excessive views of liberty as were nonular at Corinth; and, although at present they were not sufficiently powerful to make their influence generally felt, yet their exaggerated scruples, on the subject of sacrificial feasts 7 and of mixed marriages, increased the difficulties of the Gentile believers; and there were, besides, mutterings of discontent and suspicion against the Apostle, which already foreboded the storm that was to break out a few months later against his character and authority.9

It is not to be supposed that St. Paul was unprepared for such intelligence. The constant communication be- Tidings of tween Corinth and Ephesus must have brought him these discontinual information of the state of the Corinthian orders. Church; and he had sent Timotheus, his favourite pupil, to

xiv. 36.

² i. 17, 18; ii. 1; viii. 1; xv. 35. 6 vi. 1; viii. 1; xii. 1; xvi. 14. 3 vii. 1-5.

⁷ viii. 1-12. 4 xii. 1-xiv. 40. 8 vii. 12-16.

⁵ i. 2; iv. 7, 8; vii. 17; xi. 16; 9 ix. 1-8.

recall to them the image of his teaching and life, which he knew from report was in danger of losing its hold upon their recollections; and probably also (though this is not expressly stated) to communicate to them the intention which he had then formed, of leaving Ephesus at the beginning of the spring, crossing the Ægean Sea to Greece, and paying two visits to Corinth,-one immediately on his landing, and a second later on in the year, after seeing the Churches in Macedonia. Timotheus1 was accompanied by Erastus,2 in all probability the same as the treasurer of Corinth, who would thus be in a nosition to recommend him to the Corinthian congregation. But.3 after the departure of these two men, the rumours became still darker; and two points in particular seem to have determined the Apostle to take some strong measures to check the growing evil. One was the information which he received from the household of Chloe-whether resident at Corinth or at Ephesus it is difficult to say, -that the factions had reached a formidable height.4 and that their disputes had descended even into social life and destroyed the solemnity of Christian worship.5 The other, and more alarming, was the fact of an incestuous marriage, scandalous even to the heathen, of a man with his father's wife.6 This, combined with the general accounts of their state, was sufficient to induce the Apostle to send at once to Corinth without waiting for the announcement of the arrival of Timotheus, to insist upon the expulsion of the offender from the Christian community,7 and then to delay his own visit to Corinth till after his visit to Macedonia, so as to leave time for his injunctions and his warnings to have their proper effect.8 The circumstances of the Apostle himself at this conjunc-

Situation of ture were such as to render the reception of this news St. Paul at peculiarly trying. Whilst the Corinthian Christians the recep-tion of these had been thus indulging their own speculations and passions, and absorbed in the contemplation of their own greatness and dignity, he had for three years been continuing his labours in a city hardly less important than Corinth itself,-the capital of Asia Minor, as Corinth was of Greece,

¹ iv. 17; Acts xix. 22. ² Acts xix. 22; Rom. xvi. 23; 2 Tim. iv. 20.

³ It is assumed throughout these pages that there were no visits of St. Paul to Corinth besides those mentioned in Acts xviii, 1: xx. 2: and no Epistles except the two now ex-tant in the New Testament. The grounds for this assumption will appear in the notes on 2 Cor. ii. 1; 1 Cor. v. 9.

^{4 1} Cor. i. 10-iv. 21.

⁵ xi. 18.

⁶ v. 1.

⁸ xvi. 1, 6, 7; 2 Cor. i. 15; ii. 0.

In Enhesus he had supported himself, as in Greece, with his own hands,1 and devoted himself, with all the fervour of his impassioned character, and at the risk of his life,2 to the superintendence of the Church.3 His labours, too, had extended from Ephesus to the cities in the adjacent district; and probably in some of these journeys he underwent those hardships of which he speaks as recent, 'perils from the robbers' in the neighbouring mountains, who afterwards seized on a later Apostle in the same vicinity; 4 ' perils from the "rivertorrents,"' which so characterise the winter-travels of all those regions.5

It may therefore easily be conceived that the Apostle would seize the first opportunity for the expression of his Arrivalof a own wounded feelings, and of his sense of the sin of letter from the Corinhis converts. Such an opportunity presented itself thians in the arrival at Ephesus of three trustworthy members of the Corinthian Church-Fortunatus, Achaicus, and Stephanas,6 bearing an epistle from that portion of their body (at this time by far the largest) which sincerely reverenced the Apostle's authority, asking for a solution of various questions which their internal disputes had suggested, on the subject of marriage, of the sacrificial feasts, and of spiritual gifts,7 and containing also assurances of their general adherence to his precepts.6 A reply to these questions required a detailed letter from himself; and this at once afforded an occasion for the outpouring of his thoughts and feelings. The combination of these circumstances rendered it the most important emergency in which (so far as we know) he had ever been called, up to this time. to express himself in writing. Whether the Epistle The First to the Galatians was composed before or after this Eristle. period, it is impossible to determine. But great as were the principles involved in that controversy, the situation of the Churches in Galatia-in secluded villages in the heart of Asia Minor-bore no comparison with the situation of a congregation placed before the eyes of the whole civilised world in the capital of Greece. That congregation, in which the Apostle had laboured with unusual exertions, and apparently with unusual success, was torn by factions, and marred by extravagances, which would bring disgrace on the Christian name, and

```
Acta xx. 34.
Tb. 31.
                                                             <sup>5</sup> 2 Cor. xi. 26, 27.
<sup>3</sup> 1 Cor. xv. 30-32,
```

⁴ Euseb. H. E. iii, 23.

^{6 1} Cor. xvi. 17.

⁷ vii. 1; viii. 1; xii. 1.

break up the foundations of Christian society. The feelings of St. Francis, in foreboding the corruptions of his Order; of Luther, on hearing of the insurrection of the peasants of Suabia, or the enormities of the Anabaptists of Munster,afford a faint image of the Apostle's position in dealing with the first great moral degeneracy of the Gentile Churches. But if the importance of the crisis demanded the utmost energy, so also it demanded the utmost wisdom. Of all the Epistles, nerhans there is not one so systematically arranged, or in which the successive steps of the Apostle's mind are so clearly marked, as this; and we can therefore unfold, with more than usual confidence, the process of its composition.

The Apostle was at Ephesus. It is perhaps too much to presume that any traces of the scenes from which he wrote are discernible in his Epistle; nor are the Ephesus. features of that city so marked as those of Corinth. Yet the remains of the stadium, and of the theatre, still visible in the grassy sides of Mount Prion, may have suggested or confirmed the allusions already mentioned to the athletic and dramatic spectacles of Greece. And the magnificent pile of the Temple of Artemis, which overhung the harbour, must have presented to him, even in a more lively form than his recollections of Athens and Corinth, the splendour and the emptiness of the Pagan worship of that age.

The Epistle was sent from Ephesus, or from some spot in the neighbourhood of Ephesus, at the close of the three the Epistle; years spent there by the Apostle,2 but whether before or after the tumult of Demetrius is uncertain. It must have been written in the spring, as Pentecost is spoken of 3 as not far distant; and, if so, the allusions it contains to the Jewish passover 4 become more appropriate. The precise date after the Christian era can only be fixed by a general determination of the chronology of the Acts. For practical purposes it is, however, sufficient to say that it must have been twenty or thirty years after his conversion, and in the early part of the reign of Nero.

It was written, with the exception of the few last lines, not Amanuen. by the Apostle's own hand, but by an amanuensis; 5 not in his own name alone, but in that of Sosthenes also,-whether the successor of Crispus, as president of the

^{1 1} Cor. xvi. 5, 8, 19 (ep. Acta 3 1 Cor. xvi. 8 xviii. 24, 26); xv. 32. 2 Acts xix. 10; xx. 1, 31.

⁴ v. 7, 8; xv. 20. * xvi. 21.

Corinthian synagogue, or another of the same name, cannot be determined. This, then, is the group which we must conceive as present, if not throughout, at least at the opening of the Epistle. There is Yaul himself, now about sixty years of age, and bearing in the pallor and feebleness of his frame, traces of his constant and recent hardships; his eyes at times streaming with tears of grief and indignation; 't when settle, catching the words from his lips and recording them on the scroll of parchement or papyrrss' which lay before him. Possibly Sosthness was himself the scribe; and, if so, we may conceive him not only transcribing, but also bearing his part in the Epistle; at times with signs of acquiescence and approbation, at times, it may be, interposing to remind the Apostle of some forgotten fact, as of the baptism of the household of Stephanas, or of some possible misapprehension of what he had dictated.

He opens his Epistle with that union of courtesy and sagacity which forms so characteristic a feature in all Content of his addresses, and at once gives utterance to expressions of strong thankfulness and hope, excited by all that was really encouraging in the rapid progress of the Corinthian Church.⁶

The preface is immediately succeeded by the statement of his complaints against them. First, he touches the most obvious evil—that of the Factions, which he pursues through the several digressions to which it gives occasion. Then, after a short explanation of the motives of his Epistle, of the mission of Timotheus, and of his delay in coming to Corinth, 'he proceeds to the case of the Incostnous Marriage,' which forms the chief practical occasion of his address, and is accompanied by the solemn and earliest extant form of the expulsion of an offender from the Christian society.'1 This subject, like that of the Factions, is followed out through the various thoughts near or remote which it suggests; in part, perhaps, in a note or appendix subsequently added.¹²

Having thus dismissed the immediate grounds for censure, he proceeds to answer in detail the questions contained in their letter.¹³ This letter we may conceive him to have unrolled

```
1 Acts xriii. 17.
2 Gal. vi. 17; 2 Cor. xi. 27; iv. 10.
2 Cor. ii. 4.
3 Vor. ii. 4.
4 See 2 John 12; 2 Tim iv. 13.
3 iv. 14-21.
3 Vi. 1-20.
3 vii. 1-xiv. 40.
3 vii. 1-xiv. 40.
```

before him, in order to glance at each of their difficulties, as he turns to their objections, sometimes quoting their very words, sometimes re-stating them in his own language.1 Of these, the first relates to the subject of Marriage;2 and there he is careful to point out that his advice rests solely on his own authority, not, as usually, on the express command of Christ. The second relates to the subject of the Sacrificial Feasts;2 in discussing which his mind is for a moment drawn aside from the immediate object of the Epistle by the recollection of that darker enemy which, in the now increasing Jewish faction, aimed its insinuations at his character and authority.4 The third point in the letter of the Corinthians was a profession of adherence to his precepts for the regulation of their assemblies,5 in connexion with which they had a question to propose to him regarding the spiritual gifts.6 But before the Apostle could answer this, he was reminded of the complaints, which he seems to have heard from other quarters, of the conduct of the women in the Christian assemblies,7 and of the factious spirit which had disturbed even the solemnity of the Lord's Supper;8 and it is not till he has disposed of these that he returns to the question of the Gifts.9 It is in the discussion of this question that he bursts forth into the fervent description of Christian Love, which, as it meets all the various difficulties and complaints in the whole course of the Epistle, must be regarded as the climax and turning point of the whole.10

Whether the doubts respecting a future Resurrection had been communicated in their letter or from some other source, it is impossible to determine. The subject from its greatness stands alone, and has all the completeness of a distinct composition, in its beginning, middle, and end.¹¹

With this the Epistle, properly speaking, terminated. But there still remained the time and mode of its transmission. Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, who had brought the letter from Corinth, though intending ultimately to return thither, were at present at Ephesus, apparently with the intention of remaining some time longer.¹² Timotheus, who would otherwise have been a natural messenger, had just departed.¹³

```
1 vii. 1; viii. 1; xi. 2; xii. 1.
2 vii. 1-40.
5 viii. -xi. 1.
5 viii. -xi. 1.
6 xi. 17-34.
6 x. xi. xiv.
7 xi. 1-7.
11 xv.
12 xvi. 17.
2 xi. 1.
12 xvi. 17.
```

7 xi. 3-16.

Apollos, whose connexion with Corinth and presence at Ephesus would have enabled him to undertake the duty, naturally held back from visiting a city where his name had been made the watchword of a party.1 But there was a little band of Christians to whom had been deputed the charge of collecting contributions, under the Apostle's sanction, for the Christian poor in Judæa.2 These men were now at Ephesus: and Titus -one of St. Paul's Gentile converts-apparently from some personal interest in the welfare of the Corinthian Christians, begged to be allowed to accompany them to Corinth, whither they were proceeding immediately to prepare the collection which the Apostle, on his subsequent arrival, was to carry or send on to Jerusalem.3 Such precautions show the critical position in which the Apostle felt himself placed in regard to the Corinthian Church. But, although the closing words of the Epistle relate to the matters of external business with which these precautions were connected, it is only by implication that his feelings are perceived; and the Epistle is concluded (with the exception of one severe expression which seems to betray the anxiety and indignation working within 4) with the usual calmness and gentleness of the Apostle's parting salutations.5

The immediate effects of the First Epistle must be reserved for the Introduction to the Second; but the reverence generated with which it was regarded in the next generation the Epistle may be inferred from the language in which it is alluded to in the epistle of Clement to the same Church about fifty years later: 'Take up the Epistle [evidently the First Epistle] of the blessed Paul, the Apostle; what was it that he first wrote to you in the beginning of the Gospel? Of a truth it was under the guidance of the Spirit that he warned you in his Epistle, concerning himself, and Kephas, and Apollos, because as well then as now, you formed parties.'

```
1 xvi. 12. 4 xvi. 22. 2 Cor. viii. 17—24. 5 xvi. 1—5, 6 Clem. Ep. i. 47. and the Notes on xvi. 12.
```

The variations from the Authorised Version in the following Translation are thus indicated:—

- The letter (*) prefixed to a word signifies an alteration consequent on the adoption of Lachmann's text (2nd edition, 1842-50).
- The letter () prefixed to a word denotes an intended improvement in rendering. Where the alteration extends over more than one word, its termination is denoted by (), thus: * are in my power!
- 3. The letter () prefixed to a word denotes an alteration, by transposing the words into a nearer conformity with their original order. Where this is consequent on Lachmann's text, the () and (*) appear together; and the end of the alteration is denoted by (), thus:  Christ Jesus.
- 4. The letter () between two words denotes an omission from the Authorised Version. Where this is consequent on an improvement in translation, the () is inserted alone, thus: 'Ślinco both * Jews requirs signa.' Where it airses from a variation in the Greek Text the () and () are combined, thus: 'every place, *s' theirs and ours.'
- 5. The Italics of the Authorised Version are abandoned: and when the words designated by them are superfluous they are struck out without notice. Italics are used solely to denote emphasis.
- The Divisions of the Sections are made according to the arrangement in the commentary, as shown on the opposite page.

The notes below the Greek show the variations of the Received Text' (Elzevir, 1824), from Lachmann's Text. These are fully given, with the exception of those of perpetual recurrence, such as σੰτω for σίτως, δετί for δστώς, λήψεται for λήμψεται, δετ.

Some doubtful renderings are placed as notes below the English Translation.

For a general statement respecting the Greek Text, and the Translation, see the Preface.

προς κορινθίους Α.

FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS. ----

PLAN OF THE EPISTLE.

SALUTATION AND INTRODUCTION. Chap. I. 1-9.

CHARGES AGAINST THE CORINTHIANS. Chap. I. 10-VI. 20.

THE FACTIONS. Chap. I. 10-IV. 20.

Description of the Factions. Chap. i. 10—17.
 The Simplicity of the Apostle's Preaching. Chap. i. 18—ii. 5
 The Contrast of Human and Divine Wisdom. Chap. ii. 6—iii. 4.

4. The Leaders of the Corinthian Parties. Chap, iii, 5-iv. 20. THE INTERCOURSE WITH HEATHENS. Chap. IV. 21-VI. 20.

The Case of Incest. Chap. iv. 21-v. 13.

 Digression on the Lawsuits. Chap. vi. 1—9a. The Case of Sensuality resumed. Chap. vi. 9b-20.

Answers of St. Paul to the Letter of the Corinthian CHURCH. Chap. VII. 1 --- XIV. 40.

MARRIAGE. Chap. VII. 1-40.

THE SACRIFICIAL FEASTS OF THE HEATHENS, Chap. VIII, 1 .-- XI, 1.

1. General Warning. Chap. viii. 1—13.
2. His own Example of Self-denial. Chap. ix. 1—x. 14.
3. The Evil of the Sacrificial Feasts. Chap. x. 15—xi. 1.

Worship and Assemblies. Chap. XI. 2-XIV. 40.

 Disuse of Female Head-dress. Chap. xi. 2—15.
 Disputes in the Public Assemblies, and especially at the Lord's Supper. Chap. xi. 16-34.

The Spiritual Gifts. Chap. xii. 1—xiv. 40.
 Unity and Variety of the Spiritual Gifts. Chap. xii. 1—30.

b. Love, the greatest of Gifts. Chap. xii. 31-xiii. 13. c. The Superiority of Prophesying to Speaking with Tongues.

Chap. xiv. 1-25. d. Necessity of Order. Chap, xiv. 26-40.

THE RESURRECTION. Chap. XV. 1-58.

The Resurrection of Christ. Chap. xv. 1-11.

The Resurrection of the Dead. Chap. xv. 12—34.
 The Mode of the Resurrection of the Dead. Chap. xv. 35—58.

THE CONCLUSION. Chap. XVI, 1-24,

SALUTATION AND INTRODUCTION.

ΠΑΤΛΟΣ (κλητός) ἀπόστολος 'χρωττοῦ 'Ιτροτοῦ διὰ θενό κόματος θεοῦ, καὶ Σωσθένης ὁ τὰδελφός της θεκλητοίς ποῦ θεοῦ, 'ἡγιασμένοις ἐν χρωττῷ 'Ιτροτῦ, τἢ οἰνση ἐν Κορίνθω, κλητοίς ἀγίοις, σὰν πάστυ τοῖς ἐκικαλουμένοις τὸ όυομα τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν 'Ίτροτὸ χρωττοῦ ἐν παντὶ τόπφ, 'ἀπόνω καὶ ἡμῶν. ''χάρις ὑμῶν καὶ ἐκρήνη ἀπὸ θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου 'Ιτσού χρωττοῦ.

· Ίησοῦ χριστοῦ, b τῆ οδση ἐν Κ, ἡγ. ἐν χρ. Ἰητοῦ. · αὐτῶν τε καί.

1 DAUL, called to be an apostle of "Christ Jesus" through a the will of God, and Soetherse sur broker, unto the Church of God, "to them that are 'hallowe'i i Christ, in to the Church which is at Corinth," to them that are called to be 'holy, with all that 'call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord in every place, "a theirs and ours: grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

 κλητὸς ἀπόστολος. The two words together are only used here, and in Rom. i. 1. κλητός may be, 'called to be a believer as an Apostle,' according to its usual sense (in verse 2, and vii. 20, 21); or, more simply, 'called to the state of the America.

to the state of an Apostle." Sosthenes is possibly the ruler of the synagogue in Acts xviii. 17; at any rate, a Christian well known to the Corinthians; as is implied both by the manner in which he is mentioned in the Epistle (whether as the companion or amanuensis of the Apostle) and also by the addition ο άδελφός, 'the brother,' i. e. 'the person well known to the Christian brotherhood,' Compare the same expression applied to Apollos, xvi. 12; to Timotheus, Col. i. 1; to Quartus, Rom, xvi. 23: and a similar use of it in 2 Cor. viii. 18. Eusebius

(H. E. i. 12) makes him one of the Seventy Disciples.

2. rj icolynia. Here, as in all the Churches founded by himself, the addresses the actual assembly or congregation of Christians; an expression which, in the case of those with whom he was not personally acquainted (as in Rom. i. 7; Col. i. 2; and, perhaps, Eph, i. 1), is omitted.

rhymapirwsc εληνοζ ἀγίοις ... 'called' or 'converted' 'to a state of holiness.' The inversion of the usual order of κλήσες ('calling,' 'conversion,') and 'αγασμός ('holiness,' 'sanctification') and 'conversion'. The 'conversion of the Apostle's language. (Compare ver. 11.) There is something almost rhythmical in the inversion of the clauses in B. D. G. as preserved in Lachmann's text.

σύν πάσιν τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις . .

⁴ Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ θεῷ μου πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν ἐπὶ τῆ χάρπι τοῦ θεοῦ τῆ δοθείση ὑμῦν ἐν χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἐδτι ἐν παντὶ ἐκλον τέσθητε ἐν αἰτῷ, ἐν παντὶ ἰκλοψ καὶ πάση γνώσει, ⁶καθὼς τὸ μαρτύριου τοῦ χριστοῦ ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν ὑμῶν, ⁷ἄστε ὑμῶς μὴ ὑστερείσθαι ἐν μηδετὶ χαρίσματι, ἀπεκδεχομέσους τὴν ἀποκαλυψμα τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ · δὸ καὶ

4 I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God swhich 'was given you 'in' Christ Jessiv', that in every thing ye 'were enriched by Him, in all utterance and in all know-ledge: even sate testimony of Christ was confirmed in you. 'so that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the 'revestation of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall also confirm you

.. ἡμῶν. This may be, (1) 'I address not only the Christians of Corinth, but those of Achaia generally,' as in 2 Cor. i. 1: (2) 'I address not only the natives of Corinth, but the numerous strangers who are passing to and fro through it:' but rather, (3) 'I address and salute not only you, but all Christians throughout the world.' This last sense seems required by the emphasis of the latter part of the sentence. έν παντί τόπω, and αύτων καί ήμων, i. e. 'in other parts of the world besides your own: He is the Lord of all of them, no less than of me and of you.

Iruxλ.νωμίτους τό δνομα. In the LXX. this is the translation of the Hebrew DOZ NO3, the general idea of worship or praise. In the New Testament it expresses the further idea of calling to aid (comp. Act in 21; ix. 13, 21; vii. 59; Rom. x. 13, 14; 2 Tim. ii. 29; and as illustrated by popular use, Knieppa iruxλ.influs, 'to appeal and the control of t iπλουτίοθητε, 'ye were enriched,' i. e. 'at the time of your conversion, when the favour of God was bestowed upon you,' referring to the words, τŋ χάριτι δοθείση.

 τὸ μαρτύριον. The testimony borne to Christ by the preaching of Paul was confirmed by the gifts which followed on their conversion. Compare 'The seal of my Apostleship are ye in the Lord,' ix. 2.

7. This refers to those gifts of insight into the unseen world, which were to sustain them in their expectation of the time when the veil of this outer world should be withdrawn (ἀτοκάλυψω) and Christ Himself revealed to their eyes. Comp. Tit. ii. 13; Phili. iii.

8. 'And this hope will not be begin a good work in you will continue it to the end.' δ_c refers (not to thirst, but) to God. For (1) call βideniueux eridently refers back to δideniue βideniue (2), δ_c rejupe airos. (3) δ βide is the general subject of the whole senence, and therefore repeated in βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς ἔως τέλους ἀνεγκλήτους ἐν τῆ ἡμέρα τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ. Ἦποτὸς ὁ θεός, δι' οδ ἐκλή- θητε εἰς κοινωνίαν τοῦ υἰοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν.

unto the end, ° blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 God is faithful, by Whom ye were called unto the *communion of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

verse 9. For the sense, compare Phil. i. 6: 'Being confident of this very thing that He who hath begun a good work in you will continue it till the day of Jesus Christ.' The assurance that all will in the end be well with God's servants is implied in the very notion of religious faith. The more we look upon ourselves as dependent beings, the more impossible does it seem that God should ever loosen the link which connects us with Himself.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. I. 1-9.

PAUL, whose mission to be an Apostle rests on the will of God Himself, and Sosthenes united with him in Christian brotherhood, each their usual Christian greeting to the Corinthian congregation, as well as to all other believers, who are equally with them worshippers of our common Lord Jesus Christ.

My first feelings are thankfulness for the manifold gifts of knowledge and teaching given to you at your conversion, and hope that God will continue the good work which He has thus begun.

THE APOSTOLICAL SALUTATIONS.

THE praise here bestowed upon the Corinthian Church, though not greater than that with which the Epistles to the Romans, Philippians, Colossians, and Thessalonians are opened, is remarkable in this instance as being addressed to a Church which, in the course of the two Epistles, is thought deserving of severe The App. censures. But in considering this, it may be observed with a substantial to the praise there bestowed on faith and holiness is thought the praise there bestowed on faith and holines is only the proposition of the world beginning the praise there almost confined to gifts such as knowledge and in his wisdom, which were obviously not incompatible with readers.

of the Church had fallen. And it is in accordance with the Apostle's usual manner to seize, in the first instance, on some point of sympathy and congratulation, not merely from a prudential policy, but from natural courtesy and generosity. It is a trait well illustrated by all his speeches in the Acts. Perhaps the opening of the Epistle to the Galatians is the only exception.

This practice of the Apostle is an exemplification of a general rule, according to which Scripture presents The ideal strongly the ideal of the whole, without describing and the the defects and sins of the parts. The visible society Church of Christians was to the Apostles, in spite of its many imperfections, the representation of Messiah's kingdom upon earth :- 'Ye are a royal priesthood, a peculiar people.' And thus, although the Christian congregation in each city or country was distinct from the heathen community in which it was situated, it yet so far partook of the character of what is now called a national Church, that it was, as it were, the Christian representative of that community. A Christian of Corinth or Enhesus might travel backwards and forwards from one to the other; but, however great were the disorders of the one or the excellencies of the other, there was no call upon him to exchange the communion of the one for the communion of the other, unless he actually ceased to be a permanent resident in the city of Corinth or of Enhesus, as the case might be. The supposed duty of gaining proselytes from Christian communities different from our own, and the consequent division of Churches by any other than their local and national designations, are ideas alien to the Apostolic age; and have grown up in modern times, and, it may be added, in Western countries. In the East, the ancient view, in this respect, still on the whole prevails.

Spartam nactus es: hanc exorna, was a maxim of Apostolical, no less than of Grecian wisdom. No Church of later ages has presented a more striking example of corruption or laxity, than was exhibited at Corinth. Yet the Apostle does not call on his converts to desert their city or their community; and he himself steadily fixes his view on the better and the redeeming side

CHARGES AGAINST THE CORINTHIANS.

Chap. I. 10-VI. 20.

THE first great division of the Epistle, I. 10—IV. 20, is based on the information which the Apostle had received from Corinth: and of this information, the first and most pressing subject was that which related to THE FACTIONS.

THE FACTIONS.

Chap. I. 10----IV. 20.

In the ensuing section we have the carliest account of ecclesiastical party,—of that spirit which has in subsequent ages been proverbially the bane of the Christian Church. But, though in principle the same, in form it is so different from the divisions of later times that a clear statement of the difference is necessary to prevent confusion.

In the first place, this is the earliest instance of the applimening of action of the word 'schism' ($\sigma\chi(\sigma\mu a)$, to a moral dischism.' vision.' But, instead of the meaning usually assigned to it in later times, of a separation from a society, it is here used for a division within a society. These factions or 'schisms', therefore, in the Corinthian Church, must not be considered as dissentient bodies outside the pale of the rest of the community, but as recognised parties of which the community itself was composed; corresponding not to such divisions as are caused by the existence of Protestant Churches outside the Church dependent on the See of Rome, or Dissenting Churches outside the Established Church of England, or Maronite and Nestorian Churches outside the Greek Church, but to internal divisions, such as are coacaioned by the conflicts between the several religious or

In classical writings it is always applied to actual rents of stone, garments, nets, or the like, as in Matt. ix. 16; Mark ii. 21. The only other passages in the New Testament where it is used in the sense of 'discord,' as here, are in St. John's Gospel (John vii. 43; ix. 16; x. 19). The classical word for which σχίσμα is a substitute is στάσε.

monastic orders in the Greek and Roman Churches, or between political and theological parties in the nations and Churches of northern Europe.

In the second place, the grounds of dissension were wholly different from any with which we are familiar. They Grounds of were, doubtless, aggravated in Corinth by the conflux division.

of various elements, the result of its commerce and situation, and by the tendency to faction which had long characterised the Greek race, and been stigmatised as the peculiar malady (v600s) of the old Greek commonwealths. But the especial occasion was the same which was to be found in all the Churches of the Anostolical age, and which has never since been found in any. At no subsequent period have Christian communities been agitated as all then were by the rivalry and animosity of Jewish and Gentile converts. Jewish converts to Christianity have, in later ages, been in such small numbers, and with so little distinction in their character, that their influence, as such, on the rest of the community has been almost nothing. In the first century it was just the reverse. Even in Corinth, the most exclusively Gentile of all the primitive Churches, they formed the basis of the community; and the difficulty of reconciling their scruples and meeting their prejudices was one of the chief tasks which the founder of the Church had to fulfil. We must conceive two classes of men brought into close connexion, and taught to look upon each other as brothers and friends, of whom one part, in the present instance the more numerous, had but recently relinquished the worship of Grecian divinities, and still considered acts of gross immorality as either innocent or indifferent, and the future life, if not incredible, at least difficult to be believed; whilst the other part, comprising the most earnest and energetic portion of the society, consisted of men, Jews either by birth or by religion, who still retained all the Jewish rites of circumcision, of the Sabbath, of abstinence from particular kinds of food, and of attendance at the Jewish festivals. equal degree of contrariety has ever since been found within the bosom of the same religious society. In large nations, it is true that the differences between Protestants and Roman Catholics may mount in some instances nearly to the same pitch; but in such cases the fusion has not been attempted, and the two bodies have lived apart, if not in open separation, from each other

In the third place, the professed watchwords of these parties Parties were the names, not of any subordinate teachers, but after the after the Apostles themselves and their immediate fol-Apostles lowers,—'I am of Paul, I of Apollos, I of Kephas, I as their of Christ.'

It has sometimes been doubted whether these were the designations actually used by the Corinthian parties. 'These things,' says the Apostle, 'I have in a figure transferred (μετεσχημάτισα) to myself and Apollos for your sakes;' as ifso it has been said-he had used the names of himself and Apollos instead of the real names of unknown leaders, in order either to avoid mixing himself up in their party disputes, or to impress more forcibly upon them the futility of these rival claims, which even in himself and Apollos would be out of place, much more in those who really made them. But this would not apply to the use of the name of Kephas; and it is clear that the Apostle in this instance merely expresses his intention of confining himself to those who called themselves after his name and that of Apollos, in order to show that his censure was aimed, not only against his Judaising opponents, but against the factious spirit itself, by which those who claimed to be his partisans were no less animated than those who claimed to be his enemies. Such appears to have been the course adopted also in the opening of the argument, where he immediately selects the party which said, 'I am of Paul,' as the chief instance of the sin common to them all.

And to this we may add the testimony of Clemens, writing within fifty years from this time to the very same Church, and contrasting the factions of his days with those in the days of St. Paul. 'The blessed Apostle Paul,' he says, 'wrote to you about himself and Kephas and Apollos, because then as well as now you formed parties. But that party spirit was less sinful, because it was directed to Apostles and a man approved by them.'?

That these parties followed the great division of Jew and The parties Gentile which ran through all the Churches of this of Krphas period, and that the adherents of the former ranged and of Paul. themselves under the name of Kephas, and those of the latter under that of Paul, will hardly be doubted; and it would seem probable that the party of Paul was in the ascendant during the period of the First Epistle, which chiefly attacks such sins as would belong to the Gentile portion of the community; and the party of Kephas, during the period of the Second Episale, which expressly attacks a formidable body of Judaisers. And the connexion of these latter with Kephas is further confirmed by the appeals which they would seem to have made to his example and authority, in the only passage where their presence is certainly indicated in the First Epistle and in the stress laid by St. Paul on the error of St. Peter in his address to a similar party in Galatia.

That the followers of Apollos, or as he would be more correctly called Apollonia; or must have been closely The party connected with those of Paul may be inferred both of Apollos from the association of Apollos with the disciples of Paul in the Acts,* and from the constant union of their names in this Epistle.* The contrast of the expressions, Paul 'planting,' Apollos 'waterings', Paul 'alying the foundation,' another building;' agrees with the account in the Acts, speaking of the effects of the mission of Apollos to Corintha subsequent to the visit of Paul. The frequent allusions to human wisdom and learning in the early chapters* would agree with no party so well as with that which professed to follow the Alexandrian Jew, 'eloquent, mighty in the Scriptures.'

Whether the words 'and I of Christ' (byà & χριστοῦ) reft on any distinct party, must remain doubtful. The party One would be glad with Chrysostom so to read the of Christ-passage, as if the Apostle, after enumerating the other names, had broken off with the indignant exchanation, 'But I am of Christ.' Had, however, such an antithesis been intended, some ¹ I Cor. ix. 5; Gal. ii. 11—14. These passages, as well as that just quoted from Clemens, sufficiently refute the hypothesis of Theophylact and Œcumenius (on Gal. ii.), and of Eusebius (H. E. i. 12), that another Kephas, not the Apoetle, is meant.

² The name from which Apolloo.

⁵ The name from which Apollos is abridged, as Lucas from Lucanus, Antipastrom Antipater, is Apollonius. Apparently from the circumstance that the first governor left by Alexander in his African province was so called, it was one of the commonest names of Alexandria. One such was Apollonius Rhodius, so called from his favourable reception in Rhodes.

Another was a soothsayer, who prophesied the death of Caligula. The most celebrated person of the name living in the Apostolic age was the employed by the property of the property of the property of Classical Registry, and the property of Classical Registry, p. 239 & J. Of Apollo himself there is not even any legendary information beyond what is contained in the few passages which in the Acts and Epistles.

Acts xviii. 26, 27.
 iii. 4; iv. 6; xvi. 12.

⁵ i. 17—28; ii. 1—6. ⁶ Acts xviii. 28.

more decisive expression (such as έγω δὲ Παῦλος γριστοῦ) seems almost necessary to prevent the ambiguity which otherwise arises. And that there was some party laving claim to an exclusive connexion with the One Name which, as the Apostle implies, ought to have been regarded as common to all, is strongly confirmed by the subsequent argument, 'If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's;' 2 and, although with less certainty, by the claims, apparently, of the same persons to be considered 'Apostles of Christ' and 'ministers of Christ.'3 The context of the Second Epistle, where the above passages occur, implies an allusion to the Judaising Christians of the Corinthian Church. If so, they would naturally dwell on their national and lineal connexion with 'the Christ,' the 'anointed Messiah,' 'the son of David;' and 'the outward appearance,' the 'carnal and fleshly 'arguments, on which they prided themselves,4 would be based on their intercourse either with 'Christ Himself after the flesh,'5 or with the original Jewish Apostles, who had seen Him,6 or with 'the brethren of the Lord," especially James, as the head of the Church of Palestine.8 Of these Factions, other indications have been supposed to Extinction exist in other parts of the New Testament, and the of the Par- writings immediately following upon them. But the only certain traces, besides those already referred to, are the indisputable allusions to a supposed hostility between Peter and James on the one hand, and Paul on the other, in the 'Clementines,' a work of about the date A.D. 212-230. With this exception, it is a remarkable fact that the Factions, once so formidable, have never been revived. Never has any disruption of the unity of Christianity appeared of equal importance; never has any disruption which once appeared of importance (with the exception, perhaps, of the Paschal controversy) been so completely healed.

¹ 1 Cor. i. 13.

 ² Cor. x. 7.
 2 Cor. xi. 7.
 2 Cor. xi. 13, 23.

^{4 2} Cor. v. 12; x. 2, 3, 7.

^{5 2} Cor. v. 16. 6 1 Cor. ix. 1.

^{7 1} Cor. ix. 5.

^{*} Comp. especially Gal. ii. 11, 21.

DESCRIPTION OF THE FACTIONS.

¹⁰ Παρακαλιδ δὲ ὑμᾶς, άδελφοὶ, διὰ τοῦ ὀυόματος τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν 'Ἰησοῦ χμοτος ὑ, ὑε τὸ ἀπὸ Λόγητε πάττες καὶ, μὴ ἢ ἐν ὑμῶν σχίσματα, ἢτε δὲ κατηριτομένοι ἐν τῆ αὐτῆ νοῦ, καὶ ἐν τῆ αὐτῆ γνώμη. ¹ἰδηλωθη γαὸ μοι περὶ ὑμῶν, δοὸ, όρι μου, ὑπὸ τῶν Χλοης, ὅτι ἐριδες ἐν ὑμῶν ἀτὸν. 'Ἰ λέγω δὲ τοῦτο, ὅτι ἐκαστος ὑμῶν λόγει Εγὸν μέν ἐψμ Παίλου, ἐγὸ δὲ -ἄπολλὸ, ἐγὸ δὲ ἐ Κηθὰ, ἐγὸ δὲ ἐ χροτο. 'Ἰμμεβρισται ὁ

10 Now I rexhort you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all "say the same thing and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined 11 together in the same mind and in the same judgment. For it was declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions 12 among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Kephas; and I παρακαλῶ = 'obsecro.' A mixture of entreaty and command.

ε̄αὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος, i. e. as the bond of union, and as the most holy name by which they could be adjured. The connexion of this with κοινωνίαν in verse 9 is the link between this and the preceding paragraph.

kurngraupires, 'restored,' kurqariido, though capable of a more general signification, is usually employed, as here, with the sense of 'restoring' or 'completing' something which has been set wrong. Compare Matt. iv. 21, where it is used of the mending of the nets. Here it is probably suggested by the literal meaning of σχίσματα, rents.

caraprιστήρ was the acknowledged phrase in classical Greek for a reconciler of factions. So Demonax at Cyrene, Herodot. iv. 161.

νοῦς. Probably no greater difference than between καρδία and ψυχή in Acts iv. 32.

 ὑπὸ τῶν Χλόης, probably the slaves of Chloe going to and from Ephesus and Corinth on business.

εριδίς, here used as identical with σχίσματα; divisions not from but within, the society.

12. λέγω δὲ τοῦτο. 'What I mean is.' Comp. Eph. v. 32. ἔκαστος ὑμῶν. 'There is none of vou who has not joined one or other of the parties."

13. μεμέρεστα ὁ χριστός, 'Christ is divided.' Lachmann's punctuation is both more striking, and also agrees better with the context, than that of the Received χριστός. μὴ Παῦλος ἐσταυρώθη "περὶ ὑμῶν ἡ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα. Παύλου ἐβαπτίσθητε; "ἐνχριστοῦ τῷ θεῷ "μου, ὅτι οὐδεὰ» ὑμῶν ἐβάπτίσθητε, εἰ μὴ Κρίσπον καὶ Ταῖον, "ὑα μή τις εἰπη ὅτι εἰς τὸ ἰμῶν ὄνομα ἐβαπτίσθητε. "ἔβάπτισα δὲ καὶ τὸν Στεφανὰ οἶκον" λοιπὸν οὐν οίδα εἰ τινα ἄλλον ἐβάπτισα. "ἰοὐ γὰρ ἀπέστειλέ με « [δ] χριστὸς βαπτίζειν, ἀλλ εὐαγὑπὸρ ὁμῶν.

 ὑπου.
 ἐδάπτισα.
 Om. ὁ before χριστόι.

13 of Christ. "Christ is divided." Was Paul crucifield for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? 14 I thank "my God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus 15 and 'Caius; lest any should say that "ye were' baptized in temine own name. And I baptized also the household of Ste 17 planas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel,

Had it been a question, 'Is Christ divided?' one would expect μη μεμ., as in the following clauses. It is an abrupt and mournful summing up of the statement of their divisions: 'By your factions, Christ, who lives in the Christian society, and by whom you should be united, is torn asunder.' And then, after a pause, follows the burst of indignation: 'Surely it was not Paul who was crucified for you, and into whose name you were baptized! It was not Paul who died for you, or to whom you died!' (Compare for the connexion, Rom. vi. 2, 3.) He takes his own party for the specimen of the evil of which he complains, as being the one in which it most forcibly strikes him, and also in which he can best denounce the sin of party spirit itself, without being supposed to be influenced by opposition to the views or claims of the hostile factions. It is the first instance of the 'transferring' of which he speaks in iv. 6. (For this sense of μεμέρισται see Mark iii. 26.)

14. εὐχαριστῶ τῷ θεῷ. ' I thank

God that it so happened even without my express intention.'

Crispus' as the ruler of the synagogue (Acts xviii. 8), and Gaius (or Caius) as the Apostle's heat (Rom. xvi. 23), would naturally be the two most obvious of his converts, and most prominent in his recollections. 'Crispus' was a common name of Jews. Lightfoot ad foc.

16. This addition of the baptism of Stephanas seems to be a subsequent correction. Stephanas and his household (for this is the most natural meaning of the words—like oi ἀμφὶ Στφακάν, were his earliest converts, xvi. 15, 17.

où colòa, 'I do not remember.' Compare 2 Cor. xii. 2; Acts xxiii. 5.

17. 'So little concern have I with baptizing, that it is not properly part of my mission.' In the injunction, Matt. xxviii. The principal command is, as here, to 'make disciples' (μαθητείνατε); 'shaptizing' (βωτείρντες) is introduced subordinately, as the mode by which the nations are to be made disciples. So also γελίζεσθαι οὐκ ἐν σοφία λόγου, ἴνα μὴ κενωθῆ ὁ σταυρὸς τοῦ χριστοῦ.

not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

in Mark xvi. 15, 16, the duty of 'proclaiming the Gospel' (cape-Eure rè rieury/haw) with its subsequent effects of 'believing,' and of 'signs following,' corresponds to what the Apostle here calls 'preaching the Gospel' (cleryr\u00e4\u00e4\u00e4\u00fc001) s' baptism \u00e7\u00e4\u00fc001) simentioned once subordinately, as an explanation of 'believing' (varreieur.) Such, too, was the practice: preaching was the mission of the Apostles as of our Lord before them; the administration of baptism was performed by inferiors (John iv. 2). Comp. Acts viii. 12, 16, and by implication Acts ii. 41; ix. 18; x. 48; xix. 3, 5, 6.

σοψία λόγου, 'wisdom which consists in mere words.' For this sense of λόγος compare Arist. Eth. vii. 9, §1; x. 9.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. I. 10-17.

First let me entreat and command you, in the name of our common Master, to lay aside these party watchwords by which you call wourselves, remembering that by them you divide Christ Himself. You especially who profess to follow me as your leader, attend to what I, your leader, tell you. Surely the very act of your admission into the Christian society showed you that there was One greater than Paul, who died for you, and to whom you died. There was nothing in that first beginning of your Christian life which brought you into any special connexion with me. With three exceptions, you were baptized not by me, but by others; and thus it was providentially ordered that you should have no pretext for attaching yourselves to me as the head of a party. And this reluctance of mine to baptize is also in accordance with the duty imposed upon me. My mission from Christ was not to form a party,no, nor even a society, or a Church,-but to declare the glad tidings of the Gospel. To that great object all else was subordinate.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF PARTY SPIRIT.

The Apostle here denounces party spirit as a sin in itself, Party-spirit irrespectively of the right or wrong opinions conin itself an nected with it; and the true safeguard against it is erd. in the recollection of the great bond of fellowship with Christ, which all have in common. 'Christianus mihi nomen est,' said an ancient bishop, in answer to some such distinction: 'Catholicus comonen.'

The first duty of the Apostle was to lose himself entirely be end in the cause which he preached. The most important details or forms—even though it were the organisation of the Christian society through the rite instituted by Christ himself—were so insignificant in comparison, that St. Paul spoke of them as though he had no concern with them. How often in later times have the means, the institutions of the Christian Church, taken the place of the end! Antiquity, novelty, the formation of a church or party, the attack on a church or a party, a phrase, a ceremony, a vestment, each has in turn overbalanced the one main object for which, confessedly, all lesser objects are inculcated. To all these cases the Apostle's answer applies: 'Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel.'

The sin of the Corinthians consisted not in the mere adoption The sacred. of eminent names, but in the party spirit which atness of the taches more importance to them than to the great cause warrant for which all good men have in common. Even the sacred partyspirit. name of Christ Himself may thus be descerated; and as the Apostle here rebukes those who said 'I am of Christ,' no less than those who said 'I am of Paul, of Apollos, and of Kephas,' so in the Gospels we read that our Lord Himself refused 1 to take the title of 'good,' and that 'He Himself baptized not, but His disciples." If the holiest name of all can thus be made a party watchword, if Christianity itself can thus be turned to the purposes of a faction, much more may any of its subordinate manifestations. The character of our Lord is distinguished from almost all others by the fact both that it rises far above any local or temporary influences, and also that it has, for the most part, escaped, even in thought, from any association with them. So the character of the Apostle, although in a lower measure, vindicates itself in this passage from any identification with the party which called itself after his name; and is a true example of the possibility of performing a great work, and labouring earnestly for great truths, without losing sight of the common ground of Christianity, or becoming the centre of a factious and worldly spirit.

It is by catching a glimpse, however partial, of the wild dissensions which raged around and beneath the Apo- The extincstolical writings, that we can best appreciate the fion of the unity and repose of those writings themselves; it is the Apoby seeing how completely these dissensions have been stolic age. obliterated, that we can best understand how marked was the difference between their results and those of analogous divisions in other history. We know how the names of Plato and Aristotle, of Francis and Dominic, of Luther and Calvin, have continued as the rallying point of rival schools and systems long after the decease, and contrary even to the intentions, of the respective founders. But with regard to the factions of the Apostolic age it was not so. The schools of Paul and Apollos, and Kephas, which once waged so bitter a warfare against each other, were extinguished almost before ecclesiastical history had begun; and the utmost diversity of human character and outward style has been unable to break the harmony in which their memories are united in the associations of the Christian world. Partly this arose from the nature of the case. The Apostles could not have been the founders of systems, even if they would. Their power was not their own, but another's: 'Who made them to differ from another? what had they which they had not received?' If once they claimed an independent authority, their authority was gone. Great philosophers, great conquerors, great heresiarchs, leave their names even in spite of themselves. But such the Apostles could not be without ceasing to be what they were; and the total extinction of the parties which were called after them is in fact a testimony to the divinity of their mission. And it is difficult not to believe that in the great work of reconciliation, of which the outward volume of the Sacred Canon is the chief monument, they were themselves not merely passive instruments, but active agents; that a lesson is still to be derived from the record they have left of their own resistance to the claims of the Factions which vainly endeavoured to divide what God had joined together.

THE FACTIONS (CONTINUED).

THE SIMPLICITY OF THE APOSTLE'S PREACHING.

Chap. I. 18-II. 5.

The course of the argument in the previous section would have led us to expect a continuation of the reasons why the Apostle was not sent to baptize. But having stated that he was sent to preach the Gospel, he is diverted from the preceding train of thought by the recollection that the preaching of the Gospel had itself been made a subject of contention and party feud. He may have been either taunted by his adversaries with a want of that human learning and eloquence on which the Greek rhetoricians prided themselves, and by which Apollos was distinguished; or he himself as 'the chief speaker' (comp. Acts xiv. 12), with Apollos, may have been set up by the Gentile party, in opposition to the simple unlettered instructions of Kephas or of James. The latter is most favoured by the context and the nature of the case, especially if we may suppose that the party of Apollos was practically identified with that of St. Paul. At any rate, the tendency of the whole passage is not to claim, but to disclaim, for himself and the Gospel, the 'wisdom of words' which the Corinthians seemed to expect; lest the subject of his teaching should, by his mode of teaching, be 'deprived of its inherent power' (κενωθή, comp. Rom. iv. 14); lest the form in which he taught should be inconsistent with the humiliation of the lesson.

And the glad tidings which he proclaimed, was, by a mournful paradox, the Cross of Christ (6 σταυρό του χριστού.) The humiliation of Christ, as expressed in the shameful death of the Crucifixion, was in itself the centre of the Apostle's teaching, and at Corinth was in this respect especially need as an antidote to the pride of the ambitious sects and vain Greeks.

THE SIMPLICITY OF THE APOSTLE'S PREACHING.

¹⁸¹Ο λόγος γὰρ ὁ τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦς μèν ἀπολλυμένοις μωρία ἐστίν, τοῖς δὲ σωζομένοις ἡμῶν δυναμις θεοῦ ἐστίν. ἢγέγραπται γάρ ᾿Απολῶ τὴν σοφίαν τῶν σοφίων, καὶ τὴν σύνεσιν τῶν συνετῶν ἀθετήσω. ³³ποῦ σοφός; ποῦ γραμμα-

18 For the "word of the cross is to them that perish foolishness, 19 but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. For it is written, 'I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring 20 to nothing the "prudence of the prudent. Where is the wise?

 δ λόγος γάρ. 'The true power of the Gospel is in this very Cross which is so despised.'

ὁ λόγος. 'There is a word,' 'an eloquence,' which is most powerful, 'the eloquence of the Cross' (referring to σοφία λόγου).

τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις. Ünbelievers are regarded by St. Paul as already perishing; believers as already saved. 'A sweet savour . . in them that are saved, and in them that perish' (2 Cor. ii. 15.)

19. γέγραπται γάρ. This gives the reason for δύναμις: 'God's power is greater than man's wisdom, for you will remember how this is set forth in the Prophets.' He then, as often, combines two distinct passages in one quotation. Both are from Isaiah, nearly as in the LXX. (1) Isa. xxix. 14, 'I will destroy,' &c. The original meaning is, that the wisdom of the pretended leaders of the Jewish people shall be confounded by the judgments of God. The LXX. has κρύψω where the Apostle has άθετήσω. The Hebrew is 'shall perish' and 'shall disappear.' (2) Isa. xxxiii. 18, 'Where is the scribe?' &c. The original meaning is a burst of triumph over the defeat of Sennacherib: 'Where is he who exacted and weighed the tribute, and who counted the towers of Zion as if they were his own?' These words the Apostle applies generally; adopting, apparently, the common phraseology of the Rabbis on the subject. See Lightfoot's quotation:

'God showed to Adam

Every generation, and the disputers of it; Every generation, and the wise men of it; Every generation, and the scribes of it; Every generation, and the governors of

20. The 'wise man,' σοφές, probably refers specially to the Greeks, as the word especially used by themselves, e. g. in the creation of the control of the τεύς; ποῦ συζητητής τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου; οὐχὶ ἐμώρανε ὁ θεὸς τὴν σοφίαν τοῦ κόσμου; ²¹ἐπειδη γαρ ἐν τῆ σοφία τοῦ θεοῦ οὐκ ἔγνω ὁ κόσμος διὰ τῆς σοφίας τὸν θεόν, εὐδόκησεν ὁ θεὸς διὰ τῆς μωρίας τοῦ κηρύγματος σώσαι τοὺς

* Add τούτου.

where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this 'age?' 'Did 21 not God make' foolish the wisdom of 'the world? For 'since in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that puter, "«νζητηνής, seems to be a word descriptive of the popular disputations which took place in rival schools (comp. Acts vi. 9; rival schools (comp. Acts vi. 9; to all the three, and is to be alightly distinguished from είσερον, the first referring to the transitory, the second to the visible and material, character of the present world. The general words is proved by their use in iii. 18, 19.

These expressions acquire additional face by a comparison with the Rabbinical belief that the cessation of Rabbinical visidom was to be one of the signs of the Messiah's comping (see the quotations from the Mishna in Wetstein ad loc.), and that this was expressly foreted in Jas. xxxiii. belief of Christians that the crucles of the heathen world ceased on the birth of Christ.

21. iν τὰ σορία τοῦ 3ενῦ may be, (1) 'God ordained in His wisdom that the wisdom of the world shall not be the means of arriving at a knowledge of God,' (in which case comp. Acta xiv. 16, 'God in times past suffered all men to walk in their own ways,' and xvii. 30, 'the times of this ignorance God winked at,' also Romans iii. 25, 'the "passing over," πάρεσιν, of sins that are "gone before," προγεγονότων, through the forbearance of God;') Or (2) 'When all the wisdom of God had been displayed, the world was still unable to arrive at the knowledge of God.' Compare the general context in Rom. i. 16-21, where the Apostle argues in like manner that the Gospel is shown to be the power of God to those who believe, because in spite of full light the Gentile world had rejected the knowledge of God. In either case the general sense of the end of the sentence will be, 'The world was not converted by Ilis wisdom; and therefore He chose to confound it by saving, not the world, but the believers, (if one may so say) through His folly.

διὰ τῆς σοφίας may thus be either 'its wisdom,' or the repetition and explanation of ἐν τῆ σοφία τοῦ θεοῦ, 'through the wisdom which I have just mentioned.'

δ κόσμος, 'the world of Gentiles,' is opposed to οἱ πιστύοντες, 'the believing world'; and in the next verse 'the world' is expanded into 'Jew and Græk,' and 'those that believe' is explained by 'wc.'

* σημείον. "Ελλησι for έθνεσιν. " Lachm. ed. 1 omits έστίν.

22 believe; 'since both' 'Jews require 'signs, and 'Greeks seek 24 after wisdom, but see preach Christ crucified, unto 'Jews a 24 stumblingblock, and unto "Gentiles foolishness; but unto 'ourselves that' are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power 25 of God and the wisdom of God: because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the wakness of God is 'mightier than 28 men. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that' there are' not many wise men after the fiels, hot many 'strong' men, not many

22. Unless a new sentence is begun here, ἐπτιδή resumes the first ἐπτιδή in 21, and introduces an amplification of the ground already stated there.

'Lovatiot . . . 'Eλληνες. 'Characters like the Jews — like the Greeks' (implied in the omission of the article.) The repetition of καί expresses 'each in their own way.'

σημεία, 'signs,' has the same general meaning of 'outward visible wonders to gratify the craving of superstition;' as σομία is 'an inward completeness of system to gratify the cravings of the intellect.' In its plural form it agrees with John iv. 48.

23, 24, 25, ημεῖς. 'We, Apostles and Christians.'

χριστον έσταυρ. κ.τ.λ. 'Christ, to Whom, in His humiliation, the Jews have a religious, the Grecks an intellectual, objection, but Who, to us, who are called to believe in Him, though still the same Christ, is a greater manifestation of power than any sign in Heaven or outward miracle; a greater manifestation of wisdom than any system of human learning, inasmuch as He is the power and the wisdom, not of man, but of God.?

'The power of God, as delivering from the bondage of sin' (compare Rom. viii. 3); 'the wisdom of God as enlightening our understandings' (compare Ephesians i. 8, 9, 17, 18.)

σημεία, σκάνδαλον, δύναμις, on one hand, correspond to συφία, μωρία, σοφία, on the other.

Observe the repetition of χοιστόν. 'He, in whom the unbelievers saw only the cracified malefactor, was, to the believers, the power and wisdom of God.'

26. It was a general, though not a universal rule (οὐ πολλοί, not οὐδείς), that the first converts were from the humblest and most illiterate classes. The few exδυνατοί, οὐ πολλοὶ εὐγενεῖς, 27 ἀλλὰ τὰ μωρὰ τοῦ κόσμου έξελέξατο ὁ θεός, [ίνα "καταισχύνη τοὺς σοφούς, καὶ τὰ ασθενή του κόσμου έξελέξατο ὁ θεός], ενα καταισχύνη τὰ ίσχυρά, 28 καὶ τὰ ἀγενή τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τὰ ἐξουθενημένα εξελέξατο ὁ θεός, "τὰ μὴ όντα, ινα τὰ όντα καταργήση, 29 οπως μη καυχήσηται πάσα σαρξ ένώπιον 4 τοῦ θεοῦ· 80 έξ αὐτοῦ δὲ ὑμεῖς ἐστὲ ἐν γριστω Ἰησοῦ,ος ἐγενήθη σοφία ἡμῖι τοὺς ποφοὺς καταισχύνη. 4 αὐτοῦ for τοῦ θεοῦ.

b mal before τὰ μή.

* καυχήσεται · ημών σοφία.

27 noble, "but "the foolish things of the world God "chose" to confound the wise, and the weak things of the world God rchose' 28 to confound the things which are mighty, and the base things of the world and "the despised things' God chose, - "things 29 which are not, to "make to vanish away' things which are; that 30 no flesh should "boast in "the presence of God.' But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, Who twas made wisdom unto us of ceptions that occur in the New Testament itself are Nicodemus and Joseph, Sergius Paulus, Di-onysius the Arcopagite, Apollos, Barnabas, and the Apostle himself. Of the original Apostles it was probably true without exception. A doubtful tradition of Bartholomew's high birth is all that has ever been alleged to the contrary.

την κλησιν, the manner of your conversion to Christianity ' (see on vii. 20.)

κατά . σάρκα, 'outwardly,'=rov κόσμου-τούτου.

βλέπετε may be either imperative or indicative, 'see,' or 'you see."

27, 28. τὰ μωρά, opposed to σοφοί,-τα άσθενή το ζυνατοί,-τα άγενη καὶ τὰ έξουθενημένα (compare vi. 4) to suyereic. τὰ μὴ ὅντα, the climax of the whole. 'God has not only made the Gospel to prevail over wisdom and power and rank, but has created it out of nothing; that so, in our redemption as well as our creation, we might be wholly dependent upon Him ' (compare Rom, iv. 17).

καί is inserted before τὰ μὴ örra in B. C3. D3. J. and the Received Text, and is omitted in A. C. D. E. (?) F. G. and in Lachmann. If the omission is correct, the words τὰ μὴ ὅντα are not an addition to, but a summary of, the successive ideas of the previous verse.

30. What in 27-29 is exhibited on its negative, is here exhibited on its positive side. 'God is our creator; and therefore we are to confide in none and in nothing besides Him. He is our Creator; and therefore you are certainly His children, born again into the world through Christ, Who, as the first-born of this new creation, was made (έγενήθη) to us the true source and exemplar of divine wisdom." Comp. Rom. xi. 36, where the same truth is stated-that from the Father through the Son all things exist; that, in opposition to all the wisdom and power of the world, Christ alone contains

- ἀπὸ θεοῦ, δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ ἁγιασμὸς καὶ ἀπολύτρωσις, ³¹ἴνα καθὼς γέγραπται ⁶Ο καυχώμενος ἐν κυρίφ καυχάσθω.
- II. ¹Κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, ἢλθόν οὐ καθ ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἡ σοφίας καταγγέλλων ὑμῖν τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ
- 31 God', and righteousness, and *holiness, and redemption; that according as it is written, 'he that *boasteth, 'in the Lord let him *boast.'
- 1 II. And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of "word or of wisdom, declaring unto you the the true divine wisdom. With this assertion the antithesis properly closes, as is shown by the position of the words, 'Christ was made wisdom unto us of God.' But here, as elsewhere, the Apostle's feeling overflows, and adds (what is not strictly needed) that Christ, besides being our wisdom, is also 'both our righteousness and our holiness' (δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ άγιασμός), 'the one as truly as the other-the source and exemplar of both.' That this is the force of the iuxtaposition of the words is evident from τε καί. Compare vi. 11. This is the earliest passage in St. Paul's writings which contains the germ of Rom, iii, 21-25, and the structure of teaching built upon it.

καὶ άπολύτρωσις. 'And yet more, He is our ransom from all evil; in Him we all receive that ransom by which our mortal natures shall be set free from the bondage of corruption.' That this is the full meaning of the word is implied by its occupying the climax of the sentence. Cp. Rom. viii. 21-23. Each of the three words has the double meaning both of an inward act and of an outward result; embracing on the one hand 'righteousness, holiness, freedom; on the other 'acquittal, consecration, deliverance. It is for the expression of these complex ideas, —complex in thought, though simple in fact,—that the mixed Greek of the N. T. forms so adequate, the Latin languages of modern Europe so imperfect, a vehicle.

31. 'Thus our very boasting is an expression of our dependence.' The quotation is a condensation of Jerem. ix. 23, 24; 'Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth.' The words 'in the Lord' probably contain a latent reference in the Apostle's mind, not merely to God gene-rally (as in 29), but to Christ Jesus specially (as just described in 30).

II. 1. What he has said generally, he now exemplifies in him-κάγώ. 'And in my own acts too, this was true. As the Gospel is, so also am I its Apostle.' For a similar argument, in regard to truthfulness and sincerity, as here to simplicity, viz., that as his teaching was, so must θεοῦ. ² οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινά *τι εἰδέναι ἐν ὑμῖν, εἰ μὴ Ἰησοῦν χριστόν, καὶ τοῦτον ἐσταυρωμένον. ⁸*κάγω ἐν ἀσθενεία καὶ ἐν φόβω καὶ ἐν τρόμω πολλῷ ἐγενόμην πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ⁴καὶ ὁ λόγος μου καὶ τὸ κήρινγμά μου οὺκ ἐν πειθοῖς στοφίας λόγοις,

2 testimony of God. For I 'determined not to know anything 3 among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. And 'in weakness and in fear and in much trembling was I with you'; 4 and my 'word and my preaching was not with enticing words be his own character and practice, see 2 Cor. i. 17—20; and iiii. 7—12. καί has, in part, the sense common in Thucydides, 'in fact.' as, e. g. Thucyd. vi. 64; ὅπερ καὶ κατίλαβον. ὑπεροχίν, 'excelling others.'

1 Or judged.

νκεροχην, εxcening others.
τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ θεοῦ (in B. D.
E. F. G. J.). 'My testimony of what God has done in Christ.'
The reading of μυστήριον in A. C.
is probably from verse 7.

2. ονε ἔκρινά τι εἰδένται, ' I determined to know nothing ' (οὐκ ἔκρινα, like οὐ φημι, not ' I did not determine,' but ' I determined not '). The reading of the Rec. Text, τοῦ εἰδέναι, is supported by only one ancient MS. (J), but for a similar construction, compare Acts xxvii. 1, isρiθη row drowλείν.

'You will recollect that my preaching was no philosophical system; for it was confined to the exhibition of Jesus Christ, and that not in His glory, but in his humiliation, in which you were called upon to share.

κάγω, 'and I,' as in verse 1; here repeated as expressing still more emphatically the absence of human power, not only in his practice, but in his person.

'Weakness,' alluding to the infirmities mentioned in 2 Cor. x. 10; xi. 30; xii. 5, 9, 10. Fear and trembling; i. e. anxiety occasioned by a consciousness of his weakness. Compare the same expressions used of the reception of Titus, 2 Cor. vii. 15; and of the behaviour of 'slaves',

Eph. vi. 5. 4. λόγος, 'the form,' κήρυγμά, the 'substance' of his preaching.

πειθοῖς, probably an adjective for πεθανοῖς, after the analogy of φειδός and μῖμος. Not found in classical writers. 'Corinthian words' was a popular expression for exquisite phrases. (Wetstein ad loc.)

ανθρωπίνης ('human'), inserted before σοφίας in A. C. and Rec. Text, was probably added from a fear lest 'wisdom' itself should seem to be disparaged.

έν ἀποδείξει, 'in the proofs given by the Spirit and the power which was in me.' The words («νεύματος, δυνάμεῶς) refer to the preternatural gifts, whether of the Corinthians or of himself.

Compare the whole argument of 2 Cor. xi. 21-xii. 10.

Longinus (Fragment 1. ed. Weiske, p. 112) alludes to the abrupt and unsystematic style on άλλ' ἐν ἀποδείξει πνεύματος καὶ δυνάμεως, δίνα ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν μὴ ἢ ἐν σοφία ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει θεοῦ.

of ° wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; s that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

which the Apostle here prides sertion without elaborate proof' himself,—'Paul of Tarsus was the (πρώτον...προϊστάμενον δύγμα-first who maintained positive as-

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. I. 18-II. 5.

The Gospel which I preach is no system of mere words, fair without, but hollow within. I did nothing to conceal the simplicity and the offensiveness of the humiliation of Him whom I preached. That very humiliation, expressed in its strongest form in the Cross on which He died, has in itself a power to convince the hearts of men far beyond any system of human philosophy; and in Him whom the proud Jew and the intellectual Greek reject as a crucified malefactor, His followers recognise the true satisfaction of all their wants. Nor is it only in Christ, but in His followers, that the same law is visible; you have only to look at the quarters from which the ranks of Christians are filled, to see that you owe nothing to your own wisdom, or power, or station, but all to God; by Whom you have, in the person of Christ, been called, as if to a new existence, in this His second creation. He is your true wisdom; and not only so,-your righteousness, and holiness, and freedom. What I have thus stated generally was realised to the letter in my own practice : in my determination to preach, not theories, but the fact of Christ's Crucifizion : in my own personal insignificance, as contrasted with the greatness of my cause,

The foregoing passage is important as containing a state-The Cruei, ment of the main subject of the Apostle's preachfixion the ing. A similar and somewhat expanded description main suboccurs in 1 Cor. xv. 3-8, which makes it to consist in ject of his teaching at the setting forth of the Death and the Resurrection of Christ. Both agree in the selection of the close of our Lord's life as the chief topic of his addresses: 'I delivered unto you first of all . . . how that Christ died for our sins . . . was buried . . . and rose again.' The statement in this passage takes us a step further, and tells us that the Apostle chiefly dwelt on the manner of the Death-The Cross of Christ,1 Christ crucified.2 And when we compare this language with that of the nearly contemporary Epistle to the Galatians, a before whose eyes Jesus Christ had been evidently set forth, crucified among them,' it is clear that the subject, though here capable of a peculiar application to the intellectual pride of the Corinthians, was habitual to St. Paul during this period of his life. Two points are described as specially commending it to him at Corinth; (1) its simplicity, and (2) its humiliation. A third point appears more prominently in the other Epistles-its sufferings.

1. It was, as he says, characteristic of 'Jews' to demand Absence of 'signs' or 'portents.' The especial 'sign' which they sought was that of some manifestation of the 'Sheculous. chinah,' or Divine glory, in the Heavens, to encompass the Messiah. But the tendency was more general: it was that craving for the marvellous and miraculous, which still characterises Oriental nations, which appears in the license of Arabian invention and credulity, and which in the Jewish nation reached its highest pitch in the extravagant fictions of the Rabbinical writers. The proverb 'Credat Judæus' shows the character which they had obtained amongst the Romans for readiness to accept the wildest absurdities; and this disposition to seek for signs is expressly commended in the Mishna.4 To a certain extent this tendency is met by the Gospel miracles. 'This' was the beginning of "signs" (σημείων) which Jesus did: 'Jesus of Nazareth,6 a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs.' Yet on the whole it is discouraged: 'A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign,1 and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas.' 'Except' ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe.' And what is thus intimated in the Gospels, is here followed out by the Apostle. In answer to this demand for 'signs,' he produced the least dazzling, the least miraculous part of the whole of the career of our Lord,the simple fact of His Crucifixion. The more ample we suppose the evidence for the Gospel miracles, or the more portentous their nature, so much the more striking is the testimony of Christ and His Apostle to the truth that it is not on them that the main structure of Christian faith is to be built up. The tendency in human nature, especially in Oriental nature, is acknowledged, and, to a certain extent, satisfied. But it is discountenanced as unworthy of the highest and best form of Christian Revelation.

¹ i. 17. ² i. 23; ii. 2. in Reiche's Commentary, on 1 Cor. ii. 22.

⁴ See the quotations at length 5 John ii. 11. 6 Acts ii. 22.

This simplicity of teaching, which was a rebuke to the superstitious cravings of the Oriental and the Jew, Absence of was also a rebuke to the intellectual demands of the philosophi-European Greek. The charm which the former found cal theory in outward miracles the latter sought in theories of philosophy. The subtlety of discussion, which had appeared already in the numerous schools of Greek speculation, and which appeared afterwards in the theological divisions of the fourth and fifth centuries, needed not now, as in the time of Socrates, to be put down by a truer philosophy, but by something which should give them fact instead of speculation, flesh and blood instead of words and theories. Such a new starting point was provided by the Apostle's constant representation of the homely yet strange event which had taken place within their own generation in Judges,-the Crucifixion of his Master. Its outward form was familiar to them, wherever the Roman law had been carried out against the slaves and insurgents of the East. It was for them now to discover its inward application to themselves.

And this brings us to the second point of view from which the Crucifixion is here regarded, namely, its humiliation.

In order to enter into the force of this, we must picture to ourselves a state of feeling which, in part from the Degradaeffect produced on the world by this very passage and Cross. the spirit which it describes, is entirely removed from our present experience. Notonly is theoutward symbol of the Cross glorified in our eyes by the truth of the religion which it represents, but the very fact of the connexion between Christianity and humiliation is to us one of the proofs of its divine excellence.1 But at its first propagation, as is the case even to this day in parts of the world external to Christendom, it was far otherwise. The Crucifixion was and is a 'scandal' to the Jewish nation, as a dishonour to the Messiah. Christ has been called by them in derision 'Toldi,' the man who was hanged;' and Christians, 'the servants of him who was hanged.' And in the Mahometan religion. both as now professed and as set forth in the Koran, the supposed ignominy of the Crucifixion is evaded by the story that the Jews, in a judicial blindness, seized and crucified Judas instead of Christ, who ascended from their hands into heaven, 'You do not think that those brute Jews nailed the Lord Isa [Jesus] to a cross?' was the indignant question of an intelligent Mussulman to an English traveller. 'Oh no! they never nailed Him: He lives for ever in Heaven.' The objection thus felt by Jews and Mahometans to the Crucifixion as a degradation of the Messiah, was felt by the educated classes of Greek and Roman society as a degradation of the Religion itself; encumbered as it thus was, in their eyes, with associations so low, and addressed, as they would say, to classes so contemptible as the beggars and slaves of the Roman Empire.

¹ Matt. xvi. 4.

Nothing shows the confidence of the Apostle more strongly Exaltation than the prominence which he gives to an aspect of his teaching so unpopular, In the Epistle to the Philip-Cross. pians (ii. 5-8) he pursues the subject home with a like courage through the several stages of humiliation, ' of no reputation - the form of a " slave " '-even to ' the death of the Cross.' But this passage contains the earliest statement, we might almost call it prophecy, of the triumph of Christianity, not only in spite, but by means, of this great obstacle. What the Apostle assumed as certain in the first beginning of the struggle has now been confirmed by the experience of many centuries. The Cross which, with all its associations, conveyed no thoughts to the Greek, the Roman, or the Jew, but of the lowest and most infamous punishment, is now enshrined in our most famous works of art, in our greatest historical recollections, in our deepest feelings of devotion. The Apostle's personal defects, on which he dwells with such trembling anxiety, are now so entirely forgotten, that the world will not even endure to be reminded that they ever existed. The society which consisted almost exclusively in the first instance of the lower orders, chiefly of slaves and freedmen, and which for three centuries unabered amongst its converts one of the pots, historians, and philosophers, who still headed the literature of the Roman Empire, has now embraced within itself all the civilisation of the world. The inhabitants of the palaces from which were taken the splendid works of art that adorn the galleries of the Vatican, have disappeared before the inhabitants of the catacombs, whose rude ill-spelt epitaphs, and barbarous sculptures may be seen beside them. The Christian religion has triumphed in deflance, not only of persecution, but of the follies and weaknesses for which the writers of the first ages of the Christian Church have been often and justly censured.

See a celebrated passage in Milman's Bampton Lectures, p. 279.

What was most remarkably exhibited in the first rise of Christianity has been exhibited in a less remarkable degree in its different forms subsequently. The immense impression produced by some of the saints of the middle ages, as well as by some of the least cultivated intellects of later times, as amongst our own Nonconformists, is a testimony to the same truth on a smaller scale. So Bonaventura pointed to the Crucifix as the source of all his learning; so Bunyan has excretical a lasting influence through the "Pigrim's Progress." But the first shock was the greatest. The apparent insignificance of the Apsette, the novelty and the offensiveness of the truth, and of the image under which the truth was conveyed,—can never be repeated or causalled.

3. Very briefly must be mentioned, as not prominently brought forward in this Epistle, but as appearing in the Sufficing almost contemporary Epistle to Galatia, the image of of the suffering conveyed in the Crucifixion: 'God forbid Cross that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by Whom the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world.' 'This is the aspect of it most familiar in the Gospel history, where 'taking up the cross is equivalent to following Christ through hardship and difficulty. 'The cross of Christ,' asys Luther,' signifies all afflictions of all good men, whose sufferings are the sufferings of Christ.'

¹ Gal. vi. 14.

² Luther on Gal. vi. 14.

THE FACTIONS (CONTINUED).

CONTRAST OF HUMAN AND DIVINE WISDOM.

⁶ Χοφίαν δὲ λαλοθμεν ἐν τοῦς τελείσις, σοφίαν δὲ οὐ τοῦ ακαταργουμένων, 'ἄλλὰ λαλοθμεν 'βεοῦ σοφίαν ἐν μυττηρίω, τὴν ἀποκεκρυμμέτην, ἡν προώριστο ὁ θεὸς πρὸ τῶν αἰωναν τὸς δός ακριμμέτην, ἡν προώριστο ὁ θεὸς πρὸ τῶν αἰωνων ἐς δός αν ἡμῶν, 'ἡν οὐδὲς τῶν ἀρχόντων τοῦ αἰωνος τούτου ἐγνωκεν (ἐ γὰρ ἔγνωσαν, οἰκ ἀν τὸν κύριον τῆς δόζης ἐσταύ-

* σοφίαν Θεού

6 'Now we speak wisdom among them that are perfect; yet not the wisdom of this 'age, nor of the princes of this 'age, that 'vanish away'; but we speak 'God'z wisdom' in a 'sceret, the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the a 'ages unto our glory; which none of the princes of this 'age knew (for had they known, they would not have crucified

 6. 'But although we abjure human wisdom, there is a true wisdom which we speak to those who are fit to receive it.' τελείσες, 'fullgrown,' as opposed to νηπίοις, iii. 1.

7. μυστήριον has its ordinary

sense of 'a secret made known to the initiated.'

είς δόξαν ἡμῶν, 'in order that by its revelation we might receive glory; that glory which is the highest gift of God to His children.' Compare John xui. 10, 22; Rom. viii. 21. This 'glory' now becomes the subject of the sentence.

8—12. fp refers to δάξαν. roż αίῶνος rośrov refers to πρὲ τῶν αίῶνω. 'That which belonged to termity was not likely to be known to those who lived in time.' The earthly and spiritual powers of this world, in an eril sense, are here identified, as in Matt. iv. 8, 9; Eph. vi. 12; and (in reference to the Crucifixion especially, as in this passage) Luke xxii. 53, 'When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me; but this is your hour, and the power of darkness.' For their ignorance comp. Luke xxiii. 34, 'Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.' For the same thought of the ignorance of the evil spirits in regard to the Crucifixion, carried out to a fanciful excess, yet still from its early date illustrating this passage, see Ign. ad Eph. c. 19, καὶ έλαθε τον άρχοντα του αίωνος τούτου ή παρθενία Μαρίας καὶ ὁ τοκετός αὐτῆς ὁμοίως καὶ ὁ θάνατος του κυρίου, τρία μυστήρια κραυγής, άτινα έν ήσυχια θεοῦ ἐπράχθη.

The words ενρων τῆς δόξης seem to be used with reference to δόξω:

'Him who alone was sovereign Lord of that glory,' like ἀρχηγός τῆς ζωῆς, Acts iii. 15; ἀρχηγός τῆς σωτηρώς. Heb, ii. 10. δόξης ρωσαν), θάλλὰ καθώς γέγραπται Α ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ είδεν καὶ οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσεν καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἀνέβη, εόσα ἡτοίμασεν ὁ θεὸς τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν. 10ἡμῶν δὲ ὁἀπε-

a å for öva.

11 δ Θεδς άπεκάλυψε,

9 the Lord of glory); but as it is written, "what eye saw not, nor ear heard, neither "entered into the heart of man, what great things' God "prepared for them that love 10 Him." But unto us God "revealed them by the Spirit: for here, as δόξαν in 7, is used perhaps with special reference to the shame of the Cross.

ἀλλά. 'Nay, rather;' the opposition to οὐδεὶς ἔγνωκεν being first brought forward in ἡμεν δέ, verse 10.
 καθώς γέγραπται. These words imply that the quotation which follows is from the Old Testament. There is no instance of any anocryphal book (as in Jude 9, 14) being introduced by this formula. And, in fact, it seems to be taken from Isaiah lxiv. 4 (LXX.) això του αιώνος ούκ ήκούσαμεν, ούδὲ οί όφθαλμοὶ ήμῶν εἶδον θεὸν πλήν σού και τα ίργα σού, ά πουίσειο τοῖς ὑπομένουσιν έλεον, slightly coloured by the recollection of Isa. lii. 15 (LXX.) oic our avηγγέλη όψονται, καὶ οῖ οὐκ ακηκύασι συνήσουσι, and lxv. 17 (LXX.) έσται γὰο ὁ οὐοανὸς καινὸς, κ.τ.λ. καὶ οὐ μὴ μνησθώσε τῶν προτέρων, οὐδὲ οὐ μὴ ἐπέλθη αὐτῶν ίπὶ την καρδίαν. The variation from the original text is not essentially greater than in other quotations, e. g. that in i. 19, 20, from Isa. xxix. 14: xxxiii. 18: and it is apparently quoted as such in Clem. Rom. i. c. 34 (where see the annotations in Dr. Jacobson's edition). It is therefore singular that the Fathers generally held that it was taken, either (as Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theonhylact) from some lost prophet, or (as Origen) from an apocryphal work called The Revelation of Elijah (Fabricius, Cod. Apoc. Vet. Test. i. 1077). This agrees with the vehemence with which Hegesippus (in a fragment preserved in Photius, Bib. Cod. 232) appears to repudiate these words altogether. He charges with 'lving and vain speaking those who use this language (τους ταυτα φαμένους), as contradictory both to the Scriptures generally and to our Lord's speech, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear."'

they hear."
The words, both in the original context of Isa. Livi. 4, and in their position here, refer not (as they are usually applied in quotations) to a future state, but (as is implied in the passage just quoted from Hegesippsu) to the spiritual blessedness or glory which is to believen and which the Aposite proceeds to explain in the next verses.

 ημῖν ἔξ, 'to us,' i. e. believers generally, but with a special reference to himself. The quotation is left unfinished, and he resumes the antithesis to ver. 8, 'The rulers knew not, but to us God revealed it.'

ἀπεκάλυψε, 'revealed by spi-

κάλυψεν ὁ θοὸς διὰ τοῦ πνεύματος * τὸ γὰρ πνείμα πάντα ἐρευνές, καὶ τὰ βάθη τοῦ θοοῦ. ¹¹1ς γὰρο όδεν ἀθφώπων τὰ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, κὶ μη τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ; οὐτως καὶ τὰ τοῦ θοῦ οὐδαῖς ¹ἐρνωκεν, κὶ μὴ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ δεοῦ. ¹¹ημείς δὲ ἀ οὐ τὸ πνεύμα τοῦ κόσμου ἐλάβρωμ», ἀλλά δεοῦ. ¹¹ημείς δὲ ἀ οὐ τὸ πνεύμα τοῦ κόσμου ἐλάβρωμ», ἀλλά

· aprop after mrebuaros.

b other for syrmeer.

the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. If For "who of men' knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so "also the things of God 12 knoweth no one but the Spirit of God. "But we "received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that ritual insight into things invisible; as in 2 Cor. xii. 1.

10—16. 'This is so: (1) Because the Spirit alone can give this insight (10, 11); (2) Because we have received this Spirit (12—16).'

10. The 'Spirit' is spoken of, in the Old Testament, as the source of all wisdom, Job xxxii. 8: in Psalm exxxix. 7, it is the penetrating glance of the Divine knowledge.

ἐρευτᾳ, 'knows through deep inquiry,' Rom. viii. 27; Psalm exxxix. 1.

rà βάθη, 'the profoundest secrets of God, whether of His acts or of His nature.' Comp. τὰ βαθέα τοῦ Σατανᾶ. Rev. ii. 24.

For the general sense, compare Matt. xi. 25—27, 'I thank. Thee... because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes... no man knoweth the Son but the Father: neither knoweth any man the Father sare the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him.'

11. 'It is an inward, not an outward vision.' The very word πνεθμα (spirit) implies, when used of God, the same consciousness of things divine which, when used of man, it implies with regard to things human. For a similar comparison of the human and divine Spirit, see Rom. viii. 16, bond between tool and man.

«δέεν από ξγνωτέν may be slightly distinguished, as in their similar juxtaposition, John xxi.

17; «δέν being the more obvious apprehension, as by the senses, έγνωτεν the more subble, as by the mind. (See 2 Cor. v. 16.)

 This communication of the Spirit is now expressed more definitely in the words τὸ ἰκ τοῦ Υκοῦ ἡμεῖς, as in verse 10, is 'believers generally, but specially the Apostle,' i. c. he conceives of the experience of other Christians through his own, as in Rom. vii. 7—25.

τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ κόσμου. 'The

τό πισίμα τό ἐκ τοῦ θουῖ, ἴνα είδομεν τὰ ὑπό τοῦ θουῦ χαρισθέντα ἡμίν, ¹¹δε καὶ λαλοῦμεν οἰκε διδακτοῖς ἀνθρωπώης σσφίας λόγοις, ἀλλὶ ἐν διδακτοῖς πνεύματος, πνευματικοῖς πνευματικά συγκρίνωτες. 'ψυχικός δὲ ἀνθρωπος οἰκ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ πνεύματος τοῦ θεοῦν μαρία γὰρ ατῆν ἐστοῦ, καὶ οὐ δύναται γνώναι, ότι πνευματικώς ἀνακρίνεται. ¹δό δὲ πνευματικός ἀνακρίνει '[17] πάντα, αὐτός δὲ ὑπό νόθενὸς ἀνακρίνεται. ¹δ'Τζε γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν κυρίου, δε συμβιβάσει αὐτόν; ἡμεῖς δὲ 'νοῦν κυρίου ἔγομεν.

* άγίου after πνεύματος. Β ἀνακρίνει μὲν πάντα. ε νοῦν χριστοῦ.

we might know the things that are freely given to us of God, 13 which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the "Sprint teacheth; "inter-type the present the present sprint and the sprint of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can be know them, because 15 they are sprintally judged of. But the that is spiritually judged of of all things, yet he himself is judged of by no man. For 'who 'knoweth the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct Iling?' But see have the mind of 'the Lord.

spirit of mere human wisdom.' κόσμος, the world, not as in opposition to God, but only as alienated from Him.

τὰ χαρισθέντα=ὅσα ἡτοίμασεν, in verse 9, 'the glory and blessedness of Christians;' perhaps with a slight allusion to the Xmpiepara.

13. Here he returns more directly to the subject of wisdom, from which, in 8—12, he had slightly digressed, recalled by via revipa role icepus: 'As our wisdom is not of this world, so methics is our manner of commenter is our manner of computer is the immediate result of our aprirula insight.' Comp. δρορτα βήματα δ εξε έξον Δνθρώτες Μλλίβαι, 2 Cor. Xii. 4.

συγκρίτοντες (not 'comparing,' but) 'interpreting and explaining' (as in LXX. Gen. xl. 8, 16; xli. 15; Daniel v. 12, 15, 26). #νευματικοῖς may be either neuter, 'by spiritual things,' or masculine, 'to spiritual men.' Probably the latter, as in Gen. xli. 12, συνέκριεν ἡμῖν, 'he interpreted to us.'

14. 'But from its being spiritual, the natural man cannot receive it, as he has no spiritual insight.'

ψυχειός, 'man without communion with God.' See, for the threefold division of πτεῦμα, ψυχή, and σῶμα, 1 Thess. v. 23.

araspireras, 'judged of.' See iv. 34.

15. 'The spiritual man has a new faculty by which he judges all, but cannot be judged by any who have it not. He understands the language in which other men speak, but they understand not the language in which he speaks.'

16. 'No one can judge him, for he has the Spirit of God, and III. '*Κάγω, ἀδολφοί, οἰν ἢδονήθην λαλῆσα ὑμίν ὡς πνευματικοῦς, ἀλλ' ὡς "σαρκίνοις, ὡς νηπίοις ἐν χριστῶς τοὰ δρώμα οὐπα γὰρ δύνασθε ἀλλ' οὐδε [ἐτ.] νῶν δύνασθε 'ἔτι γὰρ σαρκικοί ἐστε. ὅπου γὰρ ὑμῶν [ἤλος καὶ ἔμις, ὁ οἰχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε καὶ κατὰ ὑμῶν [ἤλος καὶ ἔμις, ὁ οἰχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε καὶ κατὰ ὑμῶν [ἤλος καὶ ἔμις, ὁ οἰχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε καὶ κατὰ

* Kal ἐγώ. * καl οὐ . . . ἡδύνασθε . . . οὅτε.

σαρκικοις.
 α καὶ διχοστασίαι aftez ξρις.

1 III. And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto 'fleshly—as unto babes in Christ. I 'gave you milk, " not meat; for hitherto ye were not able to a bear it. Neither yet now are ye able; for yo are yet carnal. For whereas there is among you envying, and strife," are no one can instruct the Spirit of God.' The quotation is from Isaiah xl. 13. The Apostle regards row as identical with *rewμα, and uses it here, from its being the word used in the LXX. where it is, in fact, a translation of ωγ.

συμβιβάζειν is the common word in the LXX. for 'instruct.'

The readings of expion (in B. D.)¹
F. G.) and yperrol (in A. C.) are almost equally balanced. If the latter, the variation of the word, where the sense is the same, is quite after the Apostle's manner, as in ii. 11, and 2 Cor. v. 16 (οίδαμεν and έγνώκαμεν); 2 Cor. x. 1, 2 (πορακαλώ and έδρμαι).

III. 1. câyéa, as in ii. 1: "What I have just been asying was exemplified in our practice," the connexion being, that, as he had not been able to preach the Gospel in the words of human wised because it was not in himself or in the Gospel, so he had not been able to preach it to them in its divine wisdom, because they, not divine wisdom, because they, no thaving the spiritual faculty, were not fit to receive it.

σαρκίνοις, a stronger expression for ψυγικοίς.

In verse 1, A. B. C. J. D. read equations. In verse 3, D. F. G. read educates, in verse 3, D. F. G. read educates, and A. B. C. D. E. J. educates, and A. B. C. D. E. J. educates intended between the two, it must be that educates expresses the nature, and educate the character. But this is too refined for the Apostle's mode of argument; and it therefore seems most natural to suppose that here, and the educates of the educates o νηπίοις, opposed to τελείοις, in i.e. The word νήπιος, and, generally speaking, the figure of 'infancy,' is never used by St. Paul in a good sense. Comp. Gal. iv. 3; Eph. iv. 14.

2. yáka. The figure of 'milk,' which is naturally suggested by yww.oc, is common in Rabbinical phraseology for instruction to beginners, who are called 'sucklings,' rhpu'pt. See Lightf. ad
loc. and compare 1 Pet. ii. 2;
Heb. v. 18.

βρώμα, 'solid food' = στερεία τροφή in Heb. v. 12. The verb is easily supplied from ἐπότισα.

3. δπου, 'since,' as in old English 'where' for 'whereas.' ἄνθρωπον περιπατείτε; 'όταν γὰρ λέγη τις Έγὼ μέν εἰμι Παύλου, ἔτερος δὲ, Ἐγὼ 'Απολλώ, "οὖκ ἄνθρωποί ἐστε;

* οδχὶ σαρκικοί for οδκ ἄνθρωποί.

4 ye not carnal, and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not 'men?

4. ἄνθρωποι, 'mere men.' Compare the expression κατὰ ἄνθρω-Rom. iii. 5 ; Gal. i. 11 ; iii. 15.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. II. 6-III. 4.

Whilst, however, I disclaim any support from mere human wisdom, there is a wisdom which I might have declared to you had you been fit to receive it; a wisdom which has for ages been concealed, and which is even more concealed, from those who wony the destinies of this lower world, but which was for ages designed in the counsels of God for the glory of true believers,—a glory unknown to those who in the pride of human power decorded to a shameful death Him who was the Lord of Glory, unfathomable by any human sense or imagination, but none recealed to us by the Spirit, not of the world, but of do, whereby alone we have an insight into those divine mysteries of which none sless is or can be conscious.

And as the subject of this wisdom is spiritual, so also is the manner of communicating it; there is a divine language which is known to those who have received the new spiritual faculty of Christians, which is unknown to those who are guided only by their natural human intellect. This also was exemplified in my own conduct to you; for this is the reason why I was unable to speak to you on more exalted subjects: it was impossible to introduce them into a sphere of jarring passions and factions which stunt the growth of the spiritual faculty within you.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF SPIRITUAL WISDOM.

Ix considering what was the human wisdom which in this and the previous section is disparaged by the Apostle, it is necessary to bear in mind that it was not the highest, but the lowest, form of intellectual eminence with which he was immediately confronted: not the vigorous and lofty aspirations of Aristotle and Plato, but the hollow and worn-out sophistries of ... the last days of the Greek rhetoricians. Still, although of larsitest a different turn would doubtless have been given to and many and whole argument, if St. Paul had written in the Beligion.

better days of Greece, if the living power of the Gospel had been met, not by a dead form, but by a power which, though of lower origin, and moving in a different sphere, was still living like itself, the general truth here urged remains the same. It is not by intellectual, but by moral and spiritual excellence, that the victories of the Gospel have been achieved: Religion is not Philosophy; Christianity is a religion, not of Exaltation, but of Humiliation.

But, although the two spheres of intellect and of Christianity Spiritual are thus distinct, the Apostle also wishes to show that Wisdom. there is in Christianity an element which, though not itself intellectual, is analogous to that by which intellectual wants are gratified; as though he had said, 'Although the Christian lives in a world of his own, yet in that world he is independent of all beside (what the Greek philosophers would have called αὐτάρκης), and the higher he rises in that world, the more fully his Christian stature is developed, he will find every craving of his nature the more completely satisfied.' This element of Christianity he here introduces under the names of ' wisdom' (σοφία), ' the Spirit' (τὸ πνεῦμα), and (in speaking of his relation to the Corinthian Church) 'solid food' (βρώμα), as distinct from 'milk' (yala), by which they had been actually fed. Taking into comparison the other passages (John iii. 12; xvi, 12; Heb, vi, 1), where a similar contrast is drawn between the higher and lower stages of Christian progress, the following seem the natural results of his language:-

It is not any exhibition of new Christian truths or doctrines, such as his view of righteousness by faith, or of our Lord's nature. There was no practical occasion for the introduction of these to the Corinthian Church, and without some such practical eccasion it would be against his manner to insist upon them. So far as there was any occasion for them, he does not scruple to mention them in this very Epistle, i. 30; v. 7; vi. 11; xv. 24. There was nothing in the Factions (iii. 1—5) which would of necessity have incapacitated them from receiving truths of this kind. Nor does there appear any reason for applying the name of 'wisdom' to these truths more than to others which in this Epistle are unfolded at length, c. g. those which are discussed from the 12th to the 15th chapters.

It would seem, therefore, that the most natural meaning of the words is to be found in the deep spiritual intui- Intuition tions which have always been regarded as the highest of moral privilege of advanced Christian goodness, which were truth. possessed in an extraordinary degree by the first converts. 'A pure heart penetrates the secrets of heaven and hell,' is one of the many sayings of this kind which abound in the celebrated work on 'The Imitation of Christ;' the 'beatific vision' has always been regarded by theologians as the consummation both of our intellectual and moral perfection; and the analogy which is here drawn between the perceptions of the human intellect and the perceptions of the enlightened spirit might be illustrated abundantly from the biographics and the devotions of good men in all ages. What this was in its highest, or at least in its most extraordinary, form in the Apostolical age, may be seen in the account of St. Paul's own rapture in 2 Cor. xii. 1-4, or of St. John in the Apocalypse (Rev. i. 10; iv. 2), where the Apostles are described as being literally 'caught by the spirit' into another world, and hearing and seeing things beyond the power of man to conceive or to What it was in its more ordinary form may be seen in the whole atmosphere of St. John's First Epistle, especially in the connexion between Love and Knowledge which pervades it throughout, and which is remarkably illustrated by St. Paul's description of Love in this Epistle (xiii. 8-12). See also Rom. xi, 33, 34; Eph. i. 8, 17, 18.

This use of the passage also accords with the special worde employed. The phrase 'wisdom,' although suggested Connexion in the first instance by the contrast of the earthly philosophy which he had been disparaging, derives, its religious sense chiefly from the constant use of the word in The Proverbs and in Ecclesiasticus, where 'spirit' it is applied, not to the graining of new truths, theological or natural, but to a deeper practical insight into moral truth. This general sense is further limited in this passage by the indication of its subject, namely, the "glory" or blessedness of Christians, which in verses 8—10 assumes such a prominence as to be almost identified with the 'wisdom' itself that seeks it. And the faculty, the state, by which this wisdom itself that seeks it. And the faculty, the state, by which this wisdom is obtained, it described emphatically as 'spiritual,'—the spirit.' The word is chosen partly from the frequent use of the phrase both in Grock and Hebrew, to express the intellect,'—chiefly as expressive of a direct connexion with God. It is the 'inspiration' which in Scripture is ascribed to every mental gift,' but which is specially applicable to the frame of mind which (to use the modern form of speech founded on the same metaphor) 'breathes the atmosphere' of Heaven.

This same sense also agrees with the general context and occasion. When the Apostle says, 'But to us God The Angrevealed it by His Spirit,' the use of the first person, stle's example. here as elsewhere, indicates that, though speaking of believers generally, he especially refers to his own experience. The consciousness of his spiritual gifts, especially of his spiritual insight into things invisible, was always present with him, and never more so than at the period of these two Epistles.3 And this tendency to dwell on the inward, as distinct from the outward blessings of the Gospel,-on the things which 'eye hath not seen nor ear heard,' as distinguished from the things which the eyes of the first Apostles had seen, and their ears had heard,-was a peculiarity of St. Paul's teaching, noticed even by his adversaries, and apparently attacked by them on the ground of the expressions used in this very passage.4

As this sense best suits the circumstances of the Apostle himself, so also does it suit those of his hearers.

The Corinthian Christians, as was observed before, had no The seeds special need, nor, if they had, was there any especial of the Co-impediment to their reception, of new intellectual rithmans. Truths. But a higher consciousness of the Divine presence; a knowledge deep and comprehensive, as being rooted and grounded in love; an insight into the spiritual world, —were gifts which on the one hand the Apostle might well long

¹ See especially ii. 11, 16; and Gesenius in voce man, 3, c. d.
² See Exod. xxxi, 3; Job xxxii.
8, &c.

³ See xiv. 18; 2 Cor. xii. 1—4.
⁴ See notes to the Introduction to Second Epistle, sub finem.

to give them, and which were yet on the other most alien to their state of faction and bitterness. How could they, who were absorbed in their strifes and contentions, enter into the atmosphere of peace which surrounds the throne of God? How could they, who were for ever insisting on particular names and party watchwords, enjoy the vision where all else is lost in the sense of communion with Christ? Controversy and party-spirit may sharpen the natural faculties of shrewdness and disputation; but few ains more dim the spiritual faculty by which alone all things are rightly judged. These disputes and rivatires were of the flesh '(rapsized), no less than the sensual passions which are commonly so classed; and if so, they have no place in heaven, they are directly opposed to 'the Spirit.'

THE FACTIONS (CONTINUED),

THE LEADERS OF THE CORINTHIAN PARTIES.

5¹Τί οὖν ἐστὰν ᾿Απολλῶς; τί δέ ἐσταν Παῦλος; διάκονοι, δι ὧν ἐπιστεύσατε, καὶ ἐκάστῳ ὡς ὁ κύριος ἔδωκεν. ἐγὸὰ ἐφότευσα, ᾿Απολλῶς ἐπότισεν, ἀλλὰ ὁ θεὸς ηὕξανεν, బῶστε οῦτε ὁ φυτείων ἐστάν τι οῦτε ὁ ποτίζων, ἀλλὶ ὁ

* τίς οδν έστὶ Παῦλος, τίς δὲ 'Απολλώς, άλλ' ή.

s 'What then is "Apollos? and 'what is "Paul? " Ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to 'each cone'. I 'planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase; so 'that neither is he that planteth any thing, neither

· 5. From the general tone of what follows it seems (6-15) that even in the preceding verses (iii. 1-4) there was something of an apology for himself; as if the Corinthians, or at least the party of Apollos, had said, 'Apollos has led us on from these simple beginnings; you have done nothing for us, except laying the foundation.' To which he answers, (1) In iii. 1-4, 'I could not do anything more, because of your own incapacity.' (2) In iii. 5—9, 'We are all insignificant in God's sight: both he who lavs the foundation and he who builds upon it.' (3) In iii. 10-15, 'At the same time, the great work is done by him who lavs the foundation: though the superstructure may be very imperfect.'

ri ον 'Āνολλώς; 'What is Apollos, or Paul (for once I recognise your party names)? Mere instruments (ἐἀωνον), through whom you were converted '(traστιόσατ, as in Rom. xiii. 11). The difference of the reading of the more ancient MSS. from the Rec. Text is here remarkable, (1) as more abrupt and startling—ri for ric, and δtλ η omitted: (2) as giving the true order of the names —' Apollos and Paul' (Apollos being eridently the prominent name here appealed to by those whom the Apostle chiefly censures); whilst later MSS, have inverted the order, to give to the name of Paul its usual and natural preeminence.

rai εκάστω κ.τ.λ. 'And only with the powers which their Master (ὁ εύρως, compare Rom. xii. 5) distributed to each of the teachers.' Compare Rom. xii. 3: ἐκάστω ως ὁ θεὸς ἐμέρισε.

καὶ=καὶ ταῖτ τῶτα. 'And this too.'

6. tápirusem — iráruse. This intercontrast agrees with the history in Acts aviii. 27—xix. 1, where the influence of Apollos at Contrath is spoken of as distinct from, and subsequent to, that of Paul. This is strangely paraphrased by some of the Fathers, 'Ego cate-chumenum feci—Apollo baptizavit.' See Optatus De Chrism. Donatist. Book v. p. 30.

7. 71, 'anything great.' Compare Gal. ii. 6. αὐξάνων θεός. δό φυτεύων δὲ καὶ ὁ ποτίζων ἐν εἰσιν, ἔκαστος δὲ τὸν ίδιον μισθον λήμψεται κατὰ τὸν ίδιον κόπον. θεοῦ γάο ἐσιμε συνεργοί θεοῦ γεώργιο, θεοῦ οἰκοδομή ἐστε. ¹⁰κατὰ τὴν χάρυ τοῦ θεοῦ τὴν δοθεῖσάν μιο ώς σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων θεμέλιον ἔθηκα, ἄλλος δὲ ἐποικοδομεί. ἐκαστος δὲ βλεπέτο πῶς ἐποικοδομεί. ¹¹θεμέλιον πέθεικα.

he that watereth; but "he that giveth the increase, even God".

8 Now he that planteth and he that waterth are one, and each one shall receive his own reward according to his own slabour. For we are "God's fellow-labourers': 'God's his sobandry, God's building are ye'. According to the grace of God which 'was given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder I "haid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. Bor the Illet 'each one look' how he buildeth thereon. For other λήμψεται, i. e. 'not from man, but from God, who can judge of the value of each man's labour;' the germ of iv. 1—5.

 The position of 9εοῦ shows that it is emphatic all through this verse.

yúp gives the reason for *\tilde{\ell}\til έσμεν, 'the teachers,' έστε, 'the taught.'

γτώργων, 'a field'= arvum.
The word occurs only in this place in the N. T. Probably from this metaphor arose the frequency of 'Georgius,' 'George,' as a Christian name.

With οἰκοδομή the figure is changed from a field to a house —from agriculture to architecture, in order to bring out more clearly the difference between the various kinds of work.

10. κατά την χάριν. Referring to ἐκάστφ . . . ἔδωκεν in 5. Compare Rom. xii. 3.

αρχιτέκτων, 'master of the works.'

σοφός, 'as a "skilful" or "clever" architect. Compare Ex. xxxv. 25, 35; xxxvi. 1 (LXX.); so Ecclus. xxxviii. 31: ἐκαστος ἐντῷ ἔργῳ σοφίζεται. The words σοφός ἀρχιτένεν occur in Isa. iii. 3 (LXX.).

čeneroe e.r.A. The general character of the warning implies the same wide participation in the duties of teaching, as is implied in the state of the Corinthian Church indicated in chapter xii. For the Apostle's claim to have founded their Church, compare iv.

15: 4 begot you.'

Sτμίλιον γάρ. The connexion is: 'Let every one take heed how he builds a superstructure; for the foundation has been laid once only for all, by me; the superstructure is now the sole task that remains.'

 $\pi \tilde{\omega}_{\varsigma}$, 'with what materials' (see verse 12).

· ἐποικοδομεῖ, οἰκοδομεῖν in the N.T. has constantly the sense of γὰρ ἄλλον οὐδεὶς δύναται θεῖναι παρὰ τὸν κείμενον, ὄς ἐστιν "χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς. ¹²εἰ δε τις ἐποικοδομεῖ ἐπὶ τὸν θεμελιον" χριστὸν, ἄργυρον, λίθους τιμίους, ξύλα, χόρτον, καλάμην, δεκάστου τὸ ἐργονφαιερὸν γενήσεται: ἡγὰρ ἡμερα δηλώσει,

Τπσοῦς ὁ χριστός,

b Add rouros.

foundation can no 'one lay than that 'lies there', which is 12 "Christ Jesus". But if any 'one build upon 'the foundation 13 gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble, 'each one's work 'will be made manifest: for the day 'will declare it,

'advancement' or development of the moral character. In this place, as in viii. 10, it is used in a bad, or at least a neutral sense.

Θεμέλιον, sc. λίθον (masculine in Hellenistic Greek).

πορά, 'beyond,' or 'besidez' (as in Romais for the comparative). Christ Jesus, i.e. 'not Christ Jesus, i.e. 'not Christ Himself' (as in ii. 2): hence the name as full length: 'the Historical Person of Christ, the one unchangeable element of Christianity' (De Wette). Comp. Heb. xiii. 8: 'Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.'

For the metaphor, compare Matthew xxi. 42; Ephes. ii. 20; 1 Pet. ii. 6 ('the chief cornerstone ').

12. The metaphor here passes on to the building of different edifices on the same foundation. 'There may either be a palace or a hovel.'

χρυσόν κ.τ.λ. Compare the 'gold, silver, and stone' of the Athenian Parthenon in Acts xvii. 29.

λίθους ripiouς may be 'costly marbles;' but more probably 'jewels,' as in Rev. xxi. 19. ξύλα, 'boards or posts' for the walls.

χόρτος, 'dried grass,' for the interstices in the mud walls.

καλάμη, 'straw' for the thatched roof. See Suidas in voce.

As the 'wisdom of the fullgrown' in ii. 6-iii. 4, was spiritual, not intellectual, insight, so here the succeeding verses (14-18) show that the superstructure is moral, not theoretical, advancement. 'Some say that these words are spoken in reference to doctrines; to me, however, it appears that he speaks concerning practical virtue and vice, and that he is preparing for the accusation of the incestuous person. Of gold, silver, and precious stones, he speaks on the one hand as the emblems of virtue; of wood, hay, stubble, as the opposites of virtue, for which bath been prepared the fire of hell.' (Theodoret.)

13.—15. 'The nature of every one's work or superstructure shall sooner or later be known; for Great Day of the Lord is at hand, which shall dawn in a flood of fire. The house of gold and silver shall be lit up by its daxwood and thatch shall be burnt up. And not only so, but whereas the builder whose work can endure this trial shall be rewarded, the builder whose house is con-

ότι ἐν πυρὶ ἀποκαλύπτεται, καὶ ἐκάστου τὸ ἔργον ὁποῖόν ἐστιν τὸ πῦρ *αὐτὸ δοκιμάσει. ¹⁴εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον ⁶μενεῖ δ ἐπφκοδόμησεν, μισθὸν λήμψεται: ¹⁵εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον

* Om. αὐτό.

^b μένει

because it 'is revealed in' fire; and the fire 'will prove each one's' work of what sort it is. If any 'one's work abide which he 'built thereon, he shall receive a reward: if any sumed will lose his reward, having nothing to show; and though he himself, as having built on the true foundation, will Saved as be saved, yet he will come out singed and scorched as by an escape out of a burning ruin.' Although the argument is passing into a more general application, yet the thought of the teachers is still predominant; and the point on which he insists is, that if bad moral consequences are, through the means of their instruction, developed from the fundamental truths of Christianity which he had taught; their instruction, so far from deserving to be highly prized, will by God's judgment be condemned as worthless, and they themselves will escape that judgment with difficulty. It is possible that this whole image, as addressed to the Corinthians, may have been suggested, or illustrated, by the conflagration of Corinth under Mummius; the stately temples standing amidst the universal destruction of the meaner buildings. (See Paus. Corinth, passim.)

ἔργον in later Greek, and in architectural language, is used for a building, like 'opera' in Latin. 1 Esdr. vi. 10: τὰ ἔργα ταῦτα ξεμελοῦτε. Herodian, Hist. i.: πλεῖστα καὶ κάλλιστα ἔργα τῆς πόλεως κατεκάη.

ely
ni- li ner F
th, je ar- b for to
in. 3

† ἡμίρα, 'the Day of the Coming of the Lord' See Heb. x. 25; Rom. xiii. 12, in which last passage, as here, there is implied the dawn of light after the long night of this mortal life. Possibly the idea of 'judgment', as in iv. 3, is mixed up with it. Possibly also, the idea of the mer alpase of time, like 'longa dies' in Latin. (See Grotius ad loc.) Compare Malachi iii. 1, 2, 3: iv. 1: 'The Lord shall suddenly come to His Temple. But who may abide the day of His coming? for He is like a refiner's fire . . . and He shall purify the sons of Levi. Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble (raλάμη).' And although not expressly stated, it is implied that the day is near, as a trial which would sweep away the very fabric which was reared before their eves.

Also it may be, 'the full daylight shall show it:' like the French expression 'en plein jour.' (See notes to iv. 3.)

άποκαλύπτεται, 'the Day is to be revealed' (the 'præsens futurascens,' as in Matt. xxv. 13, 31, &c.: John xxi. 22, 23).

έν πυρί, i. e. according to the usual image under which the Last Day is represented; coming, not with the dawn of a common κατακαήσεται, ζημιωθήσεται, αὐτὸς δὲ σωθήσεται, οὕτως δὲ ὡς διὰ πυρός. 16 οὖκ οὖδατε ὅτι ναὸς θεοῦ ἐστὲ καὶ τὸ rone's work be burned, he rwill suffer loss, but he himself 16 shall be saved,—yet so ras through' fire. Know ye not that ye are 'God's temple', and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

morning, but in a blaze of fire, in the midst of which Christ Himself shall appear. (2 Thess. i. 8; ii. 8.) κατακαήσεται, Hellenistic for the Attic κατακαυθίσεται.

ζημιωθήσεται [τὸν μισθόν], 'he shall lose his reward,' not 'shall be punished.'

abrèc εὲ σωθήσεται. The same fire which throws a halo of glory round the good (iv. 5; Matt. xiii. 43; Rev. xxi. 24; Judg. v. 31; Dan. xii. 3), and destroys the bad (2 Thess. ii. 8; Rev. xviii. 8; xx. 9), also purifies the imperfect. The personal faith of the teacher saves himself from destruction, but it is at the cost of pain and suffering-in this instance, of seeing his work destroyed and his labour lost-as a merchant who escapes from shipwreck, but at the cost of his property. Compare the fire in Dan. iii. 22, which, whilst it burnt the executioners, was to the three children 'as it had been a moist whistling wind' (Song of the Three Children, 27).

Compare the 'baptism of fire', in Marti, iii. I, 12, which supplies the same images of illumination, destruction, and purification; and the 'salting with fire,' in Mark, ix. 49, both for preservation and destruction. At the same time, although the passage naturally suggests the idea of purification, or of suffering, the primary idea is simply that of a difficult scape. Lee expresses that the Aposel.

ώς expresses that the Apos is speaking metaphorically. češ wupće, 'through the midst of the fire;' apparently a proverbial expression in Hebraistic Greek, ike prope ambustus in its prope ambustus in its 2 more in 11 to the ε wpće). Ps. Ivil. 4 (δεί πυρός). δε πυρός ανέσεις, Artenid. Oneiron. 1.9 Cs. For a similar confusion of the two meanings of δεί, see 1 Pet. iii. 20: δει ε σόθερα a ξε΄ δέστος.

The whole passage is famous, as having given occasion to two interpretations, each generally received in its time, and now rejected. First, that of Chrysostom, (Ecumenius, and Theophylact; that 'the false teacher shall be preserved in the fire of hell for ever,'-which is equally condemned by the words and by the spirit of the Apostle. Secondly, the opinion of many Roman Catholic writers, that it alludes to the fire of purgatory. But this argument is contrary to the whole context, which represents the salvation as taking place at the same moment as the conflagration and the coming of the day of the Lord. It will probably be no longer used even in controversy, since its formal condemnation by the great Roman Catholic commentator Estius.

16. He here returns to the general argument against party-spirit, and thus passes from the image of a building in progress to the image of a building completed, and from the image of a πνεθμα τοῦ θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῶν; ¹⁷εἴ τις τον ναὸν τοῦ θεοῦ φθείρει, φθερεῖ °αὐτον ὁ θεός· ὁ γὰρ ναὸς τοῦ θεοῦ ἄγιος ἐστω, οὕτωές ἐστε ὑμεῖς. ¹⁸μηδεῖς ἐαυτοὺ ἐξαπατάτω εἴ τις δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἴυαι ἐν ὑμῶν ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, μωρὸς γενέσθω, ἴως

* τοῦτον for αὐτόν.

17 If any 'one destroys' the temple of God, him 'will God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which ye are.

18 Let no 'one deceive himself: if any 'one 'seemeth to be wise among you' in this 'age, let him become a fool, that he may building generally to that of the Temple in particular, as in Eph. ii. 20, 21.

rate. Sue is not 'a Temple,' as if one out of many, but 'Gon many, but 'Gon Temple,' presented in every portion of the Christian society. Under this more definite figure ger incurred by those who corrupted the Christian society by their false teaching, and, having hefore said that such a one would except with loss and difficulty, he speake only of the punishment, without speaking of the seenes.

φθείρειν in the LXX. and in the New Testament seems to have lost the sense of 'defile,' and merely to retain that of 'mar' or 'destroy.' See the use of the word in Exod. x. 15; Isaiah xxiv. 3, 4. It is not the word usually employed for divine judgments, but is here adopted for the sake of describing the nunishment by the same word as the offence: 'God requites like with like.' Comp. Acts xxiii. 2, 3: 'Ananias commanded to smite (τύπτειν) him on the mouth-Then Paul said unto him, God shall smite (τύπτειν μέλλει) thee. thou whited wall.'

The Authorised Version, following the Vulgate (violaverit . . disperdet), has used two different words in the translation for the one word of the original.

17. The image of the Temple, — even the etymology of the Greek word (raoc, raistr) — leads him to the indwelling presence of the Spirit of God.

οῖτινές refers not to ναός, but to ἄνιός, 'and ve are holy'

to fayes, 'and ye are holy.'

18. He now returns to the general subject begun in verse 5, dropping any particular reference to the difference between the foundation and the super-structure — between himself and Apollos (iv. 6). — and condemning generally the tendency to magnify one teacher above another for his intellectual gifts, on the ground.

That rhetorical gifts are in themselves worthless (18—21);
 That the differences created by these gifts amongst the teachers, are much less than what they have in common (21—23);

(3) That God alone can judge who is worthy of true approbation (iv. 1—5).

μηδείς ξαυτόν έξαπατάτω, 'let not any one deceive himself by too high expectations of himself,' referring to δοκεί. γένηται στφός. 19ή γὰρ στοφία τοῦ κόσμου τούτου μωρία παρά θεω εστίν. γέγραπται γάρ Οδρασσόμευς τοῦς σοφοῦς εν τῆ πανουργία αὐτῶν. 20 καὶ πάλιν Κύριος γυνώσκει τοῦς διαλογισμούς τῶν στοφῶν, ότι εἰστυ μάταιοι. 10 ἄστε μη διαλογισμούς τῶν στοφῶν, ότι εἰστυ μάταιοι.

Add τφ̂, and so Lachm. Ed. 1.

19 become wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, 'He 'that taketh' the wise in their' so craftiness.' And again, 'the Lord knoweth the thoughts of 21 the wise, that they are vain.' Therefore let no 'one boast in

For alών and κόσμος, see on i. 20.

παρὰ τῷ ઉτῷ, 'in God's judgment.' Compare Rom. ii. 13. The quotation seems to be from

The quotation seems to be from Job v. 13 (LXX.): ¿ καταλαμβάνων σοφούς έν τη φορνήσει. It is remarkable, (1) as being the only reference to the Book of Job which the New Testament contains, with the exception of the historical allusion in James v. 11; (2) as being taken from the speeches, not of Job, but of Eliphaz; and (3) as being so altered as to be barely recognisable : δρασσόμενος (possibly a provincialism) is substituted for kaταλαμβάνων, as a stronger and livelier expression ('grasping' or 'catching with the hand;' so LXX, Ps. ii. 12; Lev. ii. 2; v. 12; and so Herod. iii. 13; Jos. B. J. III. viii. 6; Dionys. Ant. ix. 21), and maroupyin for opeνήσει, which gives the passage a darker meaning (see Arist. Eth. vi. 12, § 9, where the two words are opposed as the worse and better forms of wisdom).

iν τἢ πανουργία, i. e. either, (1) 'by means of their own craftiness;' or, (2) 'in the mulest of it.'
20. From Ps. xciv. 11; literally from the LXX. (xciii.) except in the substitution of σοφῶν for the original ἀνθωώπων. But there seems to be a reminiscence of the original in the next words, ἐν ἀνθρώπους, 'in mere men.' Compare the note on verse 4. 21—23, πάντα γὰρ ὑμῶν. Both

'All things words are emphatic: 'All things' - not are yours. merely this or that teacher, but all of them alike - 'exist not for their own power or glory, but for the sake of you their disciples. 'The Church was not made for the teachers, but the teachers for the Church: Paul, Apollos, and Kephas, each with their different gifts, strongly contrasted as they are, are yet united by being your common This was all that property.' the argument required; but he is carried on, according to his manner when the privileges of Christians come before him (see Rom. viii. 38; xi. 33), to dilate on the whole range of God's gifts to them. And, as the idea of the teachers breaks itself up for the sake of greater vividness into the several parts of Paul, Apollos, and Kephas, so also the idea of the world is expanded to its utmost extent, not merely in the lower sense of worldly greatness (19, 20) which had suggested the word in this place, but in the sense of the whole created universe, and as

δεὶς καιγάσθω & αλθρώποις πώντα γὰρ ὑμῶν ἐστίν. ¾ ἔτε Παῦλος εἶτε 'Απολλῶς εἶτε Κηφῶς, εἶτε κόσμος εἶτε ζω ὑμῶν ἐτε θύωτος, εἶτε ἐνεστώτα εἶτε μελλουτα, πώντα ὑμῶν, ὑμῶνς δὲ χριστοῦ, χριστὸς δὲ θεοῦ. Τι. 'οῦτως ἡμῶς Αγγιζεθω ἀθρωπος, ὡς ὑπηρέτας χριστοῖ καὶ οἰκουμόνους

* Add ἐστίν.

22 men: for all things are your's, whether Paul or Apollos or Kephas, or the world or life or death, or things present or 23 things to come,—all are your's, and ye are Christ's, and Christ 1 is Go'ds. IV. 'So let a man account of us, as °'scrvants of growing out of this, or contained in it, the utmost contrasts which imagination can suggest, whether in life or death—in the present or the future state of existence.

'All this is yours; but then' -(partly as a warning to the taught as well as the teachers, partly from the natural impetus, as it were, of the sentence, which bears him up to the highest sphere of human thought)-'remember that this vast concatenation of the universe does not end here. Even you, who are the lords of all creation, who form as it were the link between earth and heaven, yourselves are but part of that golden chain which must be followed up till it unites you to Christ, and even further yet, up to the presence of God Himself. Thus he draws the twofold lesson .- 'You who are thus united with the highest objects in the universe must not degrade yourselves to become the followers of any but Christ. You, although the lords of all, are still the servants of Christ, as He also pleased not Himself, but did the will of His Father.' It is possible that the last words, but Christ of God,' may have been inserted to obviate any exclusive inference which might have been drawn by the party 'of Christ,' had he closed with the preceding words. But it may also be only the last result of the climax of his sentence (comp. xi. 3).

IV. 1. To this twofold lesson the following argument immediately attaches itself, which is, like the preceding, obscured by being addressed partly (iii. 21-23; iv. 1-6a) to the Church; partly (iii. 12-15; 18-20; iv. 6b, 7, 8) to the teachers. 'The particular wisdom of the several teachers is nothing in comparison with that Christianity which is possessed by all of you (iii. 22, 23); you are to regard us not as superhuman (iii. 18-21), but as subordinate to Christ; as mere stewards, whose only business is to preach faithfully the secrets of God which have been intrusted to them.

ούτως refers to ώς. In classical Greek it would be τοιούτους, οἶοι ἃν εἶεν ὑπηρέται.

ärθρωπος, 'anyone' (like τ'κ; or 'man' in German).

iπηρίτας. More emphatic than δοῦλοι, as expressing subordination; being the word used in classical Greek for the inferior, as contrasted with the superior, magistrates (ἄρχοντες). Compare, for the general sense, Luke xxii.

μυστηρίων θεοῦ ³²ὧδε. λοιπὸν ζητεῖται ἐν τοῖς οἰκονόμοις ἵνα πιστός τις εύρεθῆ. ³ἐμοὶ δὲ εἰς ἐλάχιστόν ἐστω ἴνα ὑφ՝ ὑμῶν ἀσακριθῶ ἡ ὑπὸ ἀυθρωπίνης ἡμέρας: ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν ἀνακρίνω '(οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐμαυτῷ σύνοιδα, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν τούτφ ἐδεὶ.

O 86.

2 Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God here. Moreover ait is required in stewards, that one be found faithful. But to me it is a very small thing that I should be 'judged by' you, 4 or by man's 'day: yea, I judge not mine own self (for I know

26; 2 Cor. i. 24; and the ideal of a Christian governor or teacher preserved in the Papal title 'Servus Servorum.' The same sense is conveyed by the word διάκονοι, in iii. 5.

oicoτόμους. Compare verse 2, and ix. 16, 17 (oicoroµjar πεπίστευμαι); and for the general sense xv. 10: 'Not I, but the grace of God;' Luke xvii. 10: 'We are unprofitable servants,' Acts iii. 12: 'Why look ye upon us, as though by our own power?'

upon us, as though by our own power?'
μυστήρια, 'truths hidden once, but now revealed to Christ's servants.'

2. If Jåe (in A. B. C. D. F. G. and most of the Versions) is preferred to ô ĉi, λοιπόν has probably something of its modern Romaic sense of 'therefore' (as in Acts xxvii. 20); and δέα must be 'in this matter' (as in Rev. xiii. 10, 18; xiv. 12; xwii. 9). In his second edition Lachmann joins it o θεο, in his first to λοιπόν.

ζητείται Β. ζητείτε A. C. D. ζήτητε G. The confusion arises from the similarity of sound in Romaic between ε and αι.

'All that remains to be said about us is this: Do not praise or blame us; only require us to be faithful.'

3—5. The main point is to warn them against being overhasty in their praise (see especially åhλ' oic tr rofing delecalogua, and hλ' oic tr rofing delecalogua, and ar $i srance); but the expressions $ipol $i$ ist 2\text{delecalogua}, and $a$ sports' or $i oxione, indicate that they were also to be warned (as before in iii. 1–9) against disparaging Paul in comparison with the others.

 έμοὶ ἐἐ, (1) 'to speak in my own person,' as ii. 1; iii. 1; or, (2) 'to speak for myself, whatever others may say.'

ira ἀνακριθώ for ἀνακριθήναι, substitution of ïra with the subjunctive for the infinitive, as in the modern Romaic.

άνακραθώ, 'judged of,' or 'inquired into,' whether for blame or praise; see iii. 15, 16.

άσθρωσίνης ἡμέρος, probably used in contradistinction to ½ ἡμέρα τοῦ τορίου, but also perhap, for 'judgment,' according to the analogy of 'diem diesere' in Latin, "days—man for 'arbiter' 'daghen," to 'summon' to 'arbiter' 'daghen,' to 'summon' in Dutch. As, however, there is no instance of this use in common Greek, Jerome (Qt. ad Algasiam, 10) supposes it to be a Cilician provincialism. (See also note to iii. 13.)

4. ουδέν γαρ έμαυτώ σύνοιδα, ' Ι καίωμαι), ὁ δὲ ἀνακρίνων με κύριός ἐστιν. δώστε μὴ πρὸ καιροῦ τι κρίνετε, ἐως ὰν ἐλθη ὁ κύριος, δς καὶ φωτίσει τὰ κρυπτὰ τοῦ σκότους καὶ φανερώσει τὰς βουλὰς τῶν καρδιῶν. καὶ τότε ὁ ἔπαινος γενήσεται ἐκάστφ ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ.

Ταῦτα δὲ, ἀδελφοί, μετεσχημάτισα εἰς ἐμαυτὸν καὶ ᾿Απολλὰ δι' ὑμὰς, ἴνα ἐν ἡμῦν μάθητε τὸ μὴ ὑπὲρ ἣ χέγρα-

* Lachm. ed. 1. 'Απολλών, όπλρ δ γέγραπται.

nothing 'against myself, 'yet not by this am I' justified), but He is that judgeth me is the Lord. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall 'each one have 'his praise 'from God.

6 Now these things, brethren, I rtransferred in a figure' to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; that in us ye might learn' know nothing within 'or 'against myself.' He speaks of himself in reference to his relations with the Corinthian Church. (The translation of the Auth Version, 'by myself,' is an obsolete, though still a provincial, form of speech for the same thought.)

Compare 1 John iii. 20': 'If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.'

κύρτός, i. e. 'Christ,' as appears from the next verse.

 τότε, 'then, and not before, shall the due approbation be awarded.'
 ἐπαινος, 'his own due praise.'

Compare Rom. ii. 29. ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, 'from God after the judgment of Christ.'

6. μετοχημάτισος, 'I said all the party leaders in the persons of myself and Apollos, in order to exemplify with less offence in the case of those parties what belongs equally to the party of Kephas; and in the case of Apollos and Paul themselves what may be said even with greater force of the subordinate leaders.' For similar instances of this 'transferring' see notes on ix. 20.

έν ήμῖν, 'in our examples.' τὸ μὴ ὑπὲρ α γέγραπται. Great confusion prevails here in the MSS. (1) A. B. C. read &. D. . E. F. G. J. ö. (2) doovers occurs in C. D3. E2. J. and most of the Versions, and is omitted in A. B. D1. E1. F. G. and the Vulgate. (3) D. E. omit μή. (4) D1. reads έν υμίν for έν ημίν. (5) F. G. omit τό. å best suits the sense, which implies a reference, not to a single passage, but to the general spirit of many passages. oporeir is required to complete the grammatical sentence, and probably was inserted to avoid the abruptness of the omission. The sense, therefore, will be: 'Learn that wellknown lesson, not to go beyond what the Scriptures prescribe' (like the classical proverb, ne quid nimis).

The phrase γίγραπται naturally points to such passages in the Old Testament as those quoted in i. 19, 31; iii. 19.

πται, "να μὴ εξι ύπὸρ τοῦ ἐνὸς φυσοῦσθε κατὰ τοῦ ἐτρου. "τες γάρ σε διακρίνει; τι ἐδ ἔςτες δι οἰκ ἐλαβες; εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐλαβες, τί καυχῶσαι ὡς μὴ λαβών; "ηδη κεκορεσμένοι ἐστέ, ηδη ἐπλουτήσατε, τωρὶς ἡμῶν ἐβασιλεύσατε. καὶ ὀφελόν γε ἐβασιλεύσατε, τω καὶ ημείς ὑμῶν συμβασιλεύσωμεν.

* Add pooreir.

not to 'be above 'the things which are' written, that no one 'o be puffed up for 'the one against' five other. For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? 'and if now thou didst receive it, why soles thou 'boast, as if thou 'didst not?' 'Even now ye are full, 'even now ye are rich, 'without us ye 'reigned as kings', and I would 'ye 'fad reigned', that we also might reign the size of the els bπέρ τοῦ ἐνὸς . . . κατὰ τοῦ ἐτέρου, 'for the one of your two teachers against the other;' alluding to the reference just made to himself and Apollos.

γα μή φυσιοῦσθε. This and Gal.
iv. 17 (ἐνα ζηλοῦνε) are the only violations in the N. T. of the rule of Attic Greek, which requires a subjunctive with ἐνα.

8. He writes as if with the bitterness of feeling with which, from time to time, he contrasts his deserts and his fortune (cf. xv. 19); and as if reminding them that those who were opposed to him need not take so much pains to disparage him, he was low enough already.

actopesquires... inNowipsur.*
In his first edition, Lachmann gave additional liveliness to the sentence by an interrogative punctuation; and this at any rate is the sense of the clauses. "Do you think you have already reached the end of your Christian career." Have you think you have already careful for the property of the propert ibankioure; 'Are you indeed at the head of the Christian world—first in the glory of the Messiah's kingdom?' (Compare i. 2; xiv. 36.) For the metaphor of wealth, comp. 2 Corviii. 9; Revelation ii. 9; iii. 17; Matthew v. 3. For that of reigning, comp. vi. 2; Matt. xix. 28: Luke xxii. 30; 2 Tim.

#20, 'even now,' indicates the extravagance of supposing that they had at that time grasped all the gifts which belonged only to the kingdom of Christ, not yet come.

χωρίς ἡμῶν points to the absurdity of their setting themselves up above, or independently of, the Apostles. Compare the same thought in verse 15.

δρέλον . r. λ. 'your reign, your prosperity, is indeed good in itself, if it were not for the proud and sectarian spirit which disfigures it.' Compare Gal. iv. 17, 18: 'They zealously affect you, but not well; yoa, they would exclude you, that yo might affect them. But it is good to be zealously affected always in a

δοκῶ γάρ, ὁ θεὸς ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἀποστόλους ἐσχάτους ἀπέδειξεν, ὡς ἐπιθωνατίους, ὅτι θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν τῷ κόσμος, καὶ ἀγγάλους. ¹⁰ημες μορο διά χριτός, ὑμεῶς δὲ ἀρόνιμοι ἐν χριστῷ ἡμεῶς ἀσθενῶς, ὑμεῶς δὲ ἀρχυροί ὑμεῶς ἐσδοξοι, ἡμεῶς δὰ ἀτιμοι. ¹¹ἄχρι τῆς ἄρτι ἀρος καὶ τενώμεν καὶ ἀνοὰμεν καὶ ἀγυμινιτεύομεν καὶ ἀγολος καὶ τενώμεν καὶ ἀγολος καὶ τενώμεν καὶ ἀγολος

* Add Sri after vda.

^b γυμνητεύομεν.

9 you. For I think "God rest forth" us the apostles last, as it were appointed unto death, for we "were made a spectacle unto 10 the world and to angels and to men. We are fools for Christ's ake, but ye are wise in Christ; see are weak, but ye are 11 "mighty; ye are honourable, but we are despised. Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst and are naked good thing, and not only when I am present with you.'

Yao, in 9, depends on this

γάρ, in 9, depends on this clause.

9. 'Ye sit enthroned as kings: the area pointed as victims in the last act of the world's history; the whole world, whether angels or men, are the spectators, and our death is the celd.' The imagery is drawn from the games (3eraper) in the amplitheatre. The remains of a stadium and amphitheatre, which may have been so used, are still to be seen at Corinth (see Introduction, p. 5).

For the phrase 'angels and men,' comp. xiii. 1.

izyárove... irtíkurarice, 'the lant appointed to death.' These words seem to refer te the band of gladiators brought out last for death, the vast range of an amphitheatre under the open sky well representing the magnificent vision of all created beings, from men up to angels, gazing on the dreafful death-truggle; and then the contrast of the selfish Corinthians sitting by unconcerned and unmoved at the awful spectacle. Compare Senec'a descriptot.

tion (Provid. ii.) of the wise man struggling with fate: 'Ecce spectaculum dignum ad quod respiciat intentus operi suo Deus.'

τοὺς ἀποστόλους. What follows shows that he is thinking chiefly of himself; but the expression itself includes also the original Apostles.

10. Az verses 8 and 9 contain an elaborate contrast, so in verse 10 the same idea is still continued in a series of shorter contrasts, rising, however, out of the plaintive strain of verse 9 into a swell of triumphant exultation, in the full consciousness with the sufferings of Christ, and invested (so to speak) with a similar glory. The three contrasts correspond to those in 1.27.

 άχρι τῆς ἄρτι ὅρας, 'even at the moment of my writing my wants stare me in the face. It is now as when you knew me at Corinth.'

γυμνιτεύομεν, 'we shiver in the cold.' (Compare 2 Cor. xi. 27.) The form in the Roc. Text, γυμνητεύομεν, has arisen from the similar pronunciation of ι and η. λαφιξόμεθα καὶ ἀστατοῦμεν ¹¹καὶ κοπιῶμεν ἐργαζόμενοι ταῖς ἱδίαις χερσίν, λοιδορούμενοι εὐλογοῦμεν, διωκόμενοι ἀνεχόμεθα, ¹¹βλαστόημούμενοι παρακαλοῦμεν, ώς περικαβάρματα τοῦ κόσμου ἐγενήθημεν, πάντων περίψημα ἔως ἀστι.

14Οὐκ ἐντρέπων ὑμᾶς γράφω ταῦτα, ἀλλ' ὡς τέκνα μου

12 and are buffeted and have no certain dwelling-place, and labour working with our own hands; being reviled we bless, being 13 persecuted we suffer it, being defamed we 'exhort,—'as the fith of the world "were' we made', the offscouring of all things unto this day.

14 I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved άστατοῦμεν (the word occurs only here) 'homeless,' a peculiar grief in the ancient world. Compare Matt. viii. 20; x. 23; Heb. xi. 37.

κοπιῶμεν ἰργ. ταῖς ἰδ. χερείν. That he had worked with his own hands at Corinth appears from Acts xviii. 3; 1 Cor. ix. 6; 2 Cor. xi. 7—12; and that he was doing so at the time of his writing this Epistle, appears from Acts xx. 34.

 λοιδορούμετοι κ.τ.λ. 'And not only do we suffer, but with none but the Christian weapons of resistance.' Comp. Matt. v. 39,
 This is the earliest instance of such language being used.

βλασόημούμενοι Β(e sil.). D. E. F. G. J., δυσφημούμενοι, A. C. in either case 'calumniated' παρακαλούμεν: (1) 'we offer consolation;' or (2) as in 16, 'we entreat men to follow our example.' Compare 2 Cor. i. περικαθομαντα and περίψημα, both have the original signification of 'officourings' as in Arrian, Diss. Epict. iii. 22, and Jer. xxii. 28 (Symm.), but also the additional sense of 'scapegoat,' or 'expiatory sacrifice,' specially applied to human victims such as those described in Arnold's Rome, iii. 46. In classical Greek κάθαρμα is the usual word for such human victims (Schol. ad Aristoph. Plut. 454, Eq. 1133). But περικάθαρμα is so used in the only place where it occurs in the LXX. περικάθ. δέ δικαίου άνομος, Prov. xxi. 18. In like manner weofulnua is used in Tobit v. 19. άργύριον . . . περίψ. του παιδίου ημών γένοιτο, and is so explained in the Lexicons of Cyril, Hesychius, and Suidas; the last gives as an instance that such a victim was generally addressed with the words περίψημα ήμῶν γενοῦ (explained as σωτηρία or απολύτρωσις), and then cast into the sea, as if a sacrifice to Poseidon. See the quotations in Grotius ad loc.

14. He drops the severe irony of the last three verses, and expresses the same feeling more directly, and in gentler language.

aiv ἐντρέτων, κ.τ.λ. 'You must understand that when I thus write, it is not a diagrace to you.' For this sense of ἐντρέτω, see vi. 5; xv. 34; 2 Thess. iii. 14; Tit. ii. 8. The general meaning of the word is 'to turn the mind in upon itself: άγαπητὰ νουθετά. ¹¹ἐὰν γὰρ μυρίους παιδαγωγούς έχητε ἐς χριστῷ ἀλλὶ οὐ πολλοὺς πατέρας ἐν γὰρ χριστῷ ¹ησοῦ διὰ τοῦ εἰσγγελίου ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς ἐγἐνηστα. ¹⁸παρακαλώ οὖν ὑμᾶς, μιμηταί μου γιωστός. ¹¹δα τοῦτο εἰπεμὰ μίμῦ Τιμάθεω, ὁς ἐστι μου τέκου ἀγαπητὸν καὶ πατοὰ ἐν κυρία, ὸς ὑμᾶς ἀμαμνήστε τὰς δοῦύς μου τὰς ἐν χριστῷ ¹¹Πσοῦ, καθῶν απαταχοῦ ἐν ἀποῦς εἰκλησίας ἀιδάσκω. ¹⁰ἐλεὐσομαι δὲ ταχέσο μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐφυταίθησὰν τινες. ¹⁰ἐλεύσομαι δὲ ταχέσο ποὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐξια ὁ κήμος θέληση, καὶ γιωσόριαι οὐ το λέγου ποὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐξια ὁ κήμος θέληση, καὶ γιωσόριαι οὐ το λέγου

* τέκνον μου,

b Om. 'Ιησοῦ.

1s 'children I warn you. For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, ye thave ye not many fathers: for in 1s Christ Jesus, I 'begot you through the gospel. Wherefore 17 I 'cxhort you, he ye followers of me. For this cause 'I sent' unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved 'child and faithful in the Lord, who shall 'put you in mind' of my ways which be in Christ 'Jesus, as I teach every where in every church. 1s 'But some 'were puffed up, as though I 'were not coming' but you. But I will come to you shortly, if 'the the Lord's will,

15. 'I have a right thus to address you; for the obligations which you have subsequently contracted to your other teachers can never supersede your original obligations to me as your founder' (the same sense in other words as in iti. 6—9).

παιάσγωγούς, the slaves who took children to school, and acted as their tutors. Compared with the use of the word in Gal. iii. 24, 25, it expresses the harsh and despotic sway of those other teachers; thus agreeing with 2 Cor. xi. 20.

μυρίους, though hyperbolical, expresses the great number of teachers, in accordance with the general impression conveyed by 1 Cor. xii.

 Timotheus was sent before this from Ephesus; Acts xix. 22. τέκνον άγακητόν. This refers to his conversion by St. Paul (Acts xvi. 1); and the phrase seems to be used here in reference to ricer ayaraya, in verse 14; as though he said, 'I sent Timotheus, who stands to me in the same relation that you stand: Possibly the reason of the injunction to Timotheus to reunind them of St. Paul's teaching, rather than to teach them himself, was from Timotheus' youth. See note on xvi. 10.

διὰ τοῦτο refers to μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε, as appears from δς ὑμᾶς ἀναμνήσει τὰς ὀδούς μου.

19. the stoping Salving. The usual formula, as in James iv. 15; see also Acts xviii. 21; Rem. i. 10; 1 Cor. xvi. 7. The same suspicions had been excited of his vaciliation or duplicity of purpose, which he afterwards contradicts in 2 Cor. i. 15—17, and which now might be revived by the coming of Timotheus instead of himself. This therefore suddenly breaks off the affects of the stoping of the property of the contradicts of the stoping of

τῶν πεφυσιωμένων, ἀλλὰ τὴν δύναμιν· 20οὐ γὰρ ἐν λόγῳ ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει.

and will know, not the "word of them which are puffed up, 20 but the power: for the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

tionate strain in which he had been addressing them, and precipitates the introduction of the severe censure on the incestuous

Corinthian, to which the following words, γνώσομα: . . πραύτητος (21), are a prelude.

20. οὐ γὰρ ἐr λόγφ. Comp. i. 17.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, III, 5-IV, 20,

Think not because I have confined myself to this simple preaching that I am inferior to the other teachers, whose wisdom and whose progress in Christian knowledge you prize so highly. All such distinctions are as nothing compared with the source from which alone they spring, namely, God. All such progress is as nothing compared with the permanent importance of the one unchangeable foundation, namely, Jesus Christ; nay, more, although it may be truly valuable, it may also be most vernicious, as well as most verishable; its author escaping because of his own right intention, but in itself leading to fatal sins,-fatal both to the purity of the Christian society and to the safety of him who perpetrates them. All such wisdom is as nothing compared with that Christianity which you all possess in common. However great your several teachers may appear in your eyes, or in their own, even though it be muself and Avollos, remember that you were not made for them, but they for you; and not they only, but the whole universe, past, present, and to come; if only you bear in mind that, as these things depend on you, so you depend on Christ. and Christ on God. Remember, also, that your teachers only preach what they have been told, not what they invent: that, whether you blame or praise them, it is not by your judgment but by God's that they must stand or full. And they toothey and all of you-must remember that their gifts are not their own, but God's. Great indeed are those gifts-I do not deny it; and deep indeed in comparison is the degradation into which we the Apostles are sunk. Yet even from that degraded state there is a lesson which you might well learn,-the lesson of self-denial and humility. And this at least, the lesson of example, is one which my relation to you as your founder well entitles me to urge upon you, however much in points you may be tempted to follow others. This is the lesson which I have told Timotheus to impress upon you, though I shall also come in person to impress it upon you by my own presence.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF THE RELATION OF TEACHERS AND TAUGHT.

The mere structure of the argument, which makes it difficult to distinguish when the taught are addressed, and when Idantificathe teachers, is instructive; as indicating, first, the Teachers historical fact that there was at this early period of the and Apostolic age no marked distinction between these Disciples, two classes; and, secondly, the moral warning that the sins of party-spirit are shared, although not in equal degree, by the leaders and the led. But the dangers on which the Apostle chiefly dwells are those which arise from an undue estimation of the teachers.

The great stress laid throughout, but especially in iv. 1—5 on not overrating their spiritual instructors, even Dayp finthough they be Paul and Apollos themselves, shows dependence that there are times and circumstances when the Christian's duty lies not in submission to authority, but in questioning it; that there is a religious danger in excessive veneration, as well as in excessive independence (see notes on 2 Cor. i. 24).

The object of the passage is not to exalt, but to depreciate the teachers. They are only the humblest servants, not the representatives, of Christ. They are not in possession of what is denied to others. They are not masters of the secrets of God, but only stewards, whose main duty is to be accurate in arranging and dispensing what is not their own, but another's property,—only intrusted for a time with what really belongs to God alone, and is revealed at His pleasure to His Church.

Lastly, the whole of this first division of the Epistle is important as bearing on the general question of divisions Vinilication the Christian Church. In it we have a proof that tion of the it was not merely the errors or the hostilities of sect Apastle or party, but the spirit itself of sect and party, even changed when it conferred glory on himself, that the Apostle party-spirit, denounced as the sign of an unchristian or half-christian society. It warned them that not only their sins and their Judaism, but their 'strifes' and 'divisions' of whatever kind, were proofs that they were 'carnal and walked as men;' he 'transferred in a figure to himself and Apollos' all that he would teach them of the cyil of the Factions generally, in order that they might fully understand how his language was free from all personal feeling. What was deserving of condemnation he condemned 'for their sakes,' in whatever form it might be found, whether it made for him or against him. Here too we meet with the most express contradiction to the suspicions always natural to low minds, that a character which exercised so vast an influence must have been intent on self-exaltation. He tells them that he 'rejoices that he had baptized none of them, but Crispus and Gaius, lest any should say that he had baptized in his own name: ' he conjures them ' so to account of him,' not as an independent teacher and master, but merely as a subordinate minister (ὑπηρέτην) to Christ,' as a humble 'steward' whose only object it was faithfully to expound 'the secrets of God;' not to think that their favourable judgment would justify him before God, but to wait patiently to the end of all things, for 'then, 'and not before, 'shall every man have praise of God.' And here also we see the true secret of freedom from partyspirit, true always, but in the highest degree true of the Apostles; when he represents the nothingness of himself and all other teachers, how wise soever, in comparison with the grandeur of their common cause, with the recollection that they were 'in Christ Jesus, Who of God was made unto them wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.' 'All things are yours,' however strong their outward contrast, 'whether Paul, or Apollos, or Kephas, or the world, or life, or death: all are yours: for ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's.' These last words, setting forth as they do the distinctness of character and mind on the one hand, and the unity of object and spirit on the other, sum up the point of view from which all human differences, whether within or without the Scriptures. ought to be regarded. These differences are not concealed or overlooked; but they are made to enhance the greatness of Christ and of God. The consciousness of great gifts and actions (iii. 5-10; iv. 7-14) may be united with a complete dependence on a higher power and wisdom than our own. The consciousness of great imperfection in detail, and of great difference of views and characters (iii. 12-15, 22, 23), need not interfere with a strong sense of practical unity and sympathy.

THE

CHARGES AGAINST THE CORINTHIANS (CONTINUED).

THE CASE OF INCEST, CHAP. IV. 21-V. 13.

FROM the subject of THE FACTIONS the Apostle passes to the second piece of intelligence brought to him at Ephesus (apparently not by the household of Chloe, but by popular rumour), namely, that there was in the Corinthian Church a free indulgence of heathen sensuality, and in particular one flagrant case of INCEST, in which the whole society had acquisesced without remonstrance. This, practically speaking, forms the crisis of the whole Epistle. It is, as it were, the burst of the storm, the mutterings of which, as Chrysostom observes, had already been heard in the earlier chapters (iii. 16; iv. 5, 20, 21), and of which the choese are still discernible, not only in this Epistle (vii. 2; x. 8, 22; xv. 33), but also in the Second Epistle, the first half of which (chapters i. to vii.) is nothing less than an endeavour to allay the excitement and confusion created by this severe remonstrance.

But the Apostle, in rebuking this one crime, is led to consider the whole question of The Intercourse of Christians with the Heathen World; and hence arise the complications of the latter portion of this section.

21 Τί θέλετε; ἐν ῥάβδω ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἡ ἐν ἀγάπη πνεύματί τε πραύτητος; V. Ιολως ακούεται έν ύμιν πορνεία, καὶ τοιαύτη πορνεία ήτις οὐδὲ ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, "ώστε γυναῖκα τινα τοῦ πατρὸς έχειν. 2 καὶ ὑμεῖς πεφυσιωμένοι ἐστὲ καὶ οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἐπενθήσατε, ἵνα ' ἀρθη ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν ὁ τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο ποιήσας; ³ ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ ⁴ἀπὼν τῷ σώματι, παρὼν δὲ τῶ πνεύματι, ήδη κέκρικα ὡς παρὼν τὸν οὖτως τοῦτο κατερ-

· *pqó+ητος. b Add δνομάζεται. e ¿tasêñ. 4 des desáv.

21 What will ye? "Am I to come' unto you with a rod, or in 1 love, and the spirit of meekness? v. It is reported certainly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not or reven among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's 2 wife. And 'are ye' puffed up? and 'did not rather mourn', that he that 'did this deed might be taken away from among 3 you? For I verily absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already as though I were present him that so

21. ἐν ράθὸφ. The word is used in reference to verse 6, 'Shall I come to you as a stern master, or as a gentle father?' It may perhaps allude to the flagellation in the synagogue which succeeded to the first admonition by words. 'They chastise him first with words, then with the rod,' according to Deut, xxi. 18. (See Schöttgen ad loc.)

V. 1. όλως merely adds force to the assertion (compare Arist, Pol. ii. 4. 5. όλως συμβαίνειν άνάγκη). 'There is absolutely reported to be,' &c. Compare vi. 7; xv. 29; Matt. v. 34.

άκούεται έν υμίν, 'is reported as existing amongst you.

τοιαύτη ωστε, ' of such a kind as that a father's wife should be the person.' Such cases, though not absolutely unknown in Roman society, were regarded with horror. Comp. Cicero, Pro Cluentio, 5, 6: 'Nubit genero socrus, nullis auspiciis. nullis auctoribus, funestis ominibus omnium omnibus. O mulieris scelus incredibile, et præter hanc unam in omni vita inauditum.' In this case the father was still alive; compare 2 Cor. vii. 12.

γυναϊκά του πατρός. The usual Hebrew expression for 'stepmother,' see Levit. xviii. 8, and the Rabbinical quotations in Lightfoot ad loc. From the omission of all notice of the woman, it would seem that she was not a Christian. That it was a marriage, and not merely a concubinage, is evident from the language used so describe it, Exeryποιήσας-κατεργασάμενον.

2. Possibly a question, as in the Syriac version and Greek Fathers. The sense is the same. 3. yap, 'and he must be removed; for I at least, whatever you may do, have determined."

ούτως, 'under the circumstances,' as in John iv. 6, γασάμενον, * ἐν τῷ δνόματι τοῦ κυρίου [ἡμῶν] 'Ιησοῦ' συναχθέτων ὑμῶν καὶ τοῦ ἐμοῦ πνεύματος σὐν τῆ δυνάμει τοῦ κυρίου [ἡμῶν] 'Ιησοῦ' δ' παραδοῦναι τον τοιοῦτο τῷ σατανα ἐις δλεθρον τῆς σαρκός, ἴνα τὸ πνεύμα σωθῆ ἐν τῆ ἡμέρα τοῦ

Add хрютой.

b Add ypioroù.

4 'wrought this, ° in the name of our Lord Jesus, α when ye and my spirit are gathered together with the power of our 5 Lord Jesus, α to deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day

 5. ἐν τῷ ὀν. τ. κ. ἡ. Ἰησοῦ, 'in the name of our Lord Jesus;' apparently the formula which was used.

συναγθέντων ὑμῶν. As here, so in Clem. Rom. I. c. 44, the rulers of the early Corinthian Church are described as having been appointed 'with the approbation of the whole Church' (συνευδοκράσης τῆς ἐκκλησίας πάσης).

xal roυ ἐμου πνεύματος, 'by a perpetual inter-communion of spirit' (comp. xvi. 18; Col. ii. 5; and 2 Kings v. 26).

σῦν τῆ ἔννάμει, i with the help of His power present with the Christian assembly, as promised Matt. xviii. 20; xxviii. 20. παραζούναι, κ. τ. λ. i to deliver

Deliverance to Setan.

Deliverof evil,' from whom all evil, whether moral or physical, is derived; as in the case the demoniacs, and the man whom Sann had been demoniacy and the country who Sann had been demoniaced by the sann by the 'hourn in the flesh' sent by the 'angel of Satan' (2 Or. πίτ. 7). Cf. παρεάδωκα τὰς σατανῆ, 1 Tim. i. 20; "αγαραάδωμα τος αιτάνα, Job ii. 6. (So in the Rabbinical writings quoted on this passage by Westein and Lightfloot, the 'deli-transce' of Job to Satan is fre-varance' of Job to Satan is frequently spoken of, and Solomon 'delivers' two Cushites to Satan, who carries them to Luz, where they die.) The fact, that in the ordinary forms of excommunication in the first four centuries this phrase does not occur, indicates that it was regarded as descriptive of a power which had become extinct. (See Bingham's Ant. xvt. c. ii. § 15.)

εἰς ὅλεθρον τῆς σαρκός, ' to the destruction of the flesh.' (1) Some physical evil is impliedprobably sickness or death of the offender. This evil may be viewed either as the indirect result of his removal from the Christian society, and so becoming the prey of Satan, the lord of the heathen world (compare I Thess. ii. 18); or, more probably, as the direct result of the Apostle's sentence. Compare the case of Ananias (Acts v. 5-10) and Elymas (Acts xiii. 8-11), and the general intention of Matt. xvi. 19; xviii. 19: John xx. 23. A similar connexion of sickness and death with moral evil, or with a moral purpose, is implied in xi, 30: 2 Cor. xii. 7, 9. (2) The object of the infliction was not penal, so much as remedial (ἵνα τὸ πνεύμα σωθή). Compare the parallel passage, 1 Tim. i. 20, 'that they may learn not to blasphenic.

κυρίου [*ἡμῶν' Ιησοῦ χριστοῦ]. 6οὐ καλὸν τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν. οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοῦ; ὅ ἐκκα-

· Omit śuśw and γριστού.

6 of our Lord Jesus AChrist. Your boasting is not good.

Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?

Thus the sense is the same as in iii. 15, namely, that the offender shall through present suffering be saved at the last. Compare for the whole passage Job. i.—iii. 10. The interpretation of Tertulian and Ambrose, 'that the individual may be destroyed in order that the church may be saved the three that the church may be saved with the church may be saved that the church may be saved to the 6, 7. οὐ ἐπλὸν τὸ καύχημα, 'you have no right to boast of your gifts, and of your spiritual perfection, whilst this sin remains amongst you unreproved;' alluding, perhaps, to expressions in their letter to him.

ούκ οίδατε, 'is it that you do not know that a little leaven leavens the whole lump?' 'The expression seems to be proverbial, inasmuch as it occurs again in Gal. v. 9; and the same image of the rapid spread of leaven, to indicate the growth of great results from small beginnings, is the groundwork of Matt. xiii. 33, The sense is the same as in xv. 33, where the precept is, as here, confirmed through a proverbial saying. There may have been a classical proverb to this effect, as Plutarch speaks of the flamen of Jupiter abstaining from leaven on account of its deleterious effect on the whole lump (Qu. Rom. 114 -118, 162-170). The Rabbis compare concupiscence to leaven, because a little corrupts the whole man. Such is also the force of Matt. xvi. 6, 12: 'Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees.' But the mention of leaven suggests to him the further image of the Jewish passover. It is as though he said. 'You know the scene; you know how, when the lamb is killed, every particle of leaven is removed from every household; every morsel of food eaten, every drop drunk in that feast, is taken in its natural state. This is the true figure of your condition. You are the chosen people, delivered from bondage, you are called to begin a new life, you have had the lamb slain for you in the person of Christ, Whatever, therefore, in you corresponds to the literal leaven, must be utterly cast out: the perpetual Passover to which we are called must be celebrated, like theirs, uncontaminated by any corrupting influence.'

The allusion may have been suggested by the time of the year when the Epistle was written, apparently (xvi. 8), a short time before Pentecost, and therefore with the scenes of the Passover, either present or recent, in his thoughts.

MS. D. reads δολοί for ζυμοί.

iκαθάρατε, 'cleanse out.' A strong expression to denote the complete removal of leaven enjoined in Exod. xii. 15; The Passand carried out in later over. times with such extremo punctiliousness, that on the fourteenth θάρατε τὴν παλαιὰν ζύμην, ἴνα ἦτε νέον φύραμα, καθώς ἐστε ἄζυμοι· καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα *ἡμῶν ἐτύθη χριστός. δωστε ὑπὶρ ἡμῶν ἐθύθη.

7 Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened: for 'our passover 'also was 8 sacrificed, on even Christ. Therefore let us keep the feast, day, they searched with candles even into the darkest holes and corners, to see whether any remained. (See Chrysostom ad loc., and the quotations from the Rabbinical rubries in Lightfoot, i. 953.) This practice at the time of the Passover, among the Jews of modern Poland, extends to the removal of all fermented liquor of every kind. For the early use of the Apostle's metaphor, see Ign. ad Magn. 10 (whether genuine or not): 'Υπέρθεσθε σου την κακήν ζύμην την παλαιωθείσαν, την ένο-Είσασαν, καὶ μεταβάλλεσθε εἰς νέαν ζύμην χάριτος. Also Justin. Dia. c. Tryph: Διὸ καὶ μετὰ τὰς ἔπτα ημέρας των άζυμοφαγιών νέαν ζύμην φυράσαι έπυτοῖς ὁ θεὸς παρήγγειλε, τουτέστιν, άλλων έργων πράξιν καὶ μή τών παλαιών καὶ φαύλων την μίμησιν.

Tra ητε νέον φόραμα, that you may be practically what you are theoretically; that, as you are ideally without leaven, so you may be actually a new regenerate society. Comp. Gal. v. 25; Rom. vi. 3, 4.

παλαιάν—νέον. The words are used emphatically to indicate the new state of existence to which Christians were called, as the Israelites of old at the Exodus. 'All things are become new,' 2 Cor. v. 17; Rev. xxi. 5.

καὶ γάρ, ' and you are bound to be free from corruption; for in another respect, in addition to the new life to which you are called, there is a parallel between you and the Israelites,—in the Passover.'

τὸ πάσχα is used both for the Feast, and also, as here, for the Paschal Lamb. (See Exod. xii. 21; Matt. xxvi. 17, 19; Mark xiv. 12; Luke xxii. 7; Θύου, φαγείτ, ἐτοιμάζειν, τὸ πάσχα.)

in λ. B. C. D. E. F. G. The whole stress, therefore, is on the act of dying: 'In the ancient slaying of the Paschal Lamb, our Paschal Lamb was slain; for that Lamb was Christ,' Compare x. 4, "The" rock was Christ,' the "Spirit.'

The word Suria is applied to the death of Christ, in Heb. ix. 26: x. 12. In the verb θύωwhich only occurs here with that application-it is dificult to say how far the distinct idea of 'sacrifice in honour of God ' (as in Acts xiv. 13, 18) is brought out. or how far it is used merely in the general sense of 'slay' (as in Acts x. 13; xi. 7; Matt. xxii. 4; Luke xv. 23; John x. 10). In the parallel places, Rev. v. 6, 12, the expression used is the general word 'slain,' or 'wounded' (έσφαγμένον).

The context points the allusion to the 'lamb without blemish' (Exod. xii. 5): Be ye pure, even as He is pure. Another έορτάζωμεν μὴ ἐν ζύμη παλαιᾶ, μηδὲ ἐν ζύμη κακίας καὶ πονηρίας, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀζύμοις εἰλικρινείας καὶ ἀληθείας.

συτηρίας, απλ' εν αξυμοίς είπικρινείας και απησείας. Ενραψα ύμιν έν τη έπιστολή, μη συναναμίγνυσθαι πόρ-not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

I wrote unto you in "the epistle, not to "keep company!

resemblance, which could hardly have been overlooked, was that the Paschal Lamb (as still in the Samaritan sacrifice) was roasted on a cruciform spit.

 λορτάζωμεν, 'let us keep the feast,' i.e. the perennial feast (without any especial reference to the annual celebration of the Jewish Passover or the Christian Easter). Well expressed by Chrysostom, ad loc.

section, an observed with farencetive control of transparent incorrective, doubter, truthfulnes, truthfulnes, the control of the control of

9. It has been often contended that the words 'I wrote I wrote to you in "the" Epistle' unto you (ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῆ ἐπιστολή), must refer to a Epistle." previous epistle, containing the command here referred to: as a like phrase in 2 Cor. vii. 8 evidently refers back to the First Epistle. Against this must be urged: (1) That there is no other trace of the existence of such an epistle, unless it be in the manifestly spurious one preserved in the Armenian Church. (2) That the whole manner of introducing the subject of the Incest (especially in verses 1, 6, 7) is unlike what might have been expected, had he already mentioned this or a kindred subject. (3) That vũv ôć in verse 11 is in reference (not to a correction of a former Epistle, in which case it would have been νῦν δὲ γράφω, but) to the meaning which he now puts on what he has just written. (4) The reference of the phrases in τη έπιστολή and evenua to the present Epistle (as in the similar application of the words in Rom. xvi. 22; 1 Thess. v. 27; Col. iv. 16; 1 Cor. ix. 15), may be partially explained by the fact of the amanuensis, who might regard the whole letter which he was transcribing as 'the Epistle,' distinct from himself. At the same time it must be observed that all these passages, except 1 Cor. ix. 15, occurring at the end of the Epistles to which they refer, are in some measure distinct from the Epistles themselves; a circumstance which accounts for what would otherwise be a very unusual mode of expression. Hence when the same expression occurs in the middle of the Epistle, we are doubly compelled to suppose that some break has occurred in the course of the argument. Such a pause may have taken place at this point, from the inνοις: 10*οὐ πάντως τοῖς πόρνοις τοῦ κόσμου τούτου ἢ τοῖς πλεονέκταις ʰκαὶ ἄρπαξιν ἢ εἶδωλολάτραις, ἐπεὶ ʿώφείλετε ἄρα

10 with fornicators: 0x not altogether with the fornicators of this world or with the covetous 2and extortioners or 0 idolaters,

troduction of some such addition or after-thought, as was not unnatural from the extreme importance which (as we see from the Second Epistle) the Apostle attached to a right understanding of his directions on this especial point.

He may be conceived as returning to the argument in this passage, perceiving that it was necessary to correct the too general inference which might be drawn from his previous words. In this case, the sense would be: 'In what I just wrote to you in my Epistle, I laid down a general command (v. 6-8); as it is, what I really meant by writing to you was a command not to associate with sinners who are Christians. It might be asked further whether there are not indications that the whole passage (v. 9-vi. 8) is, in some sense, a distinct note or insertion *, a postscript not merely to v. 6—8, but to v. 6—8 and vi. 9—20. For:

(1) Whereas vi. 1—8 is evidently attached, at least by verbal associations, to v. 9—13; yet vi. 9—20 joins on naturally to v. 8, without any allusion to the Lawsuits (with one exception, which shall be noticed hereafter, at the beginning of vi. 9).

(2) Although the general command alluded to in v. 9—11 may be found in the substance of v. 6-8, it would certainly be more appropriate if it could be referred to vi. 9, 10.

(3) Similar corrections or digressions may be noticed in a smaller degree in other passages, particularly xv. 21—28; 2 Cor. vi. 14—vii. 1; Rom. xvi. 17— 20. (Compare the remarkable passage in Liv. iv. 20, called by Niebuhr—Hist. of Rome, ii. p. 456—the only instance of a note in any ancient author.)

in any ancient author.)

This question, however, need not interfere with the general consideration of the passage, from which, on any hypothesis, v. 9–13 must be regarded as a digression, growing out of v. 6–8, whilst vi. 1–8 grows in like manner out of v. 12, 13, and vi. 9–20 is a return to the general subject of v. 1–8.

10. où wärws, 'not in every case.'

τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, 'the heathen world.'

*Absolute 1: To the state of th

This has been already conjectured by two Englishmen,—J. Edwards (quoted in Heydenreich), and Dr. Arnold (MS. notes).

έκ τοῦ κόσμου ἐξελθεῖν. ^{11 ε}νῦν δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, ἐάν τις ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος ἢ πόρνος ἡ πλεο-

* rorl 84.

II for then must ye needs go out of the world. But now I rewrote unto you not to keep company, if any one that is called 5; Col. iii. 5; 1 Thess. ii. 5; iv. 6; 2 Pet. ii. 3-(πλεονεξία, πλεονεκτέω) - it is most naturally, in some passages almost necessarily, interpreted as 'sen-suality.' In this particular instance, and in vi. 10, either sense will suit the context, the ordinary sense best agreeing with the juxtaposition of aprate and of κλέπται, the extraordinary sense best agreeing with the ge-neral context. The extraordinary sense of 'sensuality' (if that be here intended) may be either: (1) From the general sense of 'self-indulgence, as in English the word 'greed,' anciently used for 'covetousness,' has, in its later form of 'greediness,' passed off into the sense of 'gluttony.' Comp. the use of the word 'covet' in the two clauses of the Tenth Commandment, as applied both to the 'wife' and the 'house' of our neighbour; especially if Augustine's division of that Commandment be adopted. Or (2) it may be from some accidental connexion of the word πλεονεξία with 'idolatry;' whence its use for the sensuality which so often accompanied idolatry. This last view is slightly confirmed by the use of the word yya (which usually means, and is translated, 'covetousness' or 'rapine') in Ps. cxix. 36, 'Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness;' where the context would rather require the sense of 'idolatry,' as in verse 37.

This connexion of thought also appears in Col. iii. 5: την πλεονεkin, first invit eibahaharptia.

dpragt, 'plunderer.' It is difficult to see why this crime dragt bould have been introduced into an enumeration which concerns sins of sensuality. Probably it is suggested by the gamathematical invitation of the concerns in the suggested by the which word in A. B. C. DV. F. G. it is joined not by 8 (Rec. T.)

but by eat, which would make the connexion between the words closer.

είδωλολάτρης. This, as Grotius observes, is the earliest known instance of the λάτρης. use of this word, είδω-Nov is used as the expression for 'false gods' by the LXX. but this compound never. In its etymological sense, which has been followed in all the European languages into which it passed, it signifies a 'worshipper of images,' or of 'false divinities.' But in the New Testament, this, although part, is never the whole of its meaning. In all the passages where είδωλολατρεία occurs, it is either implied or expressly stated that it relates to the sin, not of worshipping a false god, but of sensuality, by which the act of false worship was so frequently accompanied, especially at Corinth: thus, in x. 7 this explanation of it is given from the words in Exodus, which refer, not to the worship, but to νεκτης ή είδωλολάτρης ή λοίδορος ή μέθυσος ή ἄρπαξ, τῷ τοιούτῳ μηδὲ συνεσθίεω. 12τί γάρ μοι *τοὺς ἔξω κρίνειν;

* καὶ τοὺς Εω.

a brother be a fornicator or covetous or an idolater or a railer or a drunkard or an extortioner, with such an one no not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them oh that are the licentious rites; in Eph. v. 5; Col. iii. 5, it is explained as synonymous with πλεονέκτης, which in those places, as here also, is probably used, not for 'covetous,' but for 'sensual.' That such is the meaning of it in this passage is also almost required by the fact that, though it is conceivable that a professed Christian (άδελφὸς ονομαζόμενος) should be guilty of sensuality, it is not conceivable that he should be a professed heathen; and the word είδωλολάτρης, if taken literally, could hardly signify less than this.

έπει όφείλετε άρα, 'else you must come out from the society of heathens, which you cannot do.' This implies that 'the world' here signifies not so much 'the world' in its darker sense, as the whole fabric of the society of the Roman empire. It was not till the great dissolution, moral and physical, brought into that society by the calamitics of the fourth and fifth centuries, that the idea here impressed upon the Christian mind began to give way. Down to that time the world of the Empire, although contaminated by much evil, was regarded as the imperishable framework under shelter of which the Christian found his appointed home. See Tertullian passim.

 νῦν δέ, 'but as it is.' Comp. Rom, iii. 21. ἔγραψα. 'The meaning of what I wrote was,' &c. ὀνομαζόμενος, to be taken, not with πάρνος, but with ἀδελφός. λοίδορος. See note to vi. 10. συνεσθίειν, 'to eat together,

e. in common meals.
 γάρ, 'I make this limita-γάρ, 'I make this limitation of my command, for '&c.

τους ἔξω. Col. iv. 5; 1 Thess, iv. 12. It was the usual Jewish phrase for heathens; see Lightfoot on Mark iv. 11.

The punctuation may be very differently arranged: (1) oby/, role few busic spirer, role fit its 6 9cic spirer. What have I to do with judging those that are without? No: it is those who are within that ye must judge; and those who are without God judges.' In Romaic, 'no' is the universal meaning of obxi.

Or (2) a question at epiere. 'Is into those within that you are to judge? the rest God will judge? Or (3) a question at epoeri. 'Is it not that you must judge those within, but that God will judge those without?' The 8rd is the most natural; the sense is the same in all.

The difference between κρίνει ('judges') and κρινεῖ ('will judge') does not affect the sense. The Versions (by which alone, in the absence of accents, we can be guided) incline to κρινεῖ. ἐξάρατε τὸν πονηρόν is the usual formula for punishment on great

ούχὶ τοὺς ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε, ¹⁸τοὺς δὲ ἔξω ὁ θεὸς °κρινεῖ ; ἐξάρατε τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν.

» noives, nal étapeire.

13 without? 'do not ye judge them that are within, but them that are without God will judge? at put away from among yourselves the wicked person.

crimes, see Deut. ziii. 5; xvii. 7; you. The reading of καὶ ἐξαρεῖτε xxiv. 7, &c. Also 2 Kings xxiii. is probably from Deut. xvii. 7, 24. Theodoret and Augustine xxii. 21, &c. (LXX.): καὶ ἐξαρεῖς τοὰ το τονηρόν, and interpret it, τὸν πονηρόν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν. ''Put away evil from amongst DIGRESSION ON THE LAWSUITS.

Chap. VI. 1—8.

The connexion of this paragraph with the preceding seems to be, 'As we have nothing to do with judg- Judgment ing the heathen, so we ought not to go to law of Jews before them, or suffer them to judge us.' This and Christians in question was not new. It was held unlawful Heathen amongst the Jews for any Jew to bring a law-courts. suit against his countryman before a Gentile judge, on the ground that in Ex. xxi. 1 it is commanded : 'These are the judgments which thou shalt set before'-not the Gentiles, but 'them'-the Jews. 'If any one brings the judgments of Israel before the Gentiles, he profanes the name of God, and honours the name of an idol. They who so do give occasion to the strangers to say, 'See how harmonious are they who worship one God.'"1 This right of settling their own disputes was conceded to them by the Romans;2 and hence the speech of Gallio to the Jews who attacked St. Paul.3 In the first beginning of Christianity, when the Christians were regarded by the Romans as a Jewish sect, and when they regarded themselves as having succeeded to the sacredness of the Jewish Church, the same rule would naturally be held to apply. The existence of separate courts for the disputes of Christians amongst themselves, is implied in this passage. The Apostolic Constitutions4 and the Clementines,5 in language evidently founded upon this text, imply the existence of such courts at the time when those works were compiled, i. e. apparently about A. D. 150. In one passage,6 the nature of the proceedings is described as follows: 'Let your courts (δικαστήρια) take place on the second day of the week (δευτέρα σαββάτων), in order that if a reply be put in to your decision, by having leisure (ἄδειαν) till the Saturday (σαββάτου) you may be able to investigate the reply, and reconcile the opponents on the Sunday (είs την κυριακήν). Now let there be present at the court

See Wetstein and Schöttgen ad b. 2c.
 2 Joseph. Ant. XIV. x. 17; XVI.
 3 Acts xviii. 14. 15.
 4 II. 4, 5, 43, 47.
 5 Ep. Clem. ad Jacob. 10 Epist.
 16.
 6 Apost. Const. II. 47.

both the deacons and the presbyters, judging without respect of persons, as men of God, with justice. When then both the persons (προσώπων) have appeared, as the law also directs, they who have the quarrel shall both stand in the midst of the court (κριπρόμε); and when you have heard them, give your votes with a scrupulous conscience, endeavouring to make them both friends before the decision of the bishous, lest a judgment against the offender should go out over the earth. '1 The difficulty only arose when both the parties were Christians; when one of them was a heathen, then it was thought lawful to prosecute before a heathen tribunal: hence the story of St. Julitta, who prosecuted a pagna for theft, but refused to go on with the trial, when the magistrates insisted on her renunciation of Christianity. ²

Under these circumstances, it was natural that the same controversy which in a mixed society of Jewish and Gentile Christians ran through so many other departments of human life, should be felt here also; and that the Gentile Christians should still wish to carry on their litigations in the same courts to which they had been previously accustomed, and to indulge the same litigious apirit which had characterised the Greek nation from the time of Aristophanes downwards. But in whatever way this tendency may have originated, the Apostle, in his attack upon it, treats it altogether irrespectively of any previous Jewish or Gentile custom, and condemns it solely on the ground of the low view which it implied of the greatness of a Christian's privileges, and the closeness of the bond of Christian brotherhood.

² Besil, Hom. 5, in Estius ad h. l.

See Heydenreich on 1 Cor. vi. 1 for all these passages at length.

THE LAWSUITS.

VI. ¹τολμᾶ τις ὑμῶν πρᾶγμα ἔχων πρὸς τὸν ἔτερον, κρίνεσθαι ἐπὶ τῶν ἀδίκων καὶ οἰχὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀγίων; ² ἢ οὐκ οἱδατε ὅτι οἱ ἄγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρίνοῦσι; καὶ ἐἰ ἐν ὑμῖν κρίνεται

* Om. f.

- 1 Dares one of you, having a matter against another, 'to be judged' before the 'unrighteous and not before the saints? 2 Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the
 - VI. 1. τολμα, 'Can any one endure?' Bengel: 'Grandi verbo notatur læsa majestas Christianorum.'
 - κρίνεσθαι = go to law.' So Matt. v. 40.
- η οὐκ οἴἐατε; 'Can you be ignorant?' referring, as in v. 6; vi. 9, 16, 19, to a well-known or axiomatic truth.
- 'A time will come when the Christians, now so humble and degraded in the sight of the heathen world, shall sit in judgment upon that very world; applying to the whole Church what was said of the Apostles, Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30; and with a reference to Dan. vii. 22 (LXX.). It is an expression of the complete triumph of good over evil, which will be one day manifest to all the world, when those who have shared the humiliation of Christ here on earth shall also share His exaltation. Compare iv. 8; 2 Tim. ii. 12; and especially Rev. ii. 26; xx. 4-6. The other aspect of the final judgment, which represents not the victory of the good and the restitution of all things, but the universal account to which will be called the whole human race, good and bad alike, is not here brought forward; but is no more incompatible with it than the judgment which in this life is exercised by the example and teaching of the good, is inconsistent with God's present government of the world, which extends to all alike, See John xii, 31, 47, 48, where the same ambiguity exists. Bengel: 'Occulta sanctis maiestas est suo tempore revelanda.' And in verse 3, as in iii. 22, when once the view of the Christian's exaltation is opened before the Apostle's mind, it has no bounds, but extends to the Majesty on High, where Christ sits on the right hand of God, 'angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject to Him.' Whether good or bad angels are intended is left undefined in all these pas-83.ges.

For this general identification of Christ with his people, see vi. 15; xii. 27; John xv. 5. For an elaborate examination of all the opinions on this passage, see Heydenreich ad loc.

tν ψμῖν: (1) 'in your presence;' or, (2) 'by your example:' in either case, 'by means of.' See Acts xvii. 31.

κρίνεται, 'is to be judged,' as άποκαλύπτεται in iii. 13. * {στιν. > ούδὲ εί a smallest matters? do ye not know that we shall judge angels? A how much more things that pertain to this life. If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, those who are sleast esteemed in the church, set them to judge. I speak to your shame: is it so that there is not a wise man among or you, "" that shall be able to judge between his brethren? but brother 'is judged' with brother, and that before 'unbelievers. Yow therefore there is 'certainly a fault among you, because άνδιοί iere; 'are ye unfit to be entrusted with the most trifling cases?' δλαγίστων corresponding to βιατεκά, as εἰ. ερί-νεται to eie. . κρισόμεν. κριτέρων, properly 'judgment-seat.' In Apost. Const. 1. 47, κριτέρων (for the place of judgment) saspecially distinguished from δεκαστέρων (the persons composing the court).

μήτι γε βιωτικά; 'Much more judgments relating to ordinary life,' as in Luke xxi. 34.

pirtys, 'not to say—nedum.' flourede in classical Greek simply means 'belonging to the flourede in Classical Greek simply means 'belonging to the floured in the classical Greek simple lates to here used for "what relates to here used for "what relates to floured in the same per floured in this passage by 'sazcularia', is probably one of the first instances of the use of that word in its modern sense of 'wordby,' as opposed to sight wordby, as opposed to sight hundred years,' and from this hundred years,' and from this has sprung the signification of the word 'secular' in modern European languages.

4. 'At any rate, if you must have courts on matters of this life, set those as judges who are least esteemed. The least esteemed amongst those who shall judge angels, are surely fit to judge those trifling matters.' Then, suddenly moving from what was ideal to the actual matter of fact, 'I say this, not arranged to the surely come to this, that there is no one amongst yourselves whom you can trust for common justice?'

καθίζετε, 'place on the judgment-seat,' from the fact that the judge then, as now, sat.

5. ἀνὰ μέσον κ.τ.λ. The full expression here would be ἀνὰ μ. τοῦ ἀλ ἀντοῦ [τοῦ κρινομένον κ. τοῦ ἐτέρου ἀδ.] as in the LXX. passim wherever ἀνὰ μέσον occurs. In this passage the latter clause is, for brevity's sake, omitted.

for brevity's sake, omitted.
 ħôη μὲν οὖν. 'This at least is at once clear.'

έστιν, ότι κρίματα έχετε μεθ έαυτών. διά τί οὐχὶ μάλλον άδικείσθε; δια τί οὐχὶ μαλλον αποστερείσθε; 8 άλλα ύμεις άδικείτε καὶ ἀποστερείτε, καὶ "τοῦτο ἀδελφούς.

тайта.

ye 'have judgments' one with another. Why do ye not rather s endure injustice'? Why are ye not rather defrauded? Nay, ye do 'unjustly and defraud, and 'that your brethren.

δλως, 'certainly,' as v. 1. ήττημα, 'a falling short of The passage is remarkable as Christian proportion - a gap in being founded on the spirit of the full complement of Chris- Matt. v. 40.

tian virtues.'

δμεῖς, 'you Christians.'

THE CASE OF INCEST (RESUMED).

Chap. VI. 9-20.

9*Η οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ἄδικοι * θεοῦ βασιλείαν οὐ κληρονομήσουσι; Μὴ πλανᾶσθε οὖτε πόρνοι οὖτε εἰδωλολάτραι οὖτε μοιχοί ούτε μαλακοί ούτε άρσενοκοίται 10 ούτε κλέπται ούτε πλεονέκται ούτε μέθυσοι, οὐ λοίδοροι, οὐχ ἄρπαγες, βασιλείαν

Βασιλείαν Θεοῦ.

9 Know we not that the runiust shall not inherit the God's kingdom'? Be not deceived; neither fornicators nor idolaters nor adulterers nor effeminate nor abusers of themto selves with mankind nor thieves nor covetous nor drunkards, "not revilers, "not extortioners, shall inherit "God's kingdom.

9. If the digression ends here, then η ούκ οίδατε . . . κληρονομήσουσι; is the link between the subject of the Lawsuits (adirou referring to adicerra) and the general argument. See on v. 9.

Μή πλανᾶσθε. See on iii. 8. μαλακοί, 'effeminate.' For the darker sense which the word probably bears here, see the quotations in Wetstein ad loc.

For είζωλολάτραι, πλεονέκται, μέθυσοι, άρπαγες, see on v. 10. κλέπται, 'thieves.' This is probably introduced in reference to the Lawsuits.

λοίδοροι. This connexion of 'reviling' with the sins of θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσιν. 11 καὶ ταῦτά τινες ἢτε· ἀλλὰ ἀπελούσασθε, ἀλλὰ ἡγιάσθητε, ἀλλὰ έδικαιώθητε ἐν τῷ ἀνόματι τοῦ κυρίου [ἡμῶν] 'Πησοῦ "χριστοῦ καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ θεοῦ ἡμῶν.

12 Πάντα μοι έξεστιν, άλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει πάντα

Om. χριστοῦ.

11 And such were some of you: but ye "were washed, but ye "were hallowed', but ye "were justified in the name of "our Lord Jesus "Christ, and "in the Spirit of our God.

12 All things are "in my power', but all things are not expedient:

sensuality, may be either: (1) That in the idolatrous feasts animosities were wont to arise, as seems implied in the similar juxtaposition, Rom. xiii. 12; Gal. v. 20; or, (2) That it is used, like βωμολογία and εὐτραπτλία in Eph. v. 4, for 'gross conversation'.

τινες, 'in part;' to modify the positiveness of the assertion.

'Ye were washed, and so cannot be again unclean; consecrated, and so cannot be again oplitted; a couplitted, and so cannot be again condemned.' The variation of the words shows that no especial stress is laid by the Apostle on their precise mode of succession (compare i. 2). Here they all refer to the first conversion. 'Ye were washed' has an allusion to baptism, but is not formally identified with it any more than are the two other words. (Comp. Titus iii. 3, 5; Heb. x. 22.)

So also, 'in the name of the Lord Jesus,' has an especial allusion to the words used at baptism, yet refers to all the three words. Cp. for the formula Acts xix. 5; 1 Cor. v. 4. The middle voice (hrakeivaeth) makes it properly, 'Ye wanhed or bathed yourseless' in the waters of baptism. Comp. the same expression Acts xxii. 16, where, as usually, the act of baptism is represented as a voluntary effort on the part of the convert. Probably when any large number was baptized, they did actually immerse each other or themselves; as now in the berding or as in the baptism of the thousands of Saxons in the Swale, whilst Augustine stood on the bank. The force of ἀπό is,

'ye washed yourselves clean.'
12. 'All things are in my power.' These are the Apostle's own words, quoted as an argument against him. 'True, I have said. "all things are in my power;" but it is no less true that all things are not accordant with the interests of our nature.' 'True, all things are in my power; but I, as a Christian, will not be brought under their power." (Observe the play of words on έξεστι and έξουσιασθήσομαι.) Bengel: 'Stolidus esset viator, qui in medio campo viam habens, semper in ripa et margine undis proxima ambularet. At sic multi vivunt etiam in piis habiti.

Potestas penes fideles, non 'penes

μοι ξέεστω, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ ἔξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τωος. □τὰ βρώματα τῆ κοιλία, καὶ ἡ κοιλία τοῖς βρώματω: δὲ θέος καὶ ταύτην καὶ ταὐτα καταργήσει. τὸ δὲ σώμα οὐ τῆ πορικία, ἀλλὰ τῷ κυρίω καὶ ὁ κύριος τῷ σώματι: ¹⁶ δὲ θὲος καὶ τὸν κύριον ἦγειρεν καὶ ἡμας ³² ἔξεγεἰρει διὰ τῆς δυνάμεσα αὐτοῦ. ¹⁰οὐκ οιδατε ὅτι τὰ σώματα ὑμών μελη χριστοῦ όμῶς (R. Steph. ἡμῶς) ἐξεγερεῖ.

all things are 'in my power,' but I will not be brought under the is power of any. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats but God shall 'make to vanish away' both it and them. 'But the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord and the Lord for the body and God both 'raised 'the Lord, and 'raises up 15 ' us by His' s' strength. Do ye not know that your bodies are 's members of Christ's shall I then take the members of res, quibus utitur, esse debet.' St. Paul speaks of himself here, as representing the Christians in general; so in Rom. vii. 7—25. In these aphorisms especially, he uses the singular number; compare viii. 13; x. 23, 29, 30; xiii. 1—3; xiv. 11.

The context of this passage and of x. 23, where the same saying is repeated as the watchword of Christian liberty, shows that it had reference to the great casuistical question respecting sacrificial meats, which occupied the attention of all gentile Christians. And the transition from an assertion of the indifference of this. to an assertion of the indifference of the sins of sensuality, strange as it may now seem, was more natural then, from the frequent connexion of licentious rites with idolatrous worship: and nowhere more so than at Corinth. (See the quotations in Wetstein on i. 1.) Accordingly, in the decree of the Apostles at Jerusalem (Acts xv. 29), this was made the ground of the joint prohibition of 'things offered to idols, and of fornication.' Such also was the confusion implied in the error of the Nicolaitans (Rev. ii. 14), who held the teaching of Balaam — 'to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication.'

It is on the special distinction between these two things that St. Paul insists.

13, 14. Food is formed for the stomach, and the stomach is formed to digest the food; but no such connexion exists between the person of man and the objects of his sensual gratification: food, and all that relates to it, are in their own nature perishable; but the person of man, by its connexion with Him who is imperishable, is also itself imperishable. 'Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.' Matt. xv. 11 and 17-20.

 $\sigma \bar{\omega} \mu a$, 'the person;' i. e. not merely the body, but the framework, as it were, of the whole human being. Hence, in verse 14, 'us' $(3\mu \bar{a}c)$ is used instead. 15. The Church is the 'body'

έστην ; άρας οδυ τὰ μέλη τοῦ χριστοῦ ποιήσω πόρηης μέλη; μη γένοιτο. ¹⁰ η οἰκ οίδατε ότι ὁ κολλώμενος τη πόρηη θε σώμα ἐστιν ; Έσονται γέρη [φησιν] οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν. ¹³ ὁ δὲ κολλώμενος τῷ κυρίω ἐ πενύμα ἐστιν. ¹⁸ η δε κολλώμενος τῷ κυρίω ἐπ πενύμα ἀστιν. ¹⁸ η δε κολλώμενος τῷ κυρίω ἐπ πούρια ἀθρομπος, ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματός ἐστιν ὁ δὲ πορνείων εἰς τὸ ἱδιον σῶμα ἀμαστάνει. ¹⁹ η οἰκ οίδατε ότι τὸ σώμα ὑμών ναὸς τοῦ ἐν ὑμῶ ἀγιον πενόματός ἐστιν; ο ὁ ξετε ἀπὸ θεοῦ, καὶ οἰκ ἐστὲ ἐαντών.

Christ and make them "members of an harlot? God forbid.

16 Know ye not that he which is joined to 'the harlot is one body?

17 for 'the two'' saith He 'shall be one flesh.' But he that is sjoined unto the Lord is one spirit. Flee fornication. Every sain that a man doeth, is without the body; but he that committed the formication simeth against his own body. Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you? which ye have of God, and ye are not your own;

of Christ; its individual members are the 'limbs.' It is a more vivid specification of the previous expression, 'the body is the Lord's.'

Gen. ii. 24, εἰς = Heb. ?

'so as to become.'

The words 'they two' (οἱ δύο) are not in the Hebrew text, but occur in the Samaritan Pentateuch and in the LXX.

For this use of κολλᾶσθαι, or of the corresponding Hebrew word, compare Genesis xxxiv. 3; Deuteronomy x. 20; xi. 22;— 'cleave.'

τῆ πόρνη, the article implies her relation to him.
17. ἐν πνεῦμα. This is an expression analogous to ħ ψνχὴ μα in Acts iv. 32; but the word πνεῦμα is here used instead, in consequence of the purely spiritual character of the relation between Christ and His followers.

18. 'All other sins are in themselves partial, they do not degrade your whole nature, physical as well as moral; not so sensuality.' 19. The body, not the soul or spirit, of man is represented as the temple of the Spirit. The Spirit does not inhabit, but pervades and is identified with, the soul or spirit. The body is the abode of the spirit of man; it is therefore the temple of the Spirit of God. τὸ σῶμα (falsely corrected in A². J. into τὰ σώματα) means ' your several bodies,' but is in the singular for the sake of agreement with »aóc, the plural of which to Jewish usage must have been almost unknown; although in this case he must have meant that each Christian was a temple in himself. Whether the question ends at ioriv, or at iaurov, makes no difference in the sense-' you have the Spirit, not from yourselves, but from God; and thus your whole being is not your own, but His.'

20 ηγοράσθητε γὰρ τιμῆς. δοξάσατε δὴ τὸν θεὸν ἐν τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν.*

Add, καὶ ἐν τῶ πνεύματι ὑμῶν ἄτινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ,

20 for ye "were bought with a price. Therefore glorify God in your body. A 20. iyopdaffyrr ylar ruffe, 'you are not your own masters; for you are the slaves of God, you were bought by Him, at the time of your conversion.' The expression 'bought with a price, is in itself general, and intended only to express their complete depagage on the converse of God and the converse of God. The converse of God. The converse of God. The 'slaves' (God.) of righteousness . . the "slaves' of God.' Compare vii. 23, 'Ye of God.'

" were bought with a price;" be not ye the "alaves" of men.' In both passages the predominant notion is, not of a ransom from slavery (as in the passages where special allusion is made to 'the blood of Christ,' Matt. xxvi. 28; Col. i. 14; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19; and perhaps Acts xx. 28), but of a price paid for a slave.

δοξάσατε δή. δή is here used as a cheering or hortatory expression, like τέτλαθι δή, κραδίη (Od. xx. 18).

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. IV. 21-VI. 20.

I shall be compelled when I come to deal severely; for you have not only adopted the low worldly tone of the heathen world in its factious spirit and its intellectual pride, but also in its immoral practices. Of these the most flagrant is the case of incest, viewed with abhorrence even by heathens, but by you with indulgence and self-complacency. This must not be: in the strength of that Divine power, by which things absent become present, and by which judgments follow on the sentence of Christ's Apostles and Christ's people, I transport myself in spirit to your assembly, and there deliver over the offender to the adversary, in the hope that present suffering may lead to future safety. Common sense tells you of the bad influence exercised by one corrupting element. The perpetual passover which we keep as the redeemed people of God, reminds you that you ought to put away every particle of this evil leaven from amonast you. It is possible that this prohibition of intercourse may be applied too universally to the whole heathen world : you must remember, therefore, that I was alluding only to gross sinners of your own society. Of sinners who still remain in the outer world of heathenium, neither you nor I are judges, but God alone. In speaking of the judgment of heathens you ought to reflect that, as you are not to judge them, neither ought you to allone them to judge you. You have not the excuse of being unfit to judge your our causes of disputes; the time will come when even the proud heathens themselves, nay, even the angels, will have to holde your judgment, when you come to share Christ's final triumph. Much more, therefore, are you worthy to judge the petty trials of this life; much less are you justified in calling one another to judgment, and making heathen judges witnesses of your own wrong deeds.

But whether you separate yourseless now, or not, from the vices of the surrounding heathen, a separation will come at last. The kingdom of God will wholly exclude them, as your one profession of Christ's religion ought wholly to exclude them now. They are indeed utterly inconsistent with the very dica of Christianity; and whatever I have said, or may say, of Christian liberty with regard to various kinds of food, gives no excuse for these vices. The outsand framework of your immortal souls was not created, like its lover organs for mere animal gratification, but for union with its immortal Lord. It is not like food, perishable; but like Him, imperishable. Every sensual sin separates from Christ the bodies which ongth to form one living Christ on earth—every suck sin professes the bodies which, as the abodes of God's Spirit, ought to be as holy as God's Temple.

APOSTOLIC LIBERTY AND APOSTOLIC DISCIPLINE.

THE peculiar interest of this Section is the picture which it presents of the early Church in its intercourse with the heathen world. Its relations to the heathen world. Its relations to the heathen world are exhibited in I Cor. viii. x. and its relations to the heathen government in Rom. xiii. 1—10; 1 Pet. ii. 11—17. But its relations to heathen society, as such, in the matters of every-day life, are, for the most part, exhibited only here.

At Corinth, as elsewhere, the separation from heathenism had in the first instance been sudden, abrupt, and complete; a passage from darkness to light (vi. 11: comp. Acts xxvi. 11); a rupture, tearing asunder, even with an exaggerated violence, the ordinary ties of domestic life (vii. 12-24) and of established custom (xi. 13—16). But in a short time a reaction began to take place; not only had the factions and rhetorical subtleties of the Greek mind insensibly coloured the progress of the new society, but the barriers between heathen and Christian morals seemed to be levelled to the ground; and the gross vices which bore the neculiar mark of the former, and from which the latter had seemed to promise an entire exemption, rushed in like a flood, in one instance (v. 1) exceeding the usual licence even of the low code of heathenism itself; whilst the peace and harmony, that alone could preserve the rising society from dissolution, were scattered to the winds by litigious quarrels, which, however natural in the populace of Corinth and Athens, ought never to have arisen in a Church almost contemporary with those who 'were of one heart, and one soul, and had all things in common.'

The Apostle of the Gentiles was regarded both by his opponents and his supporters at Corinth as the champion of liberty. His sanction would be pleaded in stle the defence of practices which brought the Christian champion of freedom: and Gentile world into closer union with each other. Hence the peculiar significance of this part of the Epistle. We have here the checks placed by the Apostle himself on his own principles, the limits beyond which Christian liberty becomes heathen licence, the example for all ages of what is and what is not really latitudinarian. Perhaps the most remarkable part of his conduct is that he is not staggered by this sudden revulsion or excess of freedom. He still sees in the Corinthian Church, corrupted as it is, the germ of a new creation.1 He still repeats the same great truth, 'All things are lawful for me,' which had been so grievously perverted. Unlike the vacillating reformers or speculators of other times, who are unable to control the spirit which they have evoked, and back recoil they know not why, e'en at the sound themselves have made,' he remained steadfast to the cause which he had undertaken, and, as we see from his later Epistles, hesitated none the less to preach 'his Gospel' where it was needed, because in the instance of Corinth it had been so greatly exaggerated. But whilst thus firm in his original convictions, morality. he instantly laid down practical remedies, such as immediate expulsion of the worst offender from the Christian society, and the entire prohibition of the settlement of Christian quarrels in heathen courts of law. It is obvious that these measures, being designed to meet an immediate and temporary emergency, cannot, even if we had greater means of understanding the circumstances, be made precedents of universal application. They could only be obeyed literally in a Christian society as strongly marked off from the surrounding world, as in spite of all its corruptions was the Church of Corinth; so animated by one spirit that its decisions could, like those of Corinth, be pronounced by the whole assembly of its members; and so evidently bearing on the front of those decisions the marks of Divine wisdom, that we could expect them to be confirmed by the immediate workings of God's providence. But the general principles of the Apostle's advice are of universal application, especially in the cautions by which the measures he recommends are accompanied.

See v. 7; vi. 2, 11, 20.

First, even in that age of Divine intuitions and preter-Limitations natural visitations, he limits the subjects of expulsion of Apostolic from the society to gross and definite vices. No encouragement is given to pry into the secret state of the heart and conscience, or to denounce mere errors of opinion or of judgment. Secondly, even when insisting most strongly on entire separation from heathen vices, he still allows unrestricted social intercourse with the heathens themselves. He forbears to push his principle to a Utopian extravagance; he acknowledges the impracticability of entire separation as a decisive reason against it, and regards the ultimate solution of the problem as belonging not to man, but to God. Thirdly, whilst strongly condemning the Corinthian quarrels, as in themselves unchristian, he yet does not leave them without a remedy, and so drive them to the still more objectionable course of going before heathen judges. He recognises the fact, and appeals to their own self-respect to induce them to appoint judges of their own: thus giving the first Apostolical sanction to Christian Courts of Law: in other words, departing from the highest ideal of a Christian Church, in order to secure the purity of its actual condition. Lastly, he lays down the general truth, that between all other outward acts and the sins of sensuality there is an essential difference; that the liberty which Christianity concedes to the former, it altogether withholds from the latter; that those sins are utterly inconsistent, not merely with any particular relation existing between Christianity and heathenism, but with the very idea of Christianity itself. Great as are the freedom and the variety of language in the New Testament respecting all other outward acts, these alone are condemned as always, and under all circumstances, at variance with the true Christian character.

It is a striking proof of the change effected by Christianity, that whereas in Eastern nations the word for 'holy' was used for the worst kinds of sensuality, from the notion that those who practised them were consecrated to Astarte,' the corresponding word in the New Testament (áyner) is used almost always by St. Paul with a special reference to moral purity.

י See Gesenius, Thesaurus, in voce קַּבְישָ. Compare especially 1 Thess. iv. 3—7.

THE ANSWERS OF ST. PAUL TO THE LETTER OF THE CORINTHIAN CHURCH.

Chap. VII. 1 --- XIV. 40.

BESIDES the news of the factions and of the sensualities of the Corinthian Church, which had reached him through the household of Chloe or through popular runour, the Apostle had received a letter from the Corinthians themselves, containing certain questions, which he proceeds to answer in the remaining part of the Epistle.

MARRIAGE.

Chap. VII. 1-40.

The first question of the Corinthian Christians related to the scruples which were entertained by some of them on the subject of Marriage. From one or two expressions (as in vii. 18), and from the great probability that the Jews were more likely to be scrupulous than the Gentiles, it might be argued that these scruples originated in the Jewish party. But, on the other hand, it would seem that (except by the Essenes), marriage was always regarded by the Jews as a duty; 1 so much so, that he who at the age of twenty had not married, was considered to have sinned: whilst in the Gentile world generally, the tendency to celibacy was at this period so strong, that laws were enacted by Augustus on his succession, to counteract it;2 and in this feeling against marriage many of the Greek philosophers shared, chiefly from prudential motives. 'An sapienti ducenda sit uxor?' was an established question to be discussed; and the answer was usually in the negative.3 The context also leads us to conclude that, if the question proceeded from any particular portion of the Corinthian Church, it must have been from the party that called themselves after the Apostle. It was evidently put to him.

¹ See Iken, Ant. Judaism. Pt. III.

² See Hor. Carm. Sec. 17.

c. 1, § 2.

³ See the quotations in Grotius, ad loc.

not by those who disparaged, but by those who deferred to his authority; and he was well known himself, both by temperament and feeling, to incline to single life, and was for that reason disparaged by the Jewish party, in comparison with the married state of Peter and of the Lord's brethren. If there be any part especially addressed to the Jewish Christians, it would be that relating to the mixed marriages. How strong the feeling against these was amongst the stricter Jews after the return from the captivity, is evident from the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah, which may be instructively compared with this Chapter.

¹ 1 Cor. vii. 7, 8. ² 1 Cor. ix. 5.

VII. ¹ Περὶ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοι, καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ γυναικὸς μὴ ἄπτεσθαι· ² διὰ δὲ τὰς πορνείας ἔκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναικα

Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: 2 It is good for a man not to touch a woman. But on account of fornications', let every rone have his own wife, and

VII. The difficulty of the Corinthians seems to be contained in the words, 'It is good not to touch a woman;' which divided itself into two questions: (1) Whother the unmarried were to marry? (2) Whether the married were to remain in their married state?

Of these, the first question divided itself into two:-

(a.) What was the duty of unmarried persons themselves? which is answered in 2, 8, 9. (b.) What was the duty of parents to their unmarried children? which is answered in 25-39.

The second question also divides itself into two:--

(a.) What was the duty of married persons generally? which is answered in 3—7.

(b.) What was the duty especially of those who were married to heathens? which is answered in 10—24.

ca\(\delta\)^{\(\delta\)}. Much ingenuity has been employed by the advocates of celibacy in making this word mean 'lofty' or 'noble,' and by the advocates of marriage in depreciating it to mean 'convenient' for existing circumances of the control of the control Aristotle and the Greek moral writers generally) for 'good,' like 'pulchrum 'in Latin, opposed to 'turpe' =="arisye\(\delta\)-- bad;' and of 'turpe' and;' and the only limitation to be put upon it is that which is supplied by the context. If the sentence had been constructed with the full complement of classical particles, it would have been eachor µir: the would have been eachor µir: the consistence of these particles is so mission of these particles is so mission of these particles is given by Jerome as a proof of the Apostle's imperfect acquaintance with the Greek language. (See Erasmus all loss of the particle parameters and parameters and parameters are parameters and parameters and parameters are parameters and parameters are Erasmus ad loc.)

δπτεσθαι, i. e. in marriage, like

12. Jerome (adv. Jovinian) interprets it of simply touching. 2. The Apostle adopts the Corinthian statement as his own, and asserts it as a general principle to be true, but with modifications which he now proceeds to specify. He states that, though there are reasons which make the single state more eligible, yet these are overborne practically by greater evils on the other side, arising from the temptation to sin, which would thereby be opened. And first, for this reason, he recommends (or permits) marriage to those who are unmarried.

čia τὰς πορνείας. 'In consequence of the sensual sins of the time' (as in verse 5), i. c. 'lest their general prevalence might tempt you to join them.' The plural alludes to the various kinds of immorality, as specified in vi. 9, 10.

έχετα καὶ έκαστη του ίδιον αὐδρα έχεται. "τη γυναικό ἀινηρι την "όφειλην ἀσοδόδτη, ομοίας [8] και ή γυνη τη ἀιδηρι "ή γυνη τοῦ ἰδίου σάματος οἰκ έξουσαίζει, ἀλλὰ ὁ ἀινηρι ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀινηρ τοῦ ἰδίου σώματος οἰκ έξουσαίζει, ἀλλὰ ή γυνη. "μη ἀποστερείτε ἀλληλους, εἰ μη τι ἀν ἐκ συμφώνου πρὸς καιρόν, ὑια "σηνολάσητε τή προστεγή και πάλω ἐπὶ το ἀπὸ "ῆτε, ὑια μη περαξή μίας ὁ σατανίας διά ὀφειλομένην εύνοιαν,

 ^b σχολάζητε τῆ νηστεία καί,
 ^c συνέρχεσθε for ήτε.

a let every woman have her own husband. Let the husband remoler unto the wife 'her due,' a and likewise also the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power 'over her own body, but the husband' and likewise also the husband hath not power 'over his own body, but the wife. Defraud ye not one another, except with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to "paryer and "be together again, that Satan ty/rs. The contrast between ryie curve jv-yraic and ry's rizon and ry's rizon which runs all through the New Testament. The is never used for yvvi, not example for divin, in spanking of 'hunsland and wile;' jechlags from the seeming, bright grip for the conjunt of the conjunt

3. The second modification is, that, for the same reason, when married they are still to continue in the married state. For the true reading, δρεκλην (= ¹debi: unto 0¹), rep δρεκλην (σελομένα) στο το the Received Text must have of the Received Text must have of the Received Text must have the same of the same

 On these words of the Apostle was afterwards founded the practice of married persons living apart from each other through the season of Lent. Later copyists have here made three corrections in accordance with the exaggerated notions of their own time.

(1) σχολώσητε has been corrected to σχολώζητε, from a desire to give the Apostle's precept a general, instead of a merely special and temporary application. The word itself, with the dative case, implies 'devotion to anything '—especially used of devotion to studies or to a master. (Compare 'vacare rei.')

(2) The allusion to 'fasting' (τρ̄ νορτείρ και) has been added partly perhaps suggested by Acts xiii. 2; xix. 23, which contain a similar conjunction of fasting with solemn prayer. In Max ix. 29, there is, as here, a variety of reading, though in favour of νηστείρ.

(3.) συνέρχεσθε (R. Steph. συνέρχησθε) has been substituted for ἦτε, as giving to the married state a less pernanent character τὴν ἀκρασίαν ὑμῶν. ⁶τοῦτο δὲ λέγω κατὰ συγγνώμην, οὐ κατ ἐπιταγήν. [†] θέλω ^{}δὲ πάντας ἀνθρώπους είναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτόν. ἀλλὶ ἔκαστος ῖδιον ^{}ἔχει χάρισμα ἐκ θεοῦ, ^{*}ὁ μὲν οῦτως.

⁸ Δέγω δὲ τοῖς ἀγάμοις καὶ ταῖς χήραις, καλὸν αὐτοῖς ἀἐὰν [οὕτως] μείνωσινώς κάγω⁵ εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἐγκρατεύονται, γαμησάτωσαν ¹ κρεῖττον γάρ ἐστιν γαμῆσαι ἡ πυροῦσθαι. ¹¹ τοῖς

```
    γdρ for δέ.
    γdρισμα έχει.
    δ5 μἐν . . . δε δέ.
    ndil ἐστιν.
    Omit οὕτως, and so also Lachm. Ed. 1.
    κρεῦσσον.
```

6 tempt you not for your incontinency. Now I *say this by 7 permission, and not of commandment. And I would that all men were even as I myself: howbeit every *one hath his *own gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8 "Now I say to the unmarried and to the' widows, It is good 9 for them if they as a bide even as I; but if they cannot contain, 10 let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn. And than the Apostle ascribes to it. For the phrase elem en en or or our of, compare Acts ii. I. The true reading in the three cases rests on the best MSS., A. B. C. D. E. F. G.

ο σατανάς. 'The adversary, who is always on the watch.' Comp. Job i. 12.

διὰ τὴν ἀκρασίαν. See on verse 2.
6. κατὰ συγγνώμην. This fixes the sense of ἐχέτω in verse 2, which the Apostle saw was liable to misunderstanding.

χάρισμα. This word, which is usually employed for preternatural gifts, is here used for moral and natural gifts.

8. Alyo & Now, what I mean is this Comp. i. 12. Ho here sums up his previous advice, as if wishing to express it more clearly for the different classes: first, for the unmarried, verse 8, of which the substance is the same as verse 2; secondly, for the married, in verse 10, with an additional advice respecting separation; which leads him, thirdly, to the new subject of mixed marriages, which he discusses in 11—24; first, on its own merits, 11—17; secondly, on the general ground of Christianity not changing the social condition in which it finds us (18—27).

 οὐκ ἐγκρατεύονται must be taken as one word, as a substitute for ἀκρατεύονται, which is not admissible. (See Wetstein.)

10. The contrast here is, not between the Apostle inspired and the Apostle variety, but between the Apostle is words and an actual saying of our Lord, as in the Apostle variety of the Apostle variety of the Apostle follows the account in the two latter Ewangelists, in omitting the exception to the rule (wapters Apow respectable) to the Apostle Apostle variety of the Apostle Apostle variety of the Apostle varie

he is speaking only of those cases where there was a wish to separate, without reference to adultery.

δε γεγωμηκόσω παραγγάλλω οὐκ έγώ, ἐλλλὰ ὁκιῦμος, γυκαϊκα ἀπο ἀνδρος μη' χωριζεσθαι! (ἐὰπ δέ καὶ χωριστθη, μενέτω ἀγαμος ἡ τῷ ἀνδρὶ καταλλαγήτω) καὶ ἀνδρα γυκαϊκα μη ἀφιέναι. ¹²τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς 'λέγω ἐγώ, οὐς ὁ κύριος, εἰ τις ἀδελοὸς γυμαϊκα δες ἀπιστου καὶ ἀντη συνευδοκοί οἰκείν μετ ἀπότοι, μη ἀφιέτω αὐτήν, ¹³ καὶ γυνη ἡτις έγει ἀνδρα ἀπιστου καὶ «δυτος συγευδοκεί οἰκείν μετ ἀπίτης. μη ἀφιέτω τὸν 'ἀνδρα:

11 unto the married I command—not I, but the Lovd. Let not the wife depart from her hauband (but and if she depart, let 12 her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her hauband) and let not the husband put away his wife. But to the rest 'say I, not the Lord: if any brother hath a wife that believeth not and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away, and the 'wife which hath an husband that believeth not and he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not 'put

11. The Apostle speaks of the women first, probably because, according to the natural tendency of the female character, the religious scruples of the wives on this subject had been greater than those of the husbands. Compare the vehemence of the Jewish women against St. Paul, Acts this, 150; and see also I Pet. iii. 1.

χωρισθή, the natural expression for the wife, as not having power to dismiss her husband; ἀφείτων, the milder form for the husband, although it is in verse 13 used also for the wife. The words are taken from the phraseology of legal divorce; but the cases her spoken of are not so much regular divorces as accidental separations. ἐναν δὲ απὶ χωρισθή, 'fl the should in fact be separated.'

12. τοῖς ἐἶ λοιποῖς. He now returns to the case of mixed marriages. This implies that previously he had been speaking only of marriages where both parties were Christians. On this subject he here declares that he had not, as in the other case, any actual precept of our Lord to refer to, and therefore took it upon himself to advise; whence we may observe: (1) The confidence with which, in the absence of any such direct declaration of Christ, he puts forward his own judgment. (2) The natural distinction between the sayings of Christ, and the sayings of the Apostles, as here exemplified; Christ laying down the general rule, the Apostles applying it to the particular emergencies which arose out of the relations of the particular Churches with which they had to deal.

13. ἀφαίτω τὸν ἀτἔρα. Here is a deviation from the phraseology of verse 10, perhaps occasioned by the Christian being regarded as the superior party. But the Greek and Roman law permitted the wife as well as the husband to seek divorce. (Plut. Alc. 8; Gaius, 1127.)

¹⁴ ἡγίασται γὰρό ἀνὴρό ἄπιστος ἐν τῆ γυναικί, καὶ ἡγίασται ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄπιστος ἐν τῷ "ἀδελφῷ, ἐπεὶ ἄρα τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν ἀκάθαρτά ἐστιν, νῦν δὲ ἄγιά ἐστιν. ¹⁶ εἰ δὲ ὁ ἄπιστος χωρί-

došel for ášekáú.

14 away' her husband'. For the unbelieving husband is 'hallowed by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is 'hallowed by the 'brother; else were your children unclean, but now

14. ἐν τῷ ἀδελφῷ, 'in the brother,' i. e. 'in her Christian husband.' 'By virtue of the Christianity of her husband.'

He here appeals to the comrama modeling of the Chrisate the didden of the Christian society, which rechildres as belonging to God's people, in order to show that in like manner the unbelieving partner must, from marriage to a Christian, also be classed amongst God's people.

The passage, on the one hand, is against the practice of infant baptism in the Apostle's time. For (1) he would hardly have founded an argument on the derivation of the children's holiness from their Christian parent or parents, if there had been a distinct act by which the children had themselves been admitted formally into the Christian society: and (2) he would not have spoken of the heathen partner as being 'holy' in the same sense as the children were regarded as 'holy,' viz. by connexion with a Christian household, if there had been so obvious a difference between the conditions of the two, as that one was, and the other was not baptized; (3) his argument thus understood exactly agrees with the Rabbinical rule about the baptism of proselytes: 'If the female proselyte is with child, there is no need to baptize the child on its birth; for the mother's baptism becomes a baptism for it' (Jebamoth, f. 78, 1).

On the other hand, the passage asserts the principle on which infant baptism is founded, (1) That family ties with a Christian do in themselves consecrate those who are bound by them; and (2) That the children of Christian parents may therefore be considered as amongst the people of God, and that from this would follow the natural consequence that the whole family would participate in the same rites as belonged properly, and in the highest sense only, to those members or that member of it who was strictly a believer. Bengel: 'Est matrimonium Christianum, est soboles Christiana. Such is the view taken of the passage by Hooker, (E. Pol. V. lx. 6.) Thus the influence of the mother naturally prepared the son to receive Christianity, even when the father was adverse; as in the case of Timotheus, Augustine, and Chrysostom.

ἡγίασται. i. e. 'is consecrated to God by the marriage.' ἐπεὶ ἄρα, 'since in that case.'

Compare verse 10.

ἀκάθαρτα, 'profane' — 'excluded from God's people;' as in the case of 'unclean' meats.
Compare Acts x. 14.

νῦν δέ, 'but as it is.'

ζεται, χωριζέσθω. οὐ δεδούλωται ὁ ἀδελφὸς ἡ ἡ ἀδελφὴ ἐν τοις τοιούτοις εν δε είρηνη κέκληκεν ήμας ο θεός. 16 τί γαρ οίδας, γύναι, εί τὸν ἄνδρα σώσεις; ή τί οίδας, ἄνερ, εί τήν are they holy. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. The brother or "the sister is not "enslaved in such cases: but God hath called us "in peace. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or "what knowest

15. 'It is true that the unbelieving partner is consecrated by the believing partner; but do not carry this so far as to oppose separation if it is desired, and conduces to peace. For the chance of converting the heathen partner is too remote to justify the breach of harmony which such conduct would occasion."

This is not so much a permission of separation, as an assertion that, if on other grounds a senaration has taken place, there is no obligation on the Christian partner to insist on a union, with a view to the ultimate conversion of the other. It is as though he said: 'The general rule for Christians is, as our Lord declared, that marriage is indissoluble: but there is the special case (not spoken of by Him), of those marriages where only one partner is Christian; and in those no one is bound to force the law of Christianity on the reluctant heathen.'

έν δὲ εἰρήνη κέκληκεν, in oppo-sition to δεδούλωται. 'This is no binding law for Christians; on the contrary, the first duty to which we have been converted is to live in peace with one another.' whole previous sentence. 'Do Unbelievγάρ is a reason for the not insist on a reluctant ing husband union; for thou knowand believe est not whether there ing wife. is such a prospect of converting thy heathen partner as to make such a union desirable.' This interpretation is the only one compatible with the obvious sense of verse 15, and of the expression τι οἶδας (not εἰ μή, but) εί σώσεις; and is also in harmony with the general tenor of the Apostle's argument, which is not to urge a union, but to tolerate a separation. It is thus a solemn warning against the gambling spirit which intrudes itself even into the most sacred matters, and is a remarkable proof of the Apostle's freedom from proselytism. Taken by itself, a might possibly be taken as identical with et un-as in the analogous Latin phrase, 'Haud scio an?' and the Hebrew phrase, 'Who knows if?' equivalent to 'It probably will happen' (see 2 Sam. xii. 22; Joel ii. 14; Jon. iii. 9); and accordingly the sense put on the words was, 'Remain together, for perhaps thou mayest save thy partner,' till De Lyra (in the 14th century) pointed out the objection to it. The verse so understood has probably conduced to the frequent instances of the conversion of unbelieving husbands by believing wives. Even the stern severity of Chrysostom relaxes in its presence into the declaration that 'no teacher has such an effect in conversion as a wife;' and this passage, thus interpreted, proγυναϊκα σώσεις; ¹⁷ εἰ μὴ ἐκάστφ ὡς ἐμέρισεν ὁ κύριος, ἐκαστον ὡς κέκληκεν ὁ ⁸θεός, οὐτως περιπατείτω. καὶ οὐτως ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις πάσαις διατάστομαι. ¹⁸ περιτετμημένος τις ἐκληθη; μὴ ἐπισπάσθω^{} ἐνάκροβυστία *κέκλη-

* δ δεός. * Note. MS. C. is deficient between δεισπάσθω] and [γάζεσθα, ix. 6. * πέριος. * τις ἐκλήθη for κέκληταί τις.

11 thou, O 'husband, whether thou shalt save thy wife ? But as 'the Lord 'distributed to every 'rone, as God hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all 'the 1schurches. 'Was any 'rone called, being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised. 'Has any 'rone been called'?

bably had a direct influence on the nurrings of Clottida with Clovis, and Bertha with Ethelbert, and consequently on the subsequent conversion of the two great kingdoms of France and England to the Christian faith. However, although this particular interpretation be erroneous, yet the printerior of the conversion of the principal of the consufficiently expressed in the 14th verse, which distinctly lays down the rule that domestic union can reconcile the greatest differences of religious belief.

17—24. He proceeds to ground his advice on the general rule that Christianity leaves our social relations where it finds them.

17. $\epsilon i \ \mu \dot{\eta}$, 'only.' This verse is rather the conclusion of the precious sentence than the beginning of the next. 'I have nothing more to say, valess if be this.' For a similar irregularity in the use of $\epsilon i \ \mu \dot{\eta}$ see 2 Cor.' iii. 1, and the notes thereon.

The reading of the ancient MSS.— δ εύριος with ἐμέρισε, and δ θεὸς with εέελησεν—is remarkable, as assigning the distribution of the natural gifts and stations of life, probably from the analogy of the gifts of the Spirit, to Christ as 'the Lord;' whilst the calling as 'the Lord;' whilst the calling of men to the Gospel by their conversion is ascribed (as also in verses 15, 24) to God.

From this general conclusion springs a series of parallel instances in confirmation of it:-

First Example. 'The Gentile is not to become a Jew, nor the Jew a Gentile.' The religious distinction between the Jew and Gentile is so completely lost sight of by St. Paul, that he here classes the division between them, not among the spiritual, but the purely social differences of the human race.

ἐκλήθη . . . κέκληται, 'converted to Christianity.'

έπισπάσθω, ες. την ακροβυστίαν. Whilst in the ancient Eastern world circumcision was regarded as a special sign of civilisation. and the Israelites by adopting it again were supposed to roll off 'the reproach of Egypt' (see Rosenmüller on Joshua, v. 9; Ewald on Ezek. xxxii. 19, 24-32), in later times it was regarded by the Greek and Roman world as an opprobrious mark of barbarism; and, accordingly, some Jews, in their desire to accommodate themselves to Grecian usages, endeavoured to efface it. For this practice see ταί τις; μὴ περιτεμνέσθω. 19 ἡ περιτομὴ οὐδέν ἐστιν, καὶ ἡ ἀκροβυστία οὐδέν ἐστιν, ἀλλὰ τήρησις ἐντολῶν θεοῦ. 10 ἔκαστος ἐν τῆ κλήσει ἡ ἐκλήθη, ἐν ταύτη μενέτω. 21 δοῦλος

19 in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised. Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, 20 but the keeping of the commandments of God. Let every one abide in the same calling wherein he was called.

1 Maccabees, i. 15; Jos. Ant. XI. V. 1; Buxtorf, Lex. Talm. 1274; Colsus De Re Med. vii. 35; and the other passages in Westein; and an Essay of Groddeck, 'De Judzis przyputium attrahentibus,' appended to Schöttgen's Iloræ Ilebraices, vol. ii. p. 1159.

19. In this, as in the two exactly parallel passages, Gal. v. 6, vi. 15, the first clause is the same, 'Circumcision availeth nothing, nor uncircumcision; thus asserting the two sides of the Apostle's principle of indifference to the greatest of the Jowish ceremonies, exemplified in his own conduct by the circumcision of Timotheus on the one hand, and by the refusal to circumcise Titus on the other hand. The peculiar excellence of the maxim is its declaration that those who maintain the absolute necessity of rejecting forms are as much opposed to the freedom of the Gospel as those who maintain the absolute necessity of retaining them. In contradistinction to this positive or negative ceremonialism, he gives, in the several clauses of each of the three texts, his description of what he maintains to be really essential. The variation of the three passages thus becomes valuable, as exhibiting in three several forms the Apostle's view of the essentials of Christianity-'Keeping the commandments of God,' 'Faith working by love,' 'A new creature.' These describe the same threefold aspect of Christianity with regard to man, which in speaking of God is described under the names of the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. In this passage, where man is viewed chiefly in his relation to the natural order of the world, the point which the Apostle wished to impress upon his hearers was, that in whatever station of life they were, it was still possible to observe 'the commandments of God' (perhaps with an implied reference to the two great commandments, Matt. xxii. 36-39). In the two passages in the Epistle to the Galatians (v. 6: vi. 15), the more distinct reference to faith in Christ, and to the new creation wrought by His Spirit, is brought out by the more earnest and impassioned character of the argument.

20. isoaroc iv τg khρειτ g khρειτ g

έκλήθης; μή σοι μελέτω· άλλ' εί καὶ δύνασαι έλεύθερος

21 "Wast thou called being a "slave? care not for it: but if thou such an interpretation suits the general context of the passage is obvious; and the hold which it has thus acquired on the language of Christendom, is a good instance of the instinct with which the spirit of the Apostle has sometimes been caught, in spite and almost in consequence of a mistake of the letter, as in other instances the spirit has been lost through an adherence to the letter. That this explanation of the words is mistaken, can hardly be doubted; for (1) he is not speaking in this particular instance of a profession or 'calling' in our sense of the word, but of the state of circumcision or uncircumcision of Jew and of Gentile. (2) The word κλήσις, καλείν, &c. (though in Dion, Hal. Ant. iv. 20, used in a somewhat analogous sense. as a Grecized form of the Roman word 'classis') is in the N. T. never applied to anything else than the call of God to His kingdom through conversion; and is so applied here throughout the rest of the context, as in verses 17, 18, 21, 24. As used, therefore, in this particular instance, the sense, although harsh, must be, 'Seek not to change from circumcision to uncircumcision, or from uncircumcision to circumcision. Either of these two states has been sanctified by its being the one in which God chose to call you to a knowledge of Christ. Let every one rest contented with that mode of calling by which he was called at his conversion. Do not seek a new mode of conversion; the mode which you have experienced is sufficient.' Bengel:—'Status, in quo vocatio quæque offendit, instar vocationis est.' Compare i.

Second Example. 21. 'The slave is not to become free.'

The question here is, whether to understand έλευθερία or δουλεία, after χρησαι: whether the sense is, 'Take advan-'Use it tage of the offer of freerather.' dom;' or, 'Remain in slavery, though the offer is made.' It is one of the most evenly balanced questions in the interpretation of the New Testament. (1) χρῆσαι may either be 'choose,' or 'make use of,' although it leans rather to the former, and thus favours the first interpretation. (2) & kai may either be, 'If, besides, thou hast the offer,' or, 'Even if thou hast the offer,' although it leans rather to the latter, and thus favours the second interpretation. The sense of this particular verse favours the first: for, unless the Apostle meant to make an exception to the rule which he was laving down, why should he introduce this clause at all? The sense of the general context is in favour of the second: for why should the Apostle needlessly point out an exception to the principle of acquiescence in existing conditions of life, which he is so strongly recommending? The language and practice of the Apostle himself, as described in the Acts, favour the first interpretation; e g. his answer at γενέσθαι, μᾶλλον χρήσαι. ²² ὁ γὰρ ἐν κυρίφ κληθεὶς δοῦλος ἀπελεύθερος κυρίου ἐστίν· ὁμοίως ὁ ὁλεύθερος κληθεὶς δοῦλός · duolus nal.

22 mayest be made free, use it rather. For he that "was called in the Lord being a "slave, is the Lord's "freedman: likewise 23 OA he that "was called, being free, is Christ's "slave. Ye Philippi, 'they have beaten us without a trial, and imprisoned us, being Roman citizens; nay, let them come themselves and take us out ' (Acts xvi. 37); and to the tribute at Jerusalem, 'but I was free born' (Acts xxii. 28). The general feeling of the church, as implied in the Epistles and in this passage, favours the second interpretation; it would hardly have seemed worth while to grasp at freedom in the presence of the approaching dissolution of all things; and the apparent preference thus given to slavery may be explained on the same grounds (see verses 29, 30) as the apparent preference given to celi-bacy. The commentators before the Reformation have chiefly been in favour of the second: since, in favour of the first; but Chrysostom observes that, in his time there were some who adopted the view favourable to liberty; as also, there have been some Protestant divines (e. g. Luther) who have adopted the view favourable to slavery. On the whole, the probability seems slightly to incline to the second; and the whole passage is then expressive of comfort to the slave under his hard lot, with which the Apostle sympathises, and which he tenderly alleviates (as in Philem. 16, 17), though not wishing him to leave it. And if, as is probable, the prospect of liberty, to which the Apostle alludes, arose from the fact of the master being a Christian, this sense of the passage would be still further illustrated and confirmed by 1 Tim. vi. 2: 'Let not [the slaves] that have believing masters despise them, but rather serve them (ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δεσυλεύτνεση.

22. δ έν κυρίω κληθείς. The words, 'in the Lord,' which in themselves are superfluous, are here added for the sake of the play on the word κύριος, 'the master of the slave;' ἐν κυρίφ κληθεὶς is thus equivalent to the phrase chyroic ayiou in i. 1. converted, or called by the name of the Lord's servants.' 'He who has been converted so as to be in communion with the Lord, though a slave, is the Lord's freedman;' i. e. (not in the common sense in which a man is said to be the freedman of his former master, but) in the general sense in which a man may be said to be the freedman of him who has made him free. (έλεύθερος=liber; άπελεύθερος= libertus.)

23. This may be taken either:
(1) parenthetically, like the first interpretation of verse 21, and in connexion with it, 'You are Christ's freedmen, do not become slaves if you can avoid it;' alluding, possibly to the practice of 'auctoratio,' or selling of one's έστιν χριστοῦ. ²³τιμῆς ἡγοράσθητε μὴ γίνεσθε δοῦλοι ἀνθρώπων. ²⁴ ἔκαστος ἐν ῷ ἐκλήθη, ἀδελφοί, ἐν τούτῳ μενέτω παρὰ *θεῷ.

25 Περὶ δὲ τῶν παρθένων ἐπιταγὴν κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω, γνώμην δὲ δίδωμι ὡς ἠλεημένος ὑπὸ κυρίου πιστὸς εἶναι.

τῷ Θιῷ.

24 "were bought with a price; "become not " the "slaves of men. "Let every "one wherein he "was called, brethren", therein 2s abide with God. Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord, "but I give my judgment as one that hath obtained merey of the Lord to be faithful.

self, frequent in great slavemarkets such as must have been at Corinth (see Petron. Sat. 117, quoted in Heydenreich, ad loc.); or, (2) as part of the general argument, 'You are Christ's freedmen, do not allow your outward condition of slavery to degrade you into becoming really slaves of men; therefore rest contented in your condition; or, (3) As a general moral growing out of the whole passage, and suggested by some association or circumstance with which we are not acquainted, 'You are Christ's freedmen, do not become the slaves of human power or opinion, by wishing to alter your station either from fear of others. or at their instigation.' If there were more ground for the third, it would make the best sense; but on the whole, the second is most suitable to the context. Any way it is an assertion of the spiritual freedom imparted by Christianity, and intended to counteract any servile spirit, which might have been encouraged by the doctrine of acquiescence in alavery. runk tyosedwar. See vi. 20.

τιμῆς ἡγορασθητε. See vi. 20. 24. ἐν ῷ ἐκλήθη, 'in the condition in which he was converted.' πορίε θας, 'in the presence of God,' i. e. 'he is nearer to God by remaining in his station, than by retiring from it.' If the third interpretation of verse 23 be correct, then there will be a natural contrast intended between αθρώπων and ναρίε θας; ''Do not, by changing your position, not, by changing your position, by the presence of men, when by remaining to the presence and neighbourhood of God.'

25. Another question seems to have been put, concerning the duty of parents in giving their daughters in marriage. παρθίνων, though it might include men, here is 'young women.'

Here, as in 12, he replies that in this case, which, like the former, was a particular emergency not falling under any general rule, he had no command of Christ to give, but spoke with the authority of an Apostle.

This passage has furnished the two words γνόμη and irraγη, which the vulgate translates 'consilium' and 'praceptum,' 'advice' and 'command,' the origin of the famous distinction of later times between 'counsels of perfection,' and 'precepts.' (Cp. 2 Cor. viii. 8—10.) In this ²⁶ νομίζω οὖν τοῦτο καλὸν ὑπάρχεω διὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν ἀνάγκην, ὅτι καλὸν ἀνθρώπω τὸ οῦτως εἶναι. ²⁷ δέδεσαι γυναικί; μὴ ζήτει λύσων `λέλναια ἀπὸ γυναικός; μὴ ζήτει γυναίκα. ²⁸ ἐαν δὲ καὶ ²γαμήσης, οὐχ ἤμαρτες, καὶ ἐὰν γήμη [ἡ] παργήμης.

26 I suppose therefore that this is good ron account of the present 27 distress, that it is good for a man so to be. Art thou bound 28 unto a wife? seek not to be loosed: art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife. But and if thou art married, thou passage the distinction lies only in the fact (as in verse 6) that one was a command of Christ, the other his own opinion, although pronounced with Apostolical authority.

πιστός, 'trustworthy, as a steward of the Gospel' (iv. 2;

1 Tim. i. 12).

26—36. He first repeats his general opinion, as before in verse 1, but now with the addition that his reason for preferring distress; and, throughout, his opinion is given with a special reference (see verses 28, 34) to the particular case of the unmarried daughters, now before his mind.

26. διὰ τὴν ἐντστῶσαν ἀνάγκην.

The present distress.'

'The present distress.'

'On account of the inconvenience entailed upon you by the pressing cares of marriage; so as to make it a general rule applying alike to all times. But such an interpretation is incompatible both with the words and context. For (1) ἀνάγνη is used in 2 Cor. vi. 4; vii. 10; 1 Thess. iii. 7; and espocially Luke xxi. 28 (føræ. ἀνάγνη μεγάλλη for 'distress;' and in the LXX. is used to transact ηρχιηρ = 3λλίψε. (Fa. exix.

143; Zeph. i. 16.) (2) ἐνεστῶσαν is not 'pressing' in any passage in the N. T., but is always used either for 'present' (as in iii. 22; Rom, viii. 38, in both which it is opposed to μέλλοντα; Gal. i. 4; Heb. ix. 9), or for 'impending' (as in 2 Thess. ii. 2; 2 Tim. iii. 1). And this suits perfectly the general context in 28-31. The allusion is to the impending calamities which form the groundwork of Matt. xxiv. 8, &c., which were known to the Jews as the 'pangs of the Messiah,' the natural accompaniments of His coming, and which were fulfilled in the disturbances which burst over the Roman world on the death of Nero.

The form of the sentence seems to be an anacoluthon. στο καλὸν ἀνθρώπω τὸ οῦτως (sc. παρθένον) εἶναι is a repetition of τούτο καλὸν ὑπάρχειν.

καλόν here is used as in verse 1, but is in this place qualified (1) by the annexed reason, διὰ τὴν ἀνάγκην, (2) by the positive assertion in verse 28 (οὐχ ἡμαρτεν) of the lawfulness of marriage.

άνθρώπω is general, for women as well as men.

 ἐὰν δὲ καὶ γαμήσης. 'If, further, thou art married, there was no sin in the act.' θένος, οὐχ ἡμαρτεν· θλῦψω δὲ τῆ σαρκὶ ἔξουσω οἱ τοιοῦτοι, ἐγὼ δὲ ὑμῶν φείδομα. ¹³ τοῦτο δὲ φημι, άδελφοί, ¹ό καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος ἐστιν, τὸ λοιποῦ ὑα καὶ οἱ ἐχοιντες γυακός ὡς κὴ ἔχουτες ὧσιν, ¹³ καὶ οἱ κλαίοντες ὡς κὴ κλαίοντες, καὶ οἱ χαίροντες ὡς κὴ χαίροντες, καὶ οἱ ἀγοράζοντες ὡς κὴ κατέχοιτες, ³¹ καὶ οἱ χρώμενοι ⁴ τὸν κόσμον ὡς κὴ καταχρώδτι δ καιρός.

 τὸ λοιπόν ἐστιν.
 Omit οἱ.
 τῷ κόσμφ τούτφ.

'didst not sin', and if 'the virgin 'married, she 'did not sin'.
29' but such will have trouble in the flesh, but f spare you. But this I say, brethren, the time is short, that 'henceforth both so they that have wives be as though they had mone, and they that weep as though they wept not, and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not, and they that buy as though they at possessed not, and they that thuy as though they at possessed not, and they that thus this world as not abusing it:

ή παρθένος. The article seems to mean 'the unmarried daughter, of whose case I speak.' ἐγὰ δὲ ὑμῶν φείδομαι. Either: (1)

'I rérain from dilating on these veils, to save you from the pain of hearing them; see 2 Cor. xii. 6; or. (2) 'I give you this advice to save you from these officions.' The emphatic iyù (in contrast od. The old explanation, 'I allow marriage to be lawful, as a condescension to your infirmities,' is contrary to the spirit of the spirit o

Apostle. 29. τοῦτο δέ φημε. Not explanatory like λέγω δὲ τοῦτο in i. 12, but for emphasis.

συνεσταλμένος, 'short,' 'contracted into a small compass,'—as we say, 'living many years in one.' Compare Matt. xxvi. 45:

'The hour is at hand.'

τνα, i. e. 'This is the object of the calamities in God's providence.'

το λοιπόν may be taken: (1)
with ἵνα, 'that for the future;
(2) as the nominative to ἐστι, 'it remains that they should be;'

(3) with ὁ καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος, 'The time is short for the future' (i. e. till the Advent). The first, as in Lachmann's punctuation, is the best.

30. κατέχοντες, 'possessing to the full,' as in 2 Cor. vi. 10; and as ἀπέχουσι in Matt. vi. 2.

31. εαταχρώμενοι, 'using to excess.' Compare ix. 18, and see also xi. 32. 'This,' says Bengel, 'is a true description of Christian self-denial. It is not possessed by those, qui habent ut qui habeant et diu habituri sint.'

χρῆσθαι never occurs with an accusative in the New Test. except in this place; also in classical Greek only twice (Xen.
Ages. xi. 11; and a Cretan inscription, Böckh Corp. Inser. ii.
400). Hence the true reading ròν κόσμον of A. B. D¹. F. G. is altered to τῷ κόσμφ in D³. E. J. K.

παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχημα, 'for the outward scene or figure of this world is passing [or is to pass] shion of this world away, before the great change which shall bring away.' μενοι: παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχήμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, ⁵²θλω δὲ ὑμάς ἀμερίμουσε εἶναι. ὁ ἀγαμου μεμυμά τὰ τοῦ κυλοι πῶς 'ἀρέση τῷ κυρίφ: ⁵⁸δ δὲ γαμήσας μεριμυῷ τὰ τοῦ κόσμου, πῶς 'ἀρέση τῆ γυναικί, ⁵⁸ καὶ μεμέρισται. καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἀγαμος κεὶ ἡ παρθύσε ἡ ἀγαμος μεριμυῷ τὰ ἀρέσει.

 Μεμέρισται ἡ γυνὴ καὶ ἡ παρθένος.

22 for the fashion of this world passeth away, but I would have you without carefulnes. He that is unmarried careth for the things that 'are of' the Lord, how he may please the Lord; 25 but he that is married careth for the things that are of 8 the world, how he may please his wife, "and is divided. Both the wife who is unmarried and the virgin who is unmarried' careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be about the restitution of all things.' For the sense see Rev. xxi.1: 'And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away.' The whole passage well illustrates the feeling of the early Church, in expectation of the near approach of the Second Advent. For the words comp. 2 Esd. xvi. 40-44: perhaps imitated from this: 'In those evils be even as pilgrims upon the earth. He that selleth let him be as he that fleeth away : and he that buyeth as one that will lose; he that occupieth merchandise as he that hath no profit by it; and he that buildeth as he that shall not dwell therein; he that soweth as if he should not reap; so, also, he that planted the vineyard as he that shall not gather the grapes. They that marry as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not as the widowers." For the actual realisation of this by the Christians, comp. Arrian (Epict. iv. 7): 'The Galileans are to their wives and children as though they made nothing of them, or had them not.' Also, Ep. ad Diogn. 5, 6. For the general sense comp. 2 Kings v. 26; Isa. xxiv. 1, 2; Ezek. vii. 12, 13; Matt. x. 37.

32. Θέλω δέ. This begins a new thought, though immediately connected with the preceding, like έγὼ δὲ ὑμῶν φείδομαι in verse 28.

32, 33, 34. The variation of reading and punctuation in this passage has more influence on the meaning of the text, than in any other in the Epistle. The best sense is produced by retaining (with A. B.) sai after usμέρισται, and by omitting ή άγαμος after γυνή (with D. E. F. G. J. K.). In that case the sense of the whole passage (32-34) will be: 'I wish that you should have no worldly anxiety. The unmarried man has indeed anxiety. but it is for the cause of Christ; but the married man has the additional anxiety about worldly matters, and the gratification of his wife, and wal mentis thus divided between the interests of Christ and of the world. In like manner both the т

τοῦ κυρίου, ἴνα ἢ ἀγία [καὶ] 'τῷ σώματι καὶ τῷ πνεύματι: ἡ δὲ γαμήσατα μερμιφῖ τὰ τοῦ κόσμου, πῶς 'ἀράση τὰ ἀρόρι. ⁸-τοῖτο δὲ προς τὸ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν "σύμφορον λέγω, οὐχ ἴνα βρόχου ὑμιν ἐπιβάλω, ἀλλὰ πρὸς το ἐσχημον καὶ «ἐυπάρεδρο» τῷ κυρίῳ ἀπερισπάστως. ⁸⁶εἰ

* καὶ σώματι καὶ πνεύματι. * ἀρέσει. * συμφέρον. * εὐπρόσεδρον.

holy both in body and in spirit: but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband. 35 And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is 'seemly, and that ye so may attend upon the Lord without distraction. But if any married and the unmarried woman have an anxiety to please Christ, and be ready for his coming; but the married woman has besides the additional anxiety to please her husband. The sense of µsµiposrau thus corresponds to its meaning in i. 13.

responds to its meaning in i. 13, i. e. 'is distracted' (like μεσμήριξεν in Homer, which Eustath. (on Il. i. 189) explains by μερίζεσθαι), and to άπερισπάστως in verse 35, whereas in the Received Text and Authorized Version, it must bear the harsh meaning, 'the wife and the unmarried woman are different from each other.' The change of tense from μεριμνά to the perfect in μεμέρισται may be ac-counted for by the absence of any present form μερίζεται. The severity of the condemnation of the married state, as if it allowed only of care for the things of this world, is considerably mitigated by this reading, which ascribes the evil not to its exclusively worldly character, but to its division of interests.

If η άγαμος is (with A. B.) retained after γυνή, the sense will then be 'the widow.'

Tischendorf has the καί after μεμέρισται, but loses the advantage of it by a punctuation similar to that of the Rec. Text.

35. This is a qualification (like verse 6) to prevent misunderstanding.

τὸ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν σύμφ., 'this is for your own advantage.'

βρόχου ἐπιβάλω iš a metaphor taken from hunting (Xen. Ven. ii. 5), apparently not from laying a trap, but from throwing a lasso; so that the sense here would be (not 'a snare for your consciences,' but) 'a violent necessity on your wills.'

asy on your win.

civaiptépor, μιρίμνα, ἀπερισπάστως. The image conveyed by these three words is exactly expreased by the story in Luke x.
39–42, of Mary 'sitting by the side of Jesus' feet' (παρακα Ματιλα 'who was cumbered (παρακα μεταϊτο') with much serving, and 'careful (μερμπῆς) about many things'.

For the use of µερίµνα for anxiety, see Matt. vi. 25, 27, 28, 34.

36. He returns to the more especial subject of the unmarried daughters, apparently suggested by the word ευσχημον (= rò πρέπον).

'I give this advice with a δέ τις άσχημονειν έπὶ τὴν παρθένον αὐτοῦ νομίζει, ἐω ἢ ὑπέρακμος, καὶ οῦτως δφείλει γίνεσθαι, δ θόλει ποιείτω· οἰγ ἀμαρτάνει, γαμείτωσαν. ¾ δς δὲ ἔστηκε' ἐν τἢ καρδίς αὐτοῦ ἐδραίος, μη ἔχων ἀνάγκην, ἐξουσίαν δὲ ἔχει περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου δὲλήματος, καὶ τοῦτο κέκρικε ἐν τῆ (¾) καρδία, * πρεἰν τὴν δελήματος, καὶ τοῦτο κέκρικε ἐν τῆ (¾) καρδία,* πρεἰν τὴν · έδραῖος έν τἢ καρδία, οπ. αὐτοῦ.

» καρδίφ αύτοῦ, τοῦ τηρεῖν.

(*) Lachm. omits 184¢ here on a mistaken belief that it is omitted in B. It is, however, both in A. and B., and should be restored.

one suppose' that he behaveth himself 'unseemly toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will: he sinneth not, let them marry, 27 'But he that standeth steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so 'judged in his heart, that he will keep his 'own virgin, 'will do' view to what is becoming; but if any father thinks; &c. What follows may be either, (1) 'That he is behaving undecomingly to his unmarried daughter, by exposing her to the temptations to which she is liable from not being married; 'or, (2) 'That he incurs what is undecoming, by laving an unmarried daughter in his house.

In behalf of the first may be urged: (1) The probable sense of ἀσχηρονεῖ in xiii. 5; (2) The temptation of the daughter, seemingly implied in the words ἐπέραμος . . . γαμείτωσα; (3) The greater suitableness of this sense with the words ἐπὶ τὴν παρθύτον.

In behalf of the 2nd may be urged: (1) The numerous examples of drynperer, in the sense of 'incurring shame' quoted in Wetstein; (2) The undoubted diagrace which attached to a Jewish (and perhaps generally to an Eastern) father, from his daughter remaining unmarried. See Ecclus xiii.

9: 'The father waketh for the daughter when no man knoweth, and the care for her taketh away sleep: when she is young, lest she pass the flower of her age '(παραιμέση). And it was a Rabbinical saying, 'If your daughter be past the marriageable age, release your slave to give him to her for a husband' ούτως ὀφείλει, i. e. ' by reason of the temptation or sin into which she has fallen.'

γαμείτωσαν, i. e. ' the daughter and her lover.'

ἐδραῖος, of firm character, and therefore not swayed by apprehensions of this kind.
 μὴ. ἔχων ἀνάγκην, ' under no compulsion from his daughter's character or temptations; opposed to οῦτως ὀφείλει.

εξουσίαν δὲ ἔχει, ' but having έξουσίαν δε έχει, ' but having the power of doing what he likes, without regard to external circumstances.'

τηρεῖν, 'to keep her at home.'
The construction of τοῦ τηρεῖν κέκρικεν (as in D. G. and Rec.
Text) is justified by Acts xxvii.
1.

έαντοι παρθένον, καλώς "ποιήσει. "" ἀσττ καὶ δ "γαμίζων "τὴν παρθένον ἐαιντοί καλώς ποιεί, "καὶ ὁ μὴ "γαμίζων κρείστο σου "ποιήσει. ""γυνή δόδεται" ἐξό ὅσον χρόνου [ξή ὁ ἀπηρ ἀντης: ἐαν δὲ κοιμηθή ὁ ἀπηρ, "δενυθέρα ἐστιν ὡ θελει γαμηθήναι, μόνου ἐν κυρίω. "" μακαρικτέρα δὲ ἐστιν ἐαν οὐτο μείνη, κατὰ τὴν ἐμὴν γνώμην δοκώ δὲ κάγὼ πυνύμα θεοῦ ἔχειν.

* ποιεί. • ἐκγαμίζων. • δ δέ. • ποιεί.

* Om. τὴν παρθένον ἐαυτοῦ. ε δέδεται νόμφ. ε Add αὐτῆς.

3s well. So then he that giveth 'his own virgin' in marriage doeth well, 'and he that giveth her not in marriage 'will do' 3s better. The wife is bound a las long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be 'fallen asleep', she is 'free to be married too whom she will, only in the Lord. But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and I 'also think' that I have the Spirit of God'.

The whole tone of this passage is determined by the assumption (natural in Greek and Jewish society) that the daughter, whilst yet in house, had no will of her own house, had no will of her on the matter; he was entirely responsible for her, and hence the application to him of some expressions (as in 37), which say the pressions (as in 37), which said here. See Grottius, ad h. loce.

39. One more question remains: 'Whether widows are to marry again?' Here we have the germ of the metaphor in Rom. vii. 1—6; from which later copyists have inserted νόμφ, omitted in A. B. D¹. F.

έν κυρίφ, 'as in communion with Christ:' referring especially to marrying a Christian husband.

40. δοκῶ, 'I trust.'

xāyú. 'I. as well as other brethren.' This he adds to give weight to his advice, as having the authority of the Spirit, though not supported by any direct saying of our Lord. Cp. ver. 25.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. VII 1-40.

In answer to the questions of your letter I reply:

- I. That the single state is best. But with the following qualifications:
- (1.) That, because of the numerous temptations to sin, marriage is good for all who cannot control their passions.
- (2.) That for the same reason married persons should not separate from each other, except on great and solemn occasions, for a time; and against complete separation there is an express prohibition recorded from Christ himself, implying that, if a separation should have taken place, the parties are not at liberty to marry again.

- (3.) That in the case of marriages between heathens and Christians, for which no express command has been left by Christ, but for which I speak with Apostolical authority, the heathenism of one of the parties is no reason for separation (except where the continuance of the union would lead to discord), on the ground: (a.) That family ties with a Christian consecrate to God's service, and so unite together those who in themselves are of different religions. (b.) That there is a general presumption (on which I act not only at Corinth but everywhere) in favour of remaining in the same outward circumstances as those in which we were when converted to Christianity. This rule applies not only to marriage, but to every condition of life; for example, to the two greatest differences of station which can be conceived, the great national distinction of Jew and Gentile, and the great social distinction of slave and free. In the first, remember that, whether Jew or Gentile, in both states you can keep the true commandments of God. In the second, remember that, whether slave or free, you must never lose the true spiritual freedom of the Gospel.
- In anseer to your second question, about the duty of giving your unmarried daughters in marriage, it is again a case on which no express command has been left by Christ. But I venture again myself to reply with Apostolical authority:—
- (1.) That the single state is best: (a.) On account of the impending distress, which ought not, indeed, to dissolve exting ties, but is a reason against your forming new ties amidst the approaching dissolution of all human relations; (b.) On account of the new cares which the married state imposes, and which are especially unsuitable when we ought all to be looking with undivided attention to the service of the Lord.
- (2.) But that, if there is any fear of a breach of Christian decency by the delay of marriage, then the daughter is to be allowed to marry.
 - III. Widows had better not marry again, but they may.

The Apostle's View of Celibacy. In considering the Apostle's recommendation of celibacy, it is necessary to remember that we have here only half, as it were, of the Apostolical mind. If, indeed, this passage stood alone in the New Testament, we might then be justified in taking it as an absolute preference of the single to the married state. But, inasmuch as there are other passages | which speak of marriage not only without condemnation, but with high commendation, it is obvious that the passage before us must be understood as expressing only one side of the truth.2 And it is also The Angclear that of the two, it is this passage which must be stle's view as here qualified and corrected by the others, not vice versa, given not his whole inasmuch as he is here addressing himself to the answer view. of a particular question put to him under particular circumstances; in the others he is speaking without reserve on the general duties of a Christian life, and in Eph. v. 22-33 the marriage state, so far from being spoken of as a state of defilement or inferiority, represents the highest communion of which human society is capable, that between Christ and the Church. This conclusion, to which we should arrive, even before a consideration of the passage in detail, is greatly strengthened by such a consideration. The preference of celibacy, although stated absolutely at first (vii. 1, 7, 8), is afterwards expressly founded on the impending calamities of the time (vii. 26-31), and, apparently in connexion with this, on the greater freedom thereby afforded from worldly cares (vii. 32-35). In one instance, that of the recommendation to widows not to marry (vii. 8, 40). we have in a later Epistle a precent,3 by which this very recommendation is expressly reversed; and, whilst there is no trace in this passage of any belief in the superior sanctity or purity of celibacy in itself, the prohibition of marriage on that ground is elsewhere classed among the signs of a false and dangerous system.

¹ Col. iii. 18, 19; Eph. v. 22— 33; Heb. xiii. 4; 1 Pet. iii. 1—7; 1 Thess. iv. 4. ² Bengel:—"Swpe Apostoli in Evistolia de conjugio agunt. House

² Bengel:—"Sepe Apostoli in Epistolis de conjugio agunt. Unus Paulus semel, nec sponte sua, sed interroratus cælibatum suadet. idene lenissime." With the exception of the last clause, which is an overstatement of the case, this is a fair summary of the whole argument.

³ Such is the probable sense of νεωτίρος in 1 Tim. v. 14.

^{4 1} Tim. iv. 1—3.

And further, that the Apostle's view was not identical with the ascetic views which prevailed a few centuries Different later, is romarkably illustrated by the fact, that there from later is no portion of the Epistles where the hand of later sections copyists and interpreters, endeavouring to conform the text to their own notions, is more clearly visible. It is sufficient to their own notions, is more clearly visible. It is sufficient to σχολάζητε, and ἢτε to συσέρχησθε, and the addition of υρστέις, in vii. 5; the alteration of μεμέρεται in vii. 34, and perhaps of τὴν ὀἐφελήν in vii. 3, so the obviously strained interpretations of καλών in vii. 1, of γρώμην in 25, of ἐνεστώσαν in 26, and of φιδίρωμε in 28.

Again, his preference must be taken with three strong qualifications: First, it is evident that the Apostle's qualified-peculiar temperament, which he himself describes 1.4s being vii. 7) as favourable to cellibacy, has here found the expression and the strong of the pending calamities which, though not here expressly II. As stated to be the precursors of the end of the world, given in were then generally understood so to be; and this ton brings us to a point on which we are forewarned by end of the Christ Himself, that even Apostles might be in error, wold for 'of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no not the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.'

Thirdly, his expressions must be taken with the qualifications arising from the fact that the moral and spiritual ad- III. As vantages of Christian marriage had not yet developed given with could not, by the Jewish law, have been a member of the Sanhedrin. (See Conybeare and Howson, Life of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 95, 2nd ed.

¹ Epiph. adv. Hær. xxx. 16. It has been argued (though without sufficient ground to bring conviction), that St. Paul must have been once the father of a family, else he

ral purposes of

out regard themselves. To a certain extent the highest form of Roman marriage exhibited an image of the union of man and wife for high moral purposes; and the same marriage. may be said of some of the Jewish marriages recorded in the Old Testament and the Apocrypha. But even in these the sterner rather than the gentler affections were called forth; and, in the Greek and Eastern provinces generally, marriage was little more than what the Apostle describes it, good only as preventing worse evils. The rule laid down by the Koran, probably for the same reason, resembles that of the Apostle. We have seen that his denunciations of Greek wisdom must not be extended, without qualification, to that higher philosophy of Socrates and Plato, which to him was only known through the representations of the later sophists and rhetoricians. In like manner, his denunciations of marriage must not be extended, without qualification, to that intimate union of pure domestic affections, which rose out of the combination of the Teutonic and Christian elements, and produced a state of life as far beyond the Apostle's view, as the free commonwealths of modern Europe, or the growth of Christian art, philosophy, and literature,

But, while thus distinguishing between a general rule and a particular recommendation, there is, doubtless, a preference accorded to celibacy; and taking this preference as it stands, two practical inferences may be deduced from the broad principle which, as thus stated, it contains:-First, there are extraordinary circumstances in Christian, as I. Sanction well as in political life, under which the ordinary rules of extraof right or of expediency may be suspended or superordinary seded by a higher claim. The Apostolical preference exceptions under exof a single life in consequence of the then impending traordicalamities still holds good in analogous circumstances; nary cirand what is here confined to the question of marriage cumstanmay, under such circumstances, be considered to apply to all other domestic and social ties. Philosophical historians have truly felt that the monastic system was to a great extent excused, if not justified, by the fact that it originated in an age when it seemed the only refuge from the dissolution of the existing fabric of society. An absolute dictatorship, whether of none, or bishop, or emperor, has often been defended on the ground that it met the emergencies of a crisis of danger and transition. The enforcement of the celibacy of the clergy in the middle ages, doubtless, in part arose from the just instinct that they would else have sunk into an hereditary feudal caste. No one can deny that domestic ties must occasionally be severed by extraordinary calls, political, military, or religious. All these are instances of the adoption of a rule in neculiar circumstances. which the Apostolical advice teaches us not to condemn at once, even though it may seem at variance with the broader principles of Christian life laid down in other parts of the New Testament. What may be the circumstances which call for such measures is a matter to be determined in each particular case. It is enough that this passage exhibits one example, and sanctions the natural feeling which, in times of great excitement or calamity, forbids the entanglement of such earthly ties and cares as in ordinary times are not only allowed but commanded

¹ Koran, iv. 20; lx. 10—12.

And it may not be out of place to recall a celebrated instance of a similarly emphatic preference of celibacy, on precisely similar grounds, not of abstract right, but of special expediency, in the well-known speech of our great Protestant Queen, when she declared that 'England was her husband,' and 'all Englishmen her children,' and that she 'desired no higher character or fairer remembrance of her to be transmitted to posterity, than this inscription engraved on her tombstone, "Here lies Elizabeth, who lived and died a maiden Queen." 1

Secondly, over and above this direct and immediate lesson,

in most parts of the New Testament, but seldom stated servance, so expressly as in this passage, that the practice of the most distance in the passage is the highest duties of Christianity is compatible with every the station and condition of life that is not in itself under the lawful. If even the degraded state of slavery be continuous statent with the cultivation of the true spirit of Christian liberty, if even the great religious divisions of Jew and Gentile may be regarded as alike compatible with the true service of God, then in all other states of life equally the spirit of Apostolic injunctions may be observed where, in the letter, they seem most disregarded. Freedom from earthly care may be maintained there is also the more general truth, implied indeed IL Ob-

¹ Hume's Hist. of England, vol. v. p. 13.

in the married as well as in the single state; indifference to worldly gain may exist in riches, no less than in poverty; our nearners to God depends not on our desertion of one religious community for another, but on our keeping His commandments in whatever religious community His providence has placed us, whether circumcission or uncircumcision.

. . . there are souls that seem to dwell Above this earth—so rich a spell Floats round their attes, where'er they move, From hopes fulfill'd and mutual love.

Such, if on high their thoughts are set,
Nor in the stream the source forget,
If prompt to quit the biss they know,
Following the Lamb where'er He go,
By purest pleasure unbeguiled
To idolise or wife or child;
Such wedded souls our God shall own
For faultless virgins round His throne.

There are in this loud stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of th' everlasting chime;
Who carry music in their heart
Through dusky lane and wrangling mart,
Plying their daily task with busicer feet,
Because their secret souls a holy strain preset.

¹ The Christian Year: Wednesday before Easter, and St. Matthew's day.

ANSWERS OF ST. PAUL (CONTINUED).

THE SACRIFICIAL FEASTS OF THE HEATHENS. Chap. VIII. 1.—XI. 1.

THE subject of the three following Chapters, which is continuous though interrupted by digressions, appears to be, like that of the previous Chapter, an answer to one of the questions sent to him by the Corinthian Church, namely, whether it was lawful for Christians to join in the sacrificial feasts of their heathen fellow-citizens.

The question is one of those which, though of hardly any interest to ourselves, occasioned the greatest practical Statement difficulty in the Apostolical age. It was to the of the Conheathen converts nearly what the observance of circumcision and of the Mosaic ritual was to the Jewish converts, or what in later times the maintenance of castes has been to the converts of India. The act of sacrifice amongst all ancient nations, was an act not merely of religious worship, but of social life. In most cases, only a part of the victim was consumed as an offering to the god; the rest fell to the portion of the priests, or was given as a banquet to the poor, or was sold again in the market for common food, either by the priests, or by such sacrificers as could not afford or did not wish to undergo the expense of the whole victim.1 Hence most public entertainments, and many private meals, were more or less remotely the accompaniments of sacrifice: most animals killed for butchers' meat had fallen by the hand of the sacrificer: the very word for 'feast' in the Hebrew language (חבר) was identical with 'sacrifice,' and from thence in Hellenistic Greek, the word originally used for 'killing in sacrifice' (90ew) was diverted to the general signification of 'killing,' as in the well known passage 'Rise, Peter, kill (9υσον) and eat' (Acts x. 13). This identification of sacrifice and feast was carried to the highest pitch amongst the Greeks. 'Sacrifices' are enumerated by Aristotle (Eth. viii. 9, § 5) and Thucydides (ii. 38) amongst the chief means of social enjoyment; and, in this later age of Greece, it may well be conceived that the religious element was even still more entirely thrown into the shade by the festive character of the meal which followed. The feats which take place amongst the lower orders in Spain, on the carcasses of the bulls killed in the great national bull-fights (Fiesta dos Toros), afford a good illustration of the practice. At Corinth the conquerors in the Isthmian games used to give a banquet to the people, immediately after the sacrifices, in the temple itself of Posidon.¹ That these banquets often took place in temples appears from the stories which relate how Claudius and Vitellius, in their ungovernable greediness, rushed in from the streets to partake of the feats round the altar.

¹ See Heydenreich, ad loc.

Under these circumstances it is easy to imagine the diversity of views which must have sprung up in the Gentile Churches, On the one hand, the mass of the Christian converts would attach no importance to the act of feasting on sacrificial food: it was, they would urge, merely a common meal with which the heathen ceremony that had furnished its occasion or materials was not essentially connected; and, even if it were, there could still have been no religious significance in joining a rite which, from the very nature of the case, was to them absolutely without meaning. On the other hand, the more scrupulous Jewish converts would shrink from any contact with the pollution of heathen worship. It was one of the main points of dispute between the rigid Karaites and laxer interpreters, and extended not only to sacrificial victims, but to sacrificial wine, garments worn by heathen priests, wood from idolatrous gardens or groves. To offer 'polluted bread' upon the altar of the Lord, or to eat the meat of idolatrous princes, had been condemned by the warning of Malachi (i. 7-12), the good example of Daniel (i. 8), and Tobit (i. 10, 11), and the evil example of Israel at Baalpeor (Numb. xxv. 2; Ps. cvi. 28). The flesh which had once been offered to a heathen divinity could never, they would urge, be fit for a Christian meal; to use it even in ordinary circumstances would be an encouragement of the practice of sacrifice, much more to partake of the banquets which took place in the precincts of the temple itself. and on the scene of those licentious orgies with which the heathen worship was so often accompanied. It is one of the complaints brought by the Jew Trypho in his argument with

¹ Grotius, ad loc.

Sueton. Claud. c. 33, 44 : Vitell. c. 13.

Justin, that many who were called Christians ate things offered to idols, and said that there was no harm in doing so.

The importance of the controversy which thus arose is obvious. Closely as the whole social life of the ancient world was interwoven with its religious worship, the decision of this question affected the whole relations of the Christian society with its heathen neighbours; and, in fact, involved all the similar, though more complicated, questions discussed in the four first centuries of the Christian Church, respecting the lawfulness of attending on the spectacles, or receiving the honours, of the Roman Empire. Accordingly this, although the chief, is not the only passage in which the point is discussed. In the Epistle to the Romans we see the excess to which the scruples of the weaker brethren were carried, even to the pitch of abstaining altogether from animal food 2, as, in the Nicolaitanes3 of the Apocalyptic Churches, we see the excess of the indifferentist party, who plunged without restraint into all the pollutions, moral as well as ccremonial, with which the heathen rites were accompanied; and it was to obviate the scandal occasioned by these differences, that, in the decree passed by the assembly of Jesusalem a short time before this Epistle was written, the first condition imposed on the Gentile converts was abstinence from 'meats offered to idols.'

Such was the question which agitated the Corinthian Church. In Chap. vi. 12—14, the Apostle had already pointed out the distinction, which some of his converts appear to have overlooked, between the ceremonial pollution of the sacrificial food and the moral pollution of the heathen. He now proceeds to answer the question more directly and more generally.

Dial. cum Tryphone, p. 253.
 Rom. xiv. 2, 21.

Rev. ii. 14, 15.
 Acts xv. 20.

THE SACRIFICIAL FEASTS OF THE HEATHENS.

GENERAL WARNING.

VIII. 1 Περί δὲ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων οἴδαμεν ὅτι πάντες γνῶσιν

Now as touching things offered "in sacrifice" unto idols we

VIII. 1. It is evident that here, as clsewhere in this Epistle, he chiefly addresses, not the scrupulous, but the unscrupulous portion of his hearers; not the party of Kephas, but of himself or of Apollos. From this section of his converts he seems to quote the language by which they defended their freedom of practice; appropriating it, after his manner, to himself, and to a certain extent adopting and strengthening it (verses 1-6). For similar cases of this identification of himself with his readers, see iv. 6, Rom. vii. 7. This being the general thought of the first sentence, the construction of its particular portions is, as usual in these cases, greatly entangled, and has been variously put together. The following on the whole seems most probable:-

- (1) περὶ ἐἐ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων, now concerning things offered to idols, 'is merely the statement of the subject, as in vii. 1, περὶ ἐἐ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοί; and vii. 25, περὶ ἐἐ τῶν πυρθένων; and xii. 1, περὶ ἐὲ τῶν πυρθένων; and xii.
- (2) οίδαμεν ὅτι πάντις γνῶσιν ἔχομεν, 'we are sure that we all have knowledge,' is the expression of the Corinthians themselves, adopted by the Apostle in the first instance as his own statement of the case. (Compare in verses 10, 11, 'thou that hast knowledge,' 'thy knowledge'). It was true of those who made the claim, that they all had knowledge; it was also in a certain sense true of all Christians, as he proceeds to explain in the 5th and 6th verses, that by the very profession of the Christian faith they all might be expected to have this knowledge. But as in vi. 12, he had been obliged to put a limitation on the general truth, 'All things are lawful for me,' so here he is obliged to put a similar limitation on 'All have knowledge.' This limitation is introduced, first, by the abrupt disclaimer of the inference which he saw might be drawn from the Corinthian statement; distinguishing between the effects of knowledge and of love, and the nature of true and false knowledge (2, 3); secondly, by discarding altogether the formula 'All have knowledge,' and beginning the sentence over again in verse 4, so as to express the same sense in clearer language: and, thirdly, by the direct statement in verse 7, that 'there is not in all that knowledge;' a correction which is an obvious instance of the mode in which the ἔχομεν. ἡ γνῶσις φυσιοῖ, ἡ δὲ ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ. ² εἴ *τις δοκεῖ ʰἐγνωκέναιτι, οὖπω ἔγνω καθὼς δεῖ γνῶναι · ³ εἰ δέ τις ἀγαπῷ ei δέ τις.

 b εἰδέναι τι, οὐδέπω οὐδὲν ἔγνωκε.

know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, 2 but 'love edifieth. OA If any 'one think that he knoweth any 3 thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know: but if truths of Scripture are often set forth by the union of two apparent contradictions.

τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων=τῶν ἀλισγημάτων τῶν εἰδωλων, Acts xv. 20; and the phrase conveys the same sense as is afterwards expanded into περὶ τῆς βρώστως τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων in verse 4.

ή γνῶσις. The absence of any particle is to be explained by the abruptness of the interruption. The knowledge of which he speaks is not secular knowledge as distinguished from Divine or theological, but knowledge of Divine things without love knowledge by itself, as distinguished from knowledge of Divine things with love. Bengel: ' Scientia tantum dicit, "Omnia mihi licent." Amor addit, "Sed omnia non expedient." ' It is the same contrast that is to be drawn out more at length in Chap. xiii.; but as there he is led to speak of it chiefly by insisting on the superiority of active usefulness to spiritual ecstasies, so here he is led to speak of it by insisting on the superiority of that love which shows a regard to the consciences of others, over that knowledge which rests satisfied in its own enlightened insight into the folly 'Know- of human superstition. ledge puff- 'Knowledge such as eth up.' this may indeed expand and enlarge the mind; but it is by mere inflation, as of a bubble, which bursts and vanishes away (φυσιοῖ). Love alone succeeds in building up an edifice (οἰκοδομεῖ), tier above tier, solid alike in its superstructure and in its basis, so as to last for ever.'

Comp. iii. 9. 2. As pretended 'wisdom' (σοφία) was the chief source of the factions or schisms of the Corinthian Church, so pretended 'knowledge' (γνῶσις) was the chief source of its scandals; and accordingly he still proceeds to enlarge on the contrast which he had set forth in verse 1: 'And after all, knowledge without love is no real knowledge; if there be any one who thinks that he has a knowledge of the Divine nature, and may therefore act as freely as he likes about the empty folly of the heathen sacrifices, he ought to remember that he knows nothing yet, in this life, as it really requires to be known.

εί τις δοιεϊ. Compare, for the turn of the expression, Gal. vi. 3 : εἰ γαρ δοιεῖ τις εἰναί τι, μηδὲν ῶν, φρεναπατὰ ἐαυτόν. 1 Tim. vi. 3 : εἰ τις ἐτεροδιδασκαλεῖ . . . τετύψεται.

eνπω, 'not yet,' i. e. 'not in the infirmities of this mortal state.' Compare I Cor. Xiii. 12: 'now we see through a glass,' darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then I shall know even as also I am known.'

3. 'If any one love God' (τὸν 9εὸν). From the love of man τὸν θεὸν, οὖτος ἔγνωσται ὑπ' αὐτοῦ. ⁴περὶ τῆς βρώσεως οὖν τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων οἴδαμεν ὅτι οὐδὲν εἴδωλον ἐν κόσμῳ, καὶ any one love God, the same is known by Him. As touching therefore the eating of o things o offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and

---which must be the sense of a vara in verse 1 (see xiii. 1)—he passes insensibly in verse 2 to the love of God, partly because God is the implied, though not expressed, subject of the previous clause, worthy and adequate object of Christian love. (1) For the connexion of knowledge and love, see 1 John iv. 7, 8: 'every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God: he that loveth not. knoweth not God, for God is love.' He substitutes 'is known of Him,' for 'knows Him,' to express that man can, in this life, hardly be said, in any sense, to know God. It is sufficient to be the object of His knowledge, which in itself implies that we are brought into so close a relation with Him, as to be the object of His care and love, and ultimately, therefore, to know Him. Bengel: 'Cognitionem passivam sequitur cognitio activa (cf. xiii. 12). Egregia metalepsis cognitus est, adeque cognovit." (2) For this identification of God's knowledge with His love, compare Exod. xxxiii. 17: 'thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name.' Also John x. 3: 'He calleth his own sheep by name.' (3) For the identification of God's knowledge of man with man's knowledge of God, comp. the similar blending of the spirit of man with the Spirit of God in Rom. viii. 15, 16; 1 Cor. ii. 11; also John x. 15, 'as the Father knoweth Me, even so know I the Father;' and (4) for the general turn of the whole expression, as implying that every part of our redemption, but especially our knowledge of God, is more properly His act than ours: 1 Cor. xiii. 12, 'then I shall know, even as also I am known' (καθώς έπεγνώσθην); Gal. iv. 9, 'Now, having known God, or, rather, having been known by Him; Phil. iii. 12, 'If I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended (κατελήμφθην) by Christ.' For the unexpected substitution of one thought and word for another, see ix. 17, x. 18.

 our resumes the sentence broken off at η γνωσις. Compare συνερχομένων ούν, xi. 20.

ούζεν είδωλον έν κόσμω. The context of obosic Seoc and the position of έν κόσμφ would lead us to take over not for 'nihil,' but for 'nullum,' and translate 'there is no such thing as an idol (i. e. a pagan divinity) in the universe.' But as the word είδωλον (idol) can hardly be used in this abstract sense in Greek any more than in English, and as in x. 19 it is not so much the non-existence as the nothingness of the idol which is asserted, it is on the whole better to adopt the more common interpretation, 'an idol is nothing,-has no strength and no meaning in any part of the universe; its existence is confined to the mere image in the temple, and has no further ότι οὐδεὶς θεὸς εἰ μὴ εῖς καὶ γὰρ εἴ περ εἰσὶν λεγό· μενοι θεοὶ εἴτε ἐν οὐρανῷ εἴτε ἐπὶ "γῆς, ὥσπερ εἰσὶν θεοὶ πολλοὶ καὶ κύριοι πολλοί, ε [ἀλλ'] ἡμῖν εῖς θεὸς ὁ

· Θεός έτερος.

s that there is no 'God but One: for though there be that are called gods whether in heaven or 'on earth, as there be gods 6 many and lords many, 'yet to us there is but one God the influence elsewhere. This agrees with the use of the word in the LXX. as a translation of "Elilim," i. e. 'nothings,' the Hebrew word of mockery for the false gods (Ps. xevii. 7; Hab. ii. 18, &c.). See also Jsa. xii. 24, and the Rabbis, as quoted on this passage by Wetstein.

καί ὅτι οὐδεἰς ὑτὸς εἰ μὴ εἶτς.

This, whatever be the meaning of the previous clause, is not so much an addition to it, as an explanation of it, which is further expanded in verse 5. The phrase itself is from the Pentateuch, possim.

5. 'For although it be granted that in the heathen phraseology there are, in different parts of the universe, to be found many who bear the name, some of Gods, seem of Lords, yet with Christians it is not so. 'They acknowledge but One to whom the title of the control of the c

In this passage the actual existence of the heathen divinities is neither affirmed nor denied, but left in obscurity. He asserts enly that the vast hierarchy of divinities which met their ears and eyes, in the common parlance and customs of Greece and Asia, ranging from the heights of Olympus down to the caves and streams of Grecian valleys, imposing as it might be, had for Christians no practical importance. They had but one Supreme Source and Centre of the universe, on whom they had been taught to look, not as a mere name, but as a loving Father; and with Him, One Supreme Controller of the universe, no dim hero of distant ages or remote influence of planetary regions, but Jesus Christ, living in their own times, almost within their own knowledge. The heathen dwelt in a world of complicated shadows: Christians lived in a world of simple realities.

λεγόμενοι. 'Called by the name of gods' (see 2 Thess. ii. 4). The word conveys a certain sense of unreality, like λόγοι, λέγειν, in Aristotle, Ethics, vii. 9, x. 9: 'sære words.'

'In heaven or on earth,' dissions of the world, and alluding to the supposed habitations of the pagan divinities; corresponding, perhaps, to the usual divisions in Greece between the Θeal Ολύμπος and Θtol ἐπχθόνιοι, and at Rome between the Dii majores and Dii minores.

ώσπερ εἰσὶν Θεοί πολλοί καὶ κύριοι πολλοί. The stress is on πολλοί, 'many.' 'If there are those who bear the name of gods, πατήρ, εξ οδ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν, καὶ εἶς κύριος Ἰησούς χριστός, δι' οδ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἡμεῖς δι' αὐτοῦ. Ἰὰλλ' οοὐκ εὐ πᾶσιν ἡ γνῶσις. τινὲς δι τῆ "συνηθεία εως ἄρτι τοῦ εἰδωλού νός εἰδωλούντον ἐσθύουστι, καὶ ἡ συνείδησις αὐτῶν

* συνειδήσει τοῦ εἰδώλου ξως Κοτι,

Father, of whom are all things and we 'for Him; and one Lord 7 Jesus Christ, by whom are all things and we by Him. How-beit there is not in 'all that knowledge; 'but some 'aby intercourse with' the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered 'in as, in fact, there are many who do so.'

κύριοι, 'lords,' is added, partly for the sake of the full antithesis, in the next verse, of elg suppose, partly to exhaust the whole nomenclature of the pagan divinities, Kupper being the Greek correlative of the Syrian 'Baal,' which is the usual title of the false divinities in the Old Testament. It also may have reference to such expressions as 'God of gods, and Lord of lords' (Deut. x. 17); 'O Lord our God, other lords besides Thee have had dominion over us' (Isai, xxvi. 13); where 'Adonai'-usually employed in reference to Jehovah - is used for false 'lords,' as κύριος here. If it points to anything specific in the Greek mythology, it would be to the heroes or demi-gods, such as Hercules.

ήμῖν, 'to us,' 'in our judgment as Christians, whatever others may hold.'

For the distinction between the ideas of 'Father' and 'Lord,' as applied respectively to God and to Christ, compare the salin tations of all the Episitles, and especially xv. 24. The prepositions it and circ, as applied to the Father, in contrast with Etit, as applied to Christ, represent the Father as the original source and ultimate object of all things, Christ as the instrument by which they came into existence. See John 1.6, 1 Heb. 1.2, 3, Col. i. the expression 'for I lim' (sic ciris'), which is here used to express the relation of man to the Father, is there applied to Christ alone. In Rom. xi. 36, all three are applied equality to God.

7. Thus far St. Paul had stated the reasons for regarding the sacrificial feasts as matters of indifference, by giving an account of the knowledge which all Christians might be supposed to have. Now begins the antithesis to the sentence, in the statement of the reverse side of the question-the practical difficulties, instead of the ideal perfection of the Church; inasmuch as the knowledge (h γνῶσις) which he has just described as properly belonging to all Christians, is not actually found in all.

τη συνηθεία . . τοῦ εἰδόλου. Lachmann's reading of συνηθεία, which is supported by A. B. would be 'by familiar intercourse. But it may have been a correction of συνείδρει, συνείξη in D. E. F. G. J. The σει. strange use of the word συνείδηεις might be explained by the ἀσθενηςοὖσα μολύνεται. ⁸βρῶμα δὲ ἡμᾶς οὐ παραστήσει τῷ θεῷ· οὕτεʰ ἐὰν μὴ φάγωμεν, περισσεύομεν, οὕτε ἐὰν˚ φάγω-

* παρίστησι. * όδτε γὰρ ἐὰν φάγωμεν. * ἐὰν μή. Laclim. Ed. 1. οδτε ἐὰν μὴ φάγωμεν, δστερούμεθα, οδτε ἐὰν φάγωμεν, περισσεύομεν.

sacrifice' unto idols; and their conscience being weak is defiled.

8 But meat "awill not commend us' to God; an neither if we eat

Anot, are we the better, neither if we eat, an are we the worse.

Apostle's turn for etymological argument. The idea of 'knowledge' under various expressions, oloa, elĉévat, &c., runs through this passage (viii. 1, 2, 4, 7, 10, 12), and thus the compound συνείδησις might be used. as occupying a middle position between our words 'consciousness' and 'conscience,' somewhat in the sense in which we speak of 'conscious guilt or innocence.' Thus here it would be 'a conscious awe of the idol,' as in 1 Pet. ii. 19, 'a conscious awe of God,' like aiding in classical Greek.

In the order of the words, Lachmann, with B. D. E. F. G. places for days between sweetdyest and row eichous, the Received Text, with A. J. places it between sickhow and be eichalbrow. The former is probably correct, and, if so, is an instance of the violent transposition of words which often breaks up the order of St. Paul's sentences. (See note would be the same in both one would be the same in both one would be the same in both one at even at the present moment.)

perly be doftrwr örrwr, and probably arises from the Apostle's tendency to personify all the feelings he describes. defering is (not 'giving way to temptation,' like departic, but) 'ill instructed,' 'not attained to full Christian strength.' Comp. Rom. xiv. 1, xv. 1. For the general idea as contrasted with 'edification,' or 'perfection,' see Eph. iv. 18—16.

[^]μολύνεται, 'is defiled by the sense of sin, which would not have been the case in a stronger conscience.' Comp. τύπτοντες, in verse 12.

 βρῶμα δέ, κ. τ. λ. 'The whole question of food is in itself absolutely indifferent.' This is an objection to the scruples just mentioned, although stated so generally as to meet the en-lightened objector also, and is parallel to the statement about circumcision and uncircumcision in vii. 19. Compare Matt. xv. 17, and (apparently in reference to the same subject) 1 Cor. vi. 13, 'meats for the belly and the belly for meats;' and Rom. xiv. 17, 'the kingdom of God is not meat and drink;' where, as here, the primary thought is that there is no religious excellence in abstaining from food. This meaning is still more strongly brought out in the order of έαν μη φάγωμεν, περισσεύομεν, and ἐἀν φάγωμεν, ἐστερούμεθα, in A2. D. E. F. G. J. which Lachmann has adopted in his second edition, against A1. B. which read έὰν μὴ φάγωμεν, ὑστερούμεθα, ούτε έαν φάγωμεν περισσεύομεν. ού παραστήσει, 'will not bring us near to God.'

μεν, Ιστερούμεθα. ⁹ βλέτετε δὲ μή των ἡ έξουσία ὑμῶν αῦτη πρόστομμα γένηται τοῖς "ἀσθενέσυ». ¹⁹ἐὰν γάρ τις ίδη [σέ] τον έχουτα γνώσων ἐν εἰδωλείω κατακείμενον, οὐχὶ ἡ συνείδησις αὐτοὶ ἀσθενοῦς οὐτος οἰκοδομηθήσεται εἰς τὸ τὰ εἰδωλό-Φυτα ἐσθείω; ¹¹ἀπόλλυται γὰρ ὁ ἀσθενών ἐν ἡ σῆ γνώσει, ἀσθενοῦσιν,

 καὶ ἀπολεῖται ὁ ἀσθ, ἀδελφὸς ἐπὶ τῷ σῷ γνώσει, δι' δν Χριστός,

• But 'look lest by any means this 'power of your's become on atumblingblock to them that are weak. For if any 'one see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be 'editied 11 to eat those things which are offered 'in sacrifice' to idols' "For 'the that is weak 'perishes through thy knowledge—"the βλέπετε δέ. 'But, though you have this liberty, &c., beware.' Here, as in verses 1—6, the objections, though appropriated by St. Paul, are more or less understood to come from the Corinthians.

έξουσία, 'right,' refers to the phrase πάντα μοι έξεστι, vi. 12.

10. ir sikuktis coraculpures, 'enjoying a sacrificial feast in the precincts of a temple.' sikuktion is only mad by Jewish ktion is only mad by Jewish signating healthen temples by the sacred word veds, used to express the temple of Jerusalem. (I Mac. i. 47, x. 83.) It is a kind of parody on the names of temples as derived from the divinities to derived from the divinities to "Hpoin", &c. caractipures, 'lying,' the supplementation.

word for presence at a feast, taken from the practice of dining in a recumbent posture.

oiκυδομηθήσεται, which elsewhere occurs only in a good sense, is here used in a bad sense, with a kind of irony: 'He will have made an advance, but in the school, not of good, but of evil.' Calvin: 'ruinosa ædificatio.' It is used in a bad sense in Malachi iii. 15, ἀνοικοδομοῦνται ποιοῦντες ἄνομα. Comp. Jos. Ant. xvi. 6: εἰς νουθεσίαν αὐτῶν οἰκοδομῶν αἰτοῖς.

What in x. 14 is condemned on its own account, is here condemned only for the sake of others; that being the point of the argument with which aloue the Apostle is here concerned: —'He will have been built up, but with a building that leads to nothing.'

 11. ἀπόλλυται γὰρ ὁ ἀσθενῶν ἐν τῆ σῆ γνώσει, ὁ ἀδελφός.

The sense of Lachmann's reading is the same as that of the Received Text, but it renders the peculiarities of the style much more striking, απόλλυται, for απο-Actras, expresses more strongly. not 'will perish,' but 'is at this moment perishing.' γάρ (A. has our), for cai, gives the reason for a suppressed sentiment of grief at the sin of the weaker brother: ' [Alas, that it should be so! for then | there will be a ruin of the weak-minded man by means of thy enlightenment.' The separation of έν τη γνώσει from ἀπόλ-Auras, to which it belongs, is after the Apostle's usage of throwing the important word out of its δ άδελφος δί θυ χριστός ἀπέθωνει. ¹¹ ούτως δέ ἀμαρτάνοντες είς τοὺς άδελφούς καὶ 'πότοντες αὐτῶν τὴν συνείδησω ἀσθε νοῦσαν, είς χριστόν ἀμαρτάνετε. ¹³ διόπερ εί βρῶμα σταυδα. λίζει τὸν ἀδελφόν μου, οἱ μὴ φάγω κρέα εἰς τὸν αἰώνα, ἰνα μὴ τὸν ἀδελφόν μου σκανδαλάνα.

12 brother for whom Christ died. But when ye sin so against the brethren and wound their weak conscience, ye sin a-13 gainst Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh 'for ever, lest I make my brother to offend.

 * Gr. while the age lasteth.

natural place to the end of the sentence: see ix. 10, x. 27, xv. 19. And the isolated and final position thus given to o acehooc gives a pathetic close to the whole sentence; 'that weak-minded man is no less than thy Christian brother, to save whom Christ gave Himself up to death.' iv. for ent, expresses more fully that this knowledge is the cause of his ruin. For the contrast thus exhibited between the self-sacrifice of our Lord's love for man, and the self-indulgence of the Corinthians' knowledge, compare (in a similar context) Rom. xv. 1-3: 'We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification; for even Christ pleased not Himself.' Comp. also chap. xi. 1.

 τύπτοντες, 'striking a conscience or mind already weak.' Bengel: 'Sicut jumentum lassum verberibus urgetur.'

εἰς χριστὸν ἀμαρτάνετε, comp. Matt. xxv. 40: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me.'

κρέα, i. e. 'animal food of any kind,' in allusion to the extreme scruples of those who, from fear of the meat in the shambles being sacrificial, confined themselves entirely to vegetable food.

eie ròv niūva, 'for ever,' which ther passages of St. Paul's Epistles is usually rendered by the plural, eie rove niūvae, being the iteral translation of Pyby. The hyperbolical character of the expression may be compared with Rom. ix. 3.

The whole argument closely resembles Rom. xiv. 19—22, even to the particular phrases employed: comp. Ερώμα, οἰκοδομῆς, φαγείν κρέα, πρόσκομμα, σκανδαλίζεται, ασθενείν κατάλνε.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, VIII, 1-13,

Your argument on sacrificial food (though implying a disproportioned estimate of howeledge, which, compared with lone, is worthless, whether as an instrument of Christian progress, or as a means of insight into things divine) is on the whole correct. The sacrificial food may of itself be lawfully eaten; because we, as Christians, know full well that to us the wast array of heathen divinities is a mere illusion, and that our only religious relations are those in which we stand to the Father of all, and to our Master, Jesus Christ.

There are, however, some of your number who, not having attained to this belief, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, are still tossed about by the scruples of their Jewish education, and still, when they eat the food of which part has been offered to heathen divinities, regard themselves as partaking in an idol sacrifice, and with an inward horror of the idol in whose presence they conceive themselves to be. It is true that the whole matter of food is in itself absolutely indifferent, and that, in a religious point of view, no one is the better or the worse for it. But it is not indifferent, if, by the example of those who without scruple join the banquets in the precincts of an idol temple, those who have scruples are induced to do the same, that being a sin to them which to others is an advance in Christian liberty, and thus ruin is brought on those to whom we are bound by our ties of Christian brotherhood, and to save whom from this very ruin Christ denied Himself even to death on the cross. He lives in and for them; and it is, therefore, not only against them, but against Him, that you offend ; and rather than incur this guilt, rather than forsake the example of tender love which He has exhibited. I will never think of touching a morsel of flesh, if I think that thereby I should ensnare to sin one who is my brother.

It may be observed, that in the whole of the foregoing passage, but especially in its conclusion, there is, if not a direct allusion to our Lord's words, a new duty acknowledged, which probably was first inculcated in our Lord's teaching, namely, the paramount obligation on men to regard the scruples of their ill-instructed brethren: - 'Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck. and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." The martyrs in the time of the Maccabees (2 Macc. vi. vii.) incurred death rather than violate the law by eating forbidden food; but it was reserved for St. Paul to declare that he would incur death rather than offend his fellow-Christians by an act of the abstract lawfulness of which he had himself no doubt. Such a delicacy of morality is seldom found to elicit such a depth of enthusiasm; and this special instance of its application involves all those finer feelings of toleration and regard for the rights of conscience, almost unknown in heathen times, rare even in Christian times, and most rare when combined with a firm and earnest conviction of truth and falsehood

¹ Matt. xviii. 6.

SACRIFICIAL FEASTS OF THE HEATHENS (CONTINUED).

HIS OWN EXAMPLE OF SELF-DENIAL-

1X. 1-X. 14.

THE concluding verse of Chap, viii, with the present Section which springs from it, is an illustration and example of that intense sympathy which the Apostle elsewhere (2 Cor. xi. 29) describes, in the words, 'Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I hurn not?' The mention of the loss of the weak-minded Christian, and of the sin thereby committed against Christ Himself, rouses him from the impartial calm with which he has hitherto held the scales of the contest between the over-scrupulous and over-indulgent parties, now siding with one, and now with the other; and he plunges into the breach himself, in order by his own example to put to shame the cold and tardy reasonings of his less susceptible followers. But as he makes this sudden change from the second to the first person. as he turns this glance into the recesses of his own life, past, present, and future, as far as thought could reach (sis 70) alôva), he feels a momentary check, from the recollection that there were those amongst his readers who would, if not in the particular instance of which he is speaking, at least in one closely connected with it, ascribe his self-denial, not to its real motive of Christian love, but to his alleged inferiority to the other Apostles of Christ. It would almost appear as if he had properly concluded the subject at viii. 13, and then resumed it from this new point of view, on the arrival of fresh tidings from Corinth, informing him of the imputations which he now proceeds to dispel.

Of all St. Paul's acts of humiliation and self-devotion, that which, if not the most striking, was the most habitual, and, in his case, the most peculiar, was his maintaining himself, not at the cost of the societies which he converted, but by the labour of his own hands as a Clician tentmaker. It was at Corinth that this practice is first mentioned in the Acts (xviii. 3); and from the stress laid upon it here and in the Second Epistle (xi. 7, 8, 9, 10; xii. 14—18), it would seem that at Corinth it attracted most attention, and was most constantly practised, though he also refers to it as his well known custom at Thessalonica (1 Thess. ii. 8-10; 2 Thess. iii. 7-9), and at Ephesus (Acts xx, 34).1 In all these cases it is introduced, as here, with the same general consciousness of its being the most obvious instance of love and self-denial to which he could refer; and in Acts xx, 34, 35, the moral deduced from it is similar to that enforced in this passage: 'That so labouring ye ought to help the weak.' But this example would lose considerably in force, if it were asserted that he had no right to maintenance from the Churches, and that consequently his labour was the result, not of self-devotion, but of necessity. That this was asserted is clear, not only from this passage, but from the implied argument in 1 Thess. ii. 1-6, 9: 2 Thess. iii. 8, 9: and 2 Cor. xi. 7-9, xii. 16, 17, where he vindicates himself (in connexion with this subject) against the charge of 'covetousness,' declares that 'he might have been burdensome to them, as an apostle of Christ,' that he took nothing from them, ' not because he had not the power,' and that they thought by so doing he had 'committed an offence,' This charge seems to have been one out of the systematic series of attacks levelled against him by the Judaizing Christians, who could not bear to see their great antagonist assume the same lofty position in the Church as was occupied by the original Jewish Apostles of Jerusalem. One mark of their position had always been their maintenance, at the Lord's command, by those to whom they preached (see 1 Cor. ix. 14; Matt. x. 9, 10; Luke x. 7). This right of maintenance seems to have been so habitually claimed by them, that its abandonment by St. Paul, instead of awakening a higher admiration for his apostolical goodness, roused in the suspicious minds of his enemies, partly doubts of his apostolical dignity, partly doubts of his Christian sincerity, which were ready to burst forth the moment that the subject of his selfsupport was mentioned. In illustration of this opposition may be mentioned the jealousy which, on this very same ground, was roused against Socrates and Plato by the professed sophists.2

¹ For the whole subject of the Apostle's trade of tent-making, see Conybears and Howson, Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. pp. 51, 416. Every Jew learned a trade; that of making tent-cloths or "Cilicium" (the name by which the fabric was known in the commerce of the time) was most natural to the Apostle, as a native of Cilicia; and at Corinth, the great resort of travellers, there would be a special demand for them.

 See Grote's History of Greece, vol. viii. pp. 482, 483.

Such, apparently, were the recollections which crossed the course of the Apostle's thoughts at this point in the Epistle. On the one hand was the scene of the tentmaker's trade at Corinth, where the few hours of leisure, after the long arguments in the synagogue and the market-place, were consumed with Aquila and Priscilla in the uncongenial labour of weaving the long goats' hair of his native hills into the sackcloth or the tent-cover, for the Greek fisherman or wandering Arab. On the other hand was the dogged stupidity, or the implacable animosity of his adversaries, who were ready, with their cold insinuations, to contrast, as they supposed, the enforced meanness and degradation of Paul of Tarsus with the conscious dignity and repose of the Apostles at Jerusalem, or of those who claimed to be their legitimate representatives at Corinth. To set forth this voluntary abnegation of a right, and to assert the right itself, is accordingly the twofold object of this digression. But as the abnegation could . not be shown to be voluntary until the right which had thus been questioned was vindicated, what would else have been the natural order is inverted; and he breaks off from the triumphant assertion of his self-denial in viii, 13, to answer the charges of the Judaizers, who, by the time that he wrote the Second Epistle, had become so rampant as to claim his almost exclusive attention, but who, in this Epistle, are noticed here alone.

IX. ¹*Οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐλεύθερος; οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος; οὐχὶ Ἰησοῦν τὸν κύριον ἡμῶν ἐώρακα; οὐ τὸ ἔργον μου ὑμεῖς ἐστὲ ἐν κυρίφ;

Οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος; Οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐλεύθερος; Οὐχὶ Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν.

1 "Am I not free? am I not an apostle? have I not seen Jesus " our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord?

1. The order of the words in Lachmann's text, 'Am I not free? am I not an Apostle?' is not only that of the most ancient MSS. but is also in conformity with the sense. His freedom and not his Apostleship was uppermost in his thoughts, and was the special occasion of the digression, 'Am I not free to eat or not to eat? Yes, and am I not free from the necessity of working with my own hands, like a slave?' (Comp. verse 19, where this is the force of ελεύθερος.) From this he instantly proceeds to the vindication of his Apostleship on which this freedom was grounded; and from this again to the two chief signs of Apostleship; Apostle's namely, 1st, the sight authority. of the Lord; 2nd, the practical effects of his teaching. The first of these signs was, from the nature of the case, regarded as necessary to constitute an Apostle. What the vision of God had been to the older prophets, that the sight of Christ, especially of Christ risen from the grave, had been to the Apostles. See Acts i. 22. Intercourse with the Lord had invested the Twelve with their original authority; the alleged absence of such intercourse in the case of St. Paul, therefore, was urged against his claims to the Apostleship. Compare 2 Cor. v. 16: and also the Clementine Homilies (xvii, 19), which express openly what we gather from these passages by implication. To this charge he opposes his assertion that he, as well as the others, has seen the Lord. The passage does not necessarily limit the appearance to one occasion, and may include some of those visions which are mentioned in 2 Cor. xii, 1-4; Acts xviii, 9, xxii, 17. But, when compared with 1 Cor. xv. 8, it points chiefly to the occurrence at his conversion. Acts ix. 4, in which, according to these and other intimations (Acts ix. 17, axvi. 16, xxii. 14, 15), though not according to the direct narrative of the Acts (which here, as elsewhere, understates rather than overstates what we learn from St. Paul), there was a visible manifestation of Christ Himself.

manifestation of Christ Himself.
The second sign of Apostleship, which corresponds to what the special contract of the contract the Sprit, blends with the statement of the fact something of a pathetic appeal to the Coriothians themselves: 'You are the last men who ought to have questioned the authority, of the genuineness of which you are yourselves the most striking second of the contract o ² εἰ άλλοις οὐκ εἰμι ἀπόστολος, ἀλλά γε ὑμῶ εἰμί. ⁵η γὰφ ἀφραγίς ⁸μου της ἀποστολης ὑμεῶς ἐστὰ ἐσ κυρίω. ³η ἐμὴ ἀπολογία τοις ἐμὰ ἀπακλογία τοις ἀπακλογία τοις ἀπακλογία τοις ἀπακλογία τοις ἀπακλογία ἐπακλογία ἐπακλογία ἐπακλογία ἐπακλογία ἐπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀποστολοι καὶ οἰ ἀποκλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀπακλογία ἀποκλογία ἀ

* The dune for mon this.

αθτη έστι.

2 If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord. 3 Mine answer to them that 'judge me by questioning' is this. 43 Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as 'the other tum sumi potest pro veritate evangelii et religionis Christiane.' Compare Coleridge's saying, 'The two great proofs of the truth of Christianity are Christianity and Christendom.'

'In the Lord' (ir suplies) both in verse 1 and 2 applies to the whole sentence, expressing as if unconsciously the atmosphere in which he moved and lived. Compare vii. 39.

Compare iv. 15.

σφραγίς, seal—'attestation.'
3. ἀπολογία, 'defence,' as in a court of justice.

ανάκριστς, 'examination,' as by magistrates at a trial, see Acts iv. 9, xxviii. 18; Luke xxiii. 14. Here we see a direct allusion to his antagonists.

αϋτη, namely, what he has just said; 'This contains all my defence. I have no more to add to it.'

 μὰ οὐκ ἔχομεν, 'Surely we are not without power,' &c. ἔξουσίαν, 'the right,' or 'liberty.' Comp. viii. 9; also vi. 12. φαγεῖν καὶ πεῖν, 'to eat and to drink,' i. e. 'to be maintained at the public cost.' Compare the use of the word γροφή in classical Greek, for the support or pay of soldiers. 5. ἀδτλφήν γυναῖτα, 'a Christian woman as a wife, also to be maintained at the public cost.'

The fact of these women accompanying their husbands on their journeys may be explained by the necessity of females to gain access to and to baptize the female converts in Greece and other oriental countries; the same necessity which gave rise to the order of Deaconesses. Marriage The notion of some of of the the Fathers, that the Apostles. women here alluded to were not wives, but companions, like those who attended Christ in the Gospels, is untenable. The word yeraica would in that case be superfluous, and the argument requires that they shall be regarded, not as maintaining the Apostles (like the women in Luke viii. 2, 3), but as being maintained along with them, which could only apply to their wives. This misunderstanding of the passage either originated or confirmed the institution of asrai, or ἀγαπηταί, which, in consequence of the great abuses springing from it, was abolished by the Council of Nicæa. Two facts are here implied:

women called άζελφαί, συνεισ-

τοῦ κυρίου καὶ Κηφάς; ⁶η μόνος ἐγὼ καὶ Βαρνάβας οὖκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν ^{}μη ^{}ἐργάζεσθαι; ⁷τές στρατεύεται ίδιοις ὁψωνίοις ποτέ; τίς φυτεύει ἀμπελώνα καὶ ⁶τὸν καρπὸν αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐσθίει; ⁴τίς ποιμαίνει ποίμτην καὶ ἐκ τοῦ γάλακτος τῆς ποί-

* τοῦ μή.

The hiatus in C. which began at vii. 18, ends here.

* ἐκ τοῦ καρτοῦ.

* ἐκ Τοῦ καρτοῦ.

6 apostles and the brethren of the Lord and Kephas? or J only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working? Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard and eateth not of the fruit thereof?  who feedeth a flock and eateth not of the milk of the flock?

1st, That Paul was unmarried, which agrees with vii. 7; 2nd, That the Apostles generally were married, which agrees with the common tradition respecting all of them but St. John. Peter and the brethren of the Lord are mentioned especially, as being those most esteemed by the Jewish party, at whom the Apostle here glances,-Peter, as the head of the Jewish Church; the brethren of the Lord, as closely connected by earthly lineage with our Lord, and one of them probably the head of the Church at Jerusalem. That Peter was married agrees with the mention of his mother-in-law, Matt. viii. 14: Mark i. 30: Luke iv. 38: with the (doubtful) allusion to his wife in 1 Pet. v. 13; and with the traditions about his wife and children in Clem. Alex. Stromat. vii. 52, 53. Her name was said to be Concordia or Perpetua. (Grabe ad Spicil. Patr. i. p. 330.) The statement that 'the brethren of the Lord' were married agrees with the mention of the grandsons of Jude (Euseb. II. E. iii. 20); but throws some doubt over the common tradition which represents the chief of them, James the Just, as single. (Epiph. adv. Hær. lxxviii. 14.)

This is the only mention of Barnabas in conjunction with St. Paul, since the date of the quarrel, in Acts xv. 39.

7, 8. He now proceeds to defend his right, partly from the nature of the case, partly from the Old Testament.

First, The analogy of other occupations. He selects three: the soldier in the Roman armies always receives his regular pay; the owner of a vineyard eats of the grapes of his own vincyard; the shepherd is supported by the milk of the flocks which he tends. The example from the army, like most of the military expressions in the Epistles, is true only of the later ages of Greece and Rome; when the voluntary service and mixed pursuits of the ancient soldiers (comp. Thucyd. vi. 31; Liv. v. 8) were superseded by the regular profession of a standing army.

στρατεύεται, 'serves in the army.' Comp. Luke iii. 14.

οψώνια, 'pay,' 'stipendia.' φυτεύει άμπελώνα refers (as appears from Matt. xxi. 33) to the vintage of the owner of the vineyard. άμπελών is (not 'a vine,' but) a 'vineyard.'

έκ τοῦ γάλακτος, i. e. 'from the proceeds of the sale of the milk,' μνης οὐκ ἐσθίει; 8 μὴ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ταῦτα λαλῶ, ἡ * καὶ ὁ νόμοςταῦτα $^{\text{o}}$ οὐλέγει; 9 ἐν γὰρ τῷ c Μωυσέωςνόμῳ γέγραπται

* $ oùxl mal. b ont. où. " Masséus.

8 Speak I these things as a man? or saith not the Law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses 'thou shalt or 'from the food made out of the milk.' For a similar juxtaposition of soldiers and labourers, see 2 Tim. ii. 4—6.

Secondly, The sanction of the Old Testament, as conveyed in the command to allow the ox to cat the corn which it was employed in treading, Deut. xxv. 4. It is remarkable that the Apostle should rest his argument on a text apparently so remote from his object, especially as its immediate context, Deut, xxiv. 19-22, contains commands relative to gleaning, which directly confirm his previous position. But (1) the moral and general character of the preceding context might appear to justify its extension to the whole passage; and, (2) there was an appositeness in the selection of this command, partly as an introduction to the metaphor of threshing and sowing which follows in the next verse, partly from the proverbial character of the precept. which occasions its introduction in a similar context in 1 Tim. v. 18. Compare the quotations from Ex. iii. 6, and 1 Kings xix. 5, in Mark xii. 26, and Luke xx. 37; and in Rom. xi. 2; under the names of 'the bush,' and of 'Elijah.'

 κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, i. ε. 'merely by human motives,' or 'in human language."

ταῦτα, 'these things,' i. ε. 'the substance of what has just been said,' in verse 7.

9. άλοῶντα, either by treading with its hoofs, or by dragging a threshing-machine. The humanity of the Jewish law was in mily of the Jewish law was in tinguished from that of Gentile mations. (See Michaelis on the Mossic Law, iii. § 130.) Compare the well-known Egyptian inscription in the tombs of El Kaho re Elithyai; and the Greek proving of the Greek proving of the Greek proving of the Greek proving of the Greek proving the Greek pro

My των βοων μέλει το δεφ, ε.τ.λ.

"The real purport of this passes to us in a decrease of us in a decreas

This is one of the many instances where the lesson which is regarded as subordinate is denied altogether, as in Hos. vi. 6, 'I will have mercy, and not sacrifice,' and Ezek. xx. 25, 'I gave them statutes which were not good.'

γάρ gives the reason for the implied assertion: 'In consequence of our wants the law speaks, for it is written,' &c.

By us' he means not the Apostles, but men generally; and the conclusion which he draws relates, not to the spiritual, but to the literal harvest; viz. that the example of the ox justifies

Οὐ φιμώσεις βοῦν ἀλοῶντα. μὴ τῶν βοῶν μέλει τῷ θεῷ,

¹⁰ ἢ δὶ ἡμας πάντως κέγει; δὶ ἡμας γὰρ ἐγράψη, ὅτι δυἐκλεί

ἐτ ἐλπῶι ὁ ἀροτριῶν ἀροτριῶν, καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν ἐτ ἐτ ἐλιδιῶ ὁ ἀροτριῶν ἀροτριῶν, καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν ἐτ ἐτ ἐλιδιῶ ὁ ἀροτριῶν ἀροτριῶν, καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν ἐτ ἐτ ἐκιδιῶν τὸ ἐνρῶν τὰ πνουματικὰ ἐσπείρα μεν, μέγα εἰ ἡμεῖς ὑμῶν τὰ σαρκικὰ θερίσομεν; ¹³ ἐἰ ἀλλοι τῆς ὑμῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μάλλον ἡμεῖς; ἀλλὰ

¹ ἡμῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μάλλον ἡμεῖς; ἀλλὰ

¹ ἐνρῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μάλλον ἡμεῖς; ἀλλὰ

¹ ἐνρῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μαλλον ἡμεῖς; ἀλλὰ

¹ ἐνρῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μελλον ἡμεῖς ἀλλον ¹ ἐνρῶν

¹ ἐνρῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μελλον ¹ ἐνρῶν

¹ ἐνρῶν ἐξουσίας μετέχουστυ, οὐ μελλον ¹ ἐνρῶν

¹ ἐνρῶν ¹

ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ὀφείλει.
 τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ μετέχειν, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι.
 ἐξουσίας ὑμῶν.

not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn.'
10 both God take care for oxen, or saith He it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes no doubt it "was written, "because he that plougheth "ought to 'plough in hope, and he that 11 thresheth "in hope of partaking.' If see "sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if see shall reap your carnal things?
12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not use rather? Nevertheless we "did not use this power; but "we bear the practice of rewarding the labourer by a share in the fruits of the earth, which he has helped to produce. But the imagery of the literal harvest naturally suggests the idea of the spiritual harvest; and in the next verse, the spiritual alone is spoken of. 10. Jacchann's text. & har@c rö μετίχιν, instead of rɨg tλετίδις

.. ir tλετίλ, avoids the dubid difficulty of the meaning of rɨg tλετίδις, and the position of ir tλετίδι. Yet on this account is in suspicious, and the common ruading (D* E. J. K.) might be justified; rɨg cλενίδις being used for the 'fruit of his life;' and ir λετίλ being at the end of the surface, and the previous are the beginning. For similar transpositions compare viii. 11,
x. 27, xx. 19.

The mention of the figures of ploughing and threshing bring him to that of sowing and reaping, which here, as in Hos. viii. 7; Gal. vi. 7, 8; 2 Cor. ix. 6, express the ideas of retribution and reward (compare Koran ii.

263). This brings him to the personal conclusion of 6 host are reason, from mere feelings of gratitude, he who had concreted upon them such spiritual gifts (ris resparred) might expect in return the support of outward life; especially when they conceded it in the case of others, who were not, as he was, the founders of their Church. For the gifts, comp. xii. 1, xiv. 1, and Rom. i. 11.

The fact that other teachers, and those of the Jewish party, were maintained by the Corinthian Christians, is implied in 2 Cor. xi. 20: 'Ye suffer if a man devour you, if a man take of you.'

τῆς ὑμῶν ἐξουσίας, 'the right over you,' compare Matt. x.

ούκ έχρησάμεθα τη εξουσία ταύτη, άλλα πάντα στέγομεν, ίνα μή "τινα έγκοπήν δώμεν τώ εὐαγγελίω τοῦ χριστοῦ. "ούκ οίδατε ότι οί τὰ ίερὰ έργαζόμενοι ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐσθίουσως οί τῷ θυσιαστηρίω παρεδρεύοντες" τῷ · dynosty two.

» προσεδρεύοντες.

13 all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ. Do ye not know that they which minister "the things of the temple live of the temple?— they which wait at the

1; John xvii. 2, where, however, it is used rather in the sense of 'power.'

αλλ' οὐς ἐχρησάμιθα. Here comes the antihesis to the whole of the previous argument. 'Such was our right, but we did not use it; nay, rather than use it we endure all manner of privations, in order to prevent any hindrance to the progress of the Geospi, which might be mised by the charge of interested motives.' (Comp. 1 Thess. it. 3—10.)

For στέγομεν see on xiii. 7.

13. At this point it would seem that he was at last about to embark on the main subject of this Chapter-the example of his own self-denial. But in the very next verse he seems to recommence his argument from the beginning; first repeating his right in verses 13, 14, and then reasserting in verse 15, almost in the same words as here, his determination not to use it. That there is a pause, or break at the end of verse 12, is further indicated: (1) By the use of the word typawa in verse 15, which, though it can be used of the Epistle on which the writer is engaged, can only be naturally explained by some such suspension in the argument. Comp. note on v. 9. (2) By the phrase our οϊδατε, which, taken in conjunction with its repetition in verse 24, implies that, in the practical application of this argument, he addresses himself first to the deposition of the control of the production of the control of the production of the control of the production of the control of the year. It is a superior of the control (24—27). A similar distinction of argument, as addressed chiefly to Jows or to Gentiles, and each division marked by the same words at the commencement, is in Rom. vi. 3—14, 16—23.

He hegins, then, with urging his example on the more Jewish of his converts; but as these were not in immediate danger of being led away by the temptation of the heathen sacrifices, and were also those who most questioned the siscority of his self-denial, he addresses them by continuous the self-denial of bonding interesting, and founding its sanctions which they could not question.

The particular form of the argument probably alludes to his own especial right: 'You may deny that I am an Apostle, you cannot deny that I prach the Gospel.' He had spoken, in verse 12, of his anxiety to remove every obstacle from the progress of 'the Gospel;' the exulting strain of Isa. Iii. 7, 'the feet of them that preach the Gospel.'

θυσιαστηρίφ συμμερίζονται. ¹⁴οὔτως καὶ ὁ κύριος διέταξεν τοῖς τὸ εὐαγγελιον καταγγελλουσυν ἐκ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ζήν ¹⁵¹ ἐγὼ δὲ οὐνεκχρημαι οὐδεν τούτων, οὐκ ἐγραψα δὲ ταῦτα, ἵνα οὔτως γένηται ἐν ἐμοί· καλὸν γάρ μοι μάλλον ἀποθανεῦν,

* έγὼ δὲ σόδενὶ έχρησάμην τούτων.

14 altar are partakers with the altar. Even so 'the Lord appointed that they which 'proclaim the gospel should live 1s of the gospel: but I have used none of these things. Neither 'did I write these things, that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die, than "my 'bloasting: no

(comp. Rom. xii, 15), seems to fill his mind; and on the mention of that word, he stops to urge the additional plea which it would give him for claiming a support: 'What the Temple was to the Old Dispensation. that the Gospel is to the New' . . . 'As under the Jewish system it was the highest honour to minister to the altar. so now the highest honour is to preach the Gospel; and as those who devote themselves to the former received their sustenance from the countless gifts which were brought to the Temple, and the countless victims laid upon the altar, so the appointment of the Lord Himself, when on earth (Matt. x. 10, Luke x. 7), secured to those who go from country to country, announcing the glad tidings of His appearance, a maintenance from those who heard them.' Thus, this metaphor of the Jewish priesthood is applied to the proclamation of 'the Gospel' in Rom. χν. 16: έερο υργούντα τὸ εὐαγγ. For the support of the priests. see Numb. xviii. 8; Deut. xviii. 1; Jos. Ant. iv. 4.

έργάζεσθαι is used in the Old Testament sense of 'sacrifice,' like ρέζειν and facere.

in row ispou, 'the Temple.'

(Comp. the speech of the Zealots in Jos. B. Jud. V. xiii. 6: $\partial_{\epsilon} \tilde{t}$ rove $\tau \phi$ $\tau \phi$

Each of these arguments would have especial weight with Jewish Christians, the first, as 'derived from their own institutions; the second, as an express precept of our Lord to the Jewish Apostles in Palestine.

13. * waşeδρείσντες, see vii. 55. * Bet I have used none of these things, I [emphatically], whatever others may have received (see verse 12), have abstanted from pressing my right («ἐχυρμαι referring to ἐχοραζωτές verse 12); nor did I hay before you the statement of my right (saccount of the statement of my right (saccount of the statement of the statement of for I had rather die than abandon the chief boas of my life. (Or the vehemence of the expression, oomp. Rom. ix. 3):

The above is the general sense; the details of the last words depend on the variations of reading.

(1) καλόν γάρ μοι μάλλον άποθανείν, ή τὸ καύχημά μου ίνα τις κενώση (Rec. Text with K.). (κενώσει, A. B. C. D.)

The violent inversion of the

ή τὸ καύχημά μου: °οὐδεὶς κενώσει. ¹ۉ ἐὰν γὰρ εἰαγγελίζωμαι, οὐκ ἐστιν μοι καύχημα· ἀνάγκη γάρ μοι ἐπίκειται· °οὐαὶ γάρ μοί ἐστιν, ἐὰν μὴ εὐαγγελίσωμαι. ¹² εἰ γὰρ ἑκὼν

* Tra τις κενώση.

* σοαί δέ μοι . . . εδαγγελίζωμαι.

16 one shall make it void. For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to rboast of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, 1; wee is unto me, if I preach not the gospel. For if I do this words in the second clause is the chief objection to this, which is the received reading. Γυα κεrώση = the infinitive κενώσσι, which has, according to the usage of modern Greek (νὰ κενώσση), superseded the old infinitive. (2) καλύν γὰρ μου μάλλον ἀποτο θανείν, ή τὸ καύχημά μου. οὐδείς κενώσει, A. B. D. A. adds μι after obdeic, and reads carrious, which is (according to the modern pronunciation), only a misspelling of κενώσει. F. G. read τίς κενώσει without irá, which, according to the punctuation, would suit the sense of either reading. 'It is better that I should die than that my boast [should die]; no one shall overthrow it.' To this the objection is: (a) the harshness of supplying ἀποθανεῖν to τὸ καύχημα: (b) the use of μοι instead of euol, if an antithesis were intended between himself and his boast. The harshness, however, of this is obviated if we may suppose an anacoluthon occasioned by his fervour: 'I had rather die than that my boast' (he was going to say) 'shall come to nothing;' but he turns with horror from the thought, and breaks out into the triumphant assertion: 'No one will be able to make it void.'

(3) νὴ τὸ καύχημά μου, a conjecture of Lachmann's in his first edition. 'I protest by my boast; no one shall overthrow it:'

which suits the meaning, and forms a natural introduction to obtaic exchart, and would be justified by $\nu \hat{\gamma} + \hat{\gamma} \nu + \hat{\nu} +$

16. 17. 'In preaching the Gospel I do but discharge a duty. The connexion seems to be: 'I must retain the boast' (or, as we should say, merit) ' of preaching the Gospel without remuneration: else I should have no boast, or merit of which to boast. The preaching of the Gospel is in itself no merit, but an irresistible necessity, a bounden duty which if I do perform I have no praise. but which if I do not perform I am denounced with the woe of the Divine judgment; for it is only if I do it with a willing heart (as I do) that I can claim a reward; if I do it unwillingly, I am merely like the slave in charge of the household, who has no thanks for his services.' This sense must, however, be qualified by the peculiar construction of the Apostle's argument. He seems to state, not merely that 'preaching the Gospel with a maintenance,' but preaching the Gospel at all," precluded boasting. The argu-ment, drawn out fully, would have required that μόνον or some similar expression should have τοῦτο πράσσω, μισθὸν ἔχω˙ εἰ δὲ ἄκων, οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι. 18 τίς οὖν μοί ἐστιν ὁ μισθός; ἴνα εὐαγγελιζόμενος ἀδάthing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, I is have been entrusted with a stewardship. What then is my reward? That when I preach the gospel I may make the gospel on been added to svaryelicoum. This contradiction is occasioned by a sudden transition of thought, frequent in the Apostle's style, and specially characteristic of it, when he speaks, as here, of 'boasting.' He can hardly mention a 'boast' without instantly recalling it. Comp. Rom. iv. 2-4: 'Αδραάμ . . . έχει καύχημα, αλλ' ου πρός θεόν . . . τω δε έργαζομένω ο μισθός ου λογίζεται κατά χάριν. 2 Cor. xii. 1: καυχασθαι čεί, οὐ συμφέρον μέν. In one sense he clings to his boast, in another sense the necessity of preaching the Gospel sweeps it away. And thus the construction of verse 17 was probably meant to be, eire γαρ έκών, είτε άκων, οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι. But, as in 2 Cor. v. 13, he turns eire étéorques, eire σωφρονούμεν, into είτε έξέστημεν, Θεώ είτε σωφρονούμεν, υμίν, 80 here he throws into the first clause the words μίσθον ἔχω, which bring back into the sentence his ground for boasting. For such a sudden intrusion of a new thought compare έγνωσται in viii. 3.

Two points may be observed here: (1) The freedom with which he speaks of 'reward,' boast,' rate beyond what are absolutely necessary,' in the common language of men; regardless of inferences. (2) The strong sense of the irresistible impulse of the first preaching of the Googney of the Commands of our Lord, as, '60, commands of our Lord, as, '60, cach all nations' (Matt. xxviii.

19); or, 'Depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles' (Acts xxiii: 21); but his language further implies that he could not conceive the possibility of disobedience to their commands, or to the instincts which they awakened. What seems to use an act of heroic zeal, The seemed to him an act of Aposlés ordinary duty; it was work.

ordinary duty; it was work, only by some still loftier act of self-devotion that he could hope to raise himself above the common sphere of inevitable work. He felt that he was merely an instrument in the hand of God, with no power in himself of retarding or promoting the advance of those might truths which had only to be uttered in order to be appreciated.

For the image of the slave or steward (ciocovipinor metiercepan), compare the close of the parable, compare the close of the parable, compare the close of the parable, and the commanded you, say, We are unprofitable "slaves:" we have done that which was our duty to dor' and still more I Cor. iv. I, where the same word is used, "Lot where the same word is used," Lot where the same word is used, "Lot (cicard/pare), of the mysteries of God."

18. He returns to the expression which he had used before (μωθὸν ἔχω), 'I have a reward for preaching the Gospel willingly,' and asks in what it consists, to which the answer is, 'my reward is that I have no reward.' He looks for no higher

πανον θήσω τὸ εὐαγγέλιον*, εἰς τὸ μὴ καταχρήσασθαι τῆ έξουσία μου έν τω εύαγγελίω. 19 έλεύθερος γαρ ών έκ πάντων, πασιν έμαυτον έδούλωσα, ἵνα τοὺς πλείονας κερδήσω. 20 καὶ έγενόμην τοις Ιουδαίοις ώς Ιουδαίος, ινα Ιουδαίους κεοδήσω τοις ύπο νόμον ως ύπο νόμον, μη ων αυτός ύπο νόμον , ίνα τους ύπὸ νόμον κερδήσω. 21 τοῖς ἀνόμοις ὡς ἄνομος, μὴ ὡν ἄνομος without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel.

* Add τοῦ Χριστοῦ.

Omit uh de αθτός όπὸ εόμος.

19 For though I be free from all, o yet I made myself a slave 20 unto all, that I might gain the greater part; and unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain o Jews; to them that are under the law as under the law (*not being myself under the law'), that I 'may gain them that are under the 21 law: to them that are without law as without law (being not reward or pay (the word μισθὸν being used on purpose; comp. 1 Tim. v. 18, άξιος ὁ έργάτης τοῦ μισθοῦ αὐτοῦ) than to preach the Gospel without pay; he hopes for no higher freedom (returning to the image of a slave implied in οίκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι) than to become the slave of all.

καταχρήσασθαι, ' use to the full.' Comp. vii. 31.

έν τῶ εὐαγγελίω, 'conferred upon me by preaching the Gospel.' Comp. verse 14.

19. 'The proof of my sincerity in what I say lies in my whole life:' hence yap: 'Though I was free to take my own course (as in verse 1), I did not hesitate to become the slave of all." In the first instance the idea of his enslavement to all is suggested by the servile labour which he had undertaken, as distinct from the free independence which he might have enjoyed as an Apostle; but he rapidly passes from this to his accommodation to the various feelings of all his converts, in the hope that of this mass he might gain the greater part (iva rove masiovas κερδήσω) to the cause of Christ. For the same transition from the idea of servile labour to that of serving generally, compare Phil. 7 (δούλου).

κερδήσω is used with reference to μισθός. The gain of his converts was his pay.

20-22. In the enumeration of his acts of accommo- Allthings dation, it is, as might to all men. be expected, chiefly with regard to the Jewish or scrupulous converts that he speaks. Self-denial for their sakes was what he wished to impress upon all; to conciliate them was the especial object of this argument. The only exception, therefore, is the clause in 21, and that is introduced with an apology. The tenses (ἐγενόμην, &c.) indicate that he chiefly refers to his stay at Corinth.

'To the Jews, as a Jew.' This he proved by zeal for his country (Rom. ix. 3), by Jewish observances (Acts xvi. 3, xviii. * θεοῦ ἀλλ' ἔννομος χριστοῦ, ἴνα κερδάνω τοὺς ἀνόμους: ^{Ψέ}ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἀσθενέστω [™] [ώς] ἀσθενής, ἴνα τοὺς ἀσθενές κερδήσω τοῖς πάσω γέγονα πάντα, ἴνα πάντως τωὰς σώσω. ²⁵⁴πάντα δὲ ποιῶ διὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιου, ἴνα συγκουωυὸς αὐτοῦ.

```
    Θεψ . . . Χριστψ . . . κερδήσω ἀνόμουτ.
    τλ πάντα.
    Τλ πάντα.
```

without law to God but under the law to Christ), that I *r may 22 gain them that are without law; to the weak became I as weak, that I *r may gain the weak: I am *become all things to 23 all men, that I *r may by all means save some. And *all things I do for the gospel's sake, that I *r may be partaker thereof 18, xxi. 26). 'To those that were under the law,' i. e. (as distinguished from Tovoaious), Jewish proselytes, or Jewish converts to Christianity, 'To them that are without law, as without law." This he proved by non-observance of the law, by the rejection of circumcision, intercourse with Gentiles, or by accommodation to their language and arguments, 28; 1 Cor. viii. 1-7, ix. 24-27. The word by which he here describes himself (avopoe, 'without law,' 'lawless') is the expression used to designate him in the forged Epistle of Peter to James (c. 2) in the Clementines; and scems therefore to have been a well-known term of reproach against him among the Judaizers. Possibly it is on their account that he guards himself against its misapplication in the ensuing parenthesis; which is, however, the natural expression of his wish not to appear, even for a moment, independent of God,-rather to have become still more dependent on Him by his subjection to the law, not of Moses, but of Christ. Bengel: - 'Paulus non fuit anomus nedum antinomus."

22. 'To the weak,' i. e. 'to the scrupulous,' as in viii. 7— 12; Rom. xiv. 1, 2. This stands last, and by itself, as the practical end of all that he had been saying.

τοῖς πᾶσιν, 'to all, in short, I have been (γέγονα) all the conecivable forms of which humanity will admit ' (πάντα).

ccivable forms of which humanity will admit ' (πάντα). πάντως, 'by all means,' the double meaning, as in English.

σώσω, as in vii. 16, 'convert.' 23. He here comes back to the great cause for which he did all this—'the Gospel.'

With the concluding words of the last verse, a new thought is introduced: up to that point he had been speaking of his selfdenial for the sake of others; here he begins to speak of it as for his own sake. It is no longer 'that I may save some,' but ' that I may be partaker of the Gospel with you (i. e. as well as you). Do not think that I do not require this for myself. In order to do good, we must be good. To extend our Christian liberty to its utmost verge is dangerous, not only for others, but for ourselves.' This argument, of which the key-note is, 'Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall' (x. 12), is supported, first, by his γένωμαι. ²⁴οὐκ οἶδατε ὅτι οἱ ἐν σταδίῳ τρέχοντες πάντες μὲν

24 with you. Know ye not that they which run in a race run own example (ix. 24-27), secondly, by the warning of the Israelitish history (x. 1-15).

24. The self-denial which he practised for his own sake, like that which he practised for the sake of others, is introduced by a familiar analogy ushered in by the same phrase ('know ye not,' οὐκ οἴδατε) as in verse 13; the difference being that, while there, when his object was chiefly to impress his right on the Jewish converts, the sanction was drawn from Jewish institutions, so here, when his object is chiefly to impress their duty on the Gentile converts, the sanction is drawn from Gentile institutions. stead of referring, as before, to the Temple of Jerusalem, with its array of Priests and Levites, he now refers to the far nearer image of those celebrated festivals, which were to the Greeks what the Temple was to the Jews, and the Triumph to the Romans, and of which the most lively instance then to be seen was in the Isthmian games of Co-Isthmian rinth. The Olympic games. games still maintained their pre-eminence in theory, and in practice they outlasted all the others, till the reign of Theodosius, and as such are alone alluded to by Chrysostom in his comments on this passage: but at the period of these Epistles the chief interest of Greece must have been concentred in the Isthmian games. There the nominal independence of Greece had been proclaimed by Flamininus, and there Nero, standing in the midst of the very 'stadium' here mentioned, a few years after the date of this Epistle, announced from the Bems the gift of Roman citizenship to all the province of Achais; as also did Titus, a few years later; and there the Apoment of the the Apotion of the Achais, to the the province of the Achais, to the Achais, the dependent of the Achais, to the part at the peculiar festival of their capital city.

It must be remembered, in reading the Apostle's allusions, that from the national character and religion of the Greeks, these games derived an importance which raised them above the degrading associations of modern times. How intense an interest these contests still excited may be seen from Suetonius's graphic description of the agony of Nero in his desire to succeed; an exaggerated instance, doubtless; but yet illustrative of the general feeling. (Suet. Nero. cc. 23, 24.) The 'stadium,' or 'race-course, of which he speaks, was not a mere resort for public amusement, but an almost sacred edifice, under the tutelage of the patron deity of the Ionian tribes. and surrounded by the most solemn recollections of Greece, its white marble seats rising like the foundation of a temple in the grassy slope where its outline may still be traced, under the shadow of the huge Corinthian citadel, which guards the entrance of the Peloponnesus. The race, 'in which all run,' the pugilistic contests in which they τρέχουσιν, εξε δὲ λαμβάνει τὸ βραβεῖον; οὕτως τρέχετε, ἵνα καταλάβητε. ²⁵ πας δὲ ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος πάντα ἐγκρατεύεται· all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain.

25 " Now every "one that striveth for the mastery is temperate strove not 'to beat the air.' were not merely exhibitions of bodily strength, but solemn trials of the excellence of the competitors in the 'gymnastic art,' which was to the Greeks one half of human education. As the friends and relatives watched with breathless interest the issue of the contest, they knew that the victor would be handed down to posterity by having his name sung in those triumphal odes, of which Pindar's are the extant model, and his likeness placed in the long line of statues which formed the approach to the adjacent temple. (Paus. Corinth, ii. 1, 7.) 'prize' (rò Bouleior) which he won from the appointed judges, who sat in state at the end of the course, was such as could awake no mean or mercenary motives; its very simplicity attested its dignity; it was a garland (στέφανος) of the Grecian pine (wever), which still, under its classical name, clothes with its light green foliage the plains of the Isthmus, and which was then consecrated to the sea-god, around whose temple its groves (Paus. Corinth, ii. 1, 7) were gathered. (See Conybeare and Howson, c. 20.)

Such was the imagery before the Apostle's mind when he wrote these words, not indeed with that distinct realisation which is characteristic only of modern times, but in its effect only to be conceived by us through such a realisation. Corresponding to the carthly greatness of the scene to which he alludes, is the more exalted greatness of that to which he compares it, as in the contrast of earthly with heavenly wisdom in the parable of the unjust steward. (Luke xvi. 1.)

The application of the metaphor of the race to the progress of the Christian, here occurs for the first time. Afterwards, compare Phil. iii. 12, 14, καταλαβεῖν and Bouletor, as here; 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8: τον άγωνα . . . τον δρόμον . . . ο στέφανος; Heb. xii. 1: τρέχωμεν . . . άγωνα. The argument is: 'It is not enough merely to run-all run; but as there is only one who is victorious, so you must run, not with the slowness of the many, but with the energy of the one.' This imagery, as might be expected from discourses delivered in Palestine, never occurs in the Gospels.

oὖτως, i. e. 'as the one who gains the prize.' ενα, 'so that in the end ye may win.' καταλάθητε, i. e. τὸ βραθεῖον. 25. ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος, 'who contends in the public games.

i/sperviers, exercises selfcontrol.\text{The discipline lasted for ten months preparatory to the contest, and was at this time so severe as to be confined to the professional shifters. See the contest of the professional shifters.

5. It cliefly consisted in diet, and is thus described by Epictetus (Ench. c. 29, § 2):

'Thou must be orderly, living on spare food; abstain from conon spare food; abstain from conέκείνοι μὲν οὖν ἴνα φθαρτὸν στέφανον λάβωσιν, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἄφθαρτον. ²⁶ἐγὰ τοίνυν οὔτως τρέχω ὡς οὐκ ἀδήλως, οὔτως πυκτεύω ὡς οὐκ ἀέρα δέρων, ²⁷ἀλλ ὑπωπιάζω μου τὸ σῶμα in all things: "they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we 28 an incorruptible. I therefore so run not as uncertainty, 27 so fight o not as one that beateth the air, but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, fections, make a point of exercising at the appointed time, in heat and in cold, nor drink cold water, nor wine at hazard; in a word, give thyself up to thy training master as to a physician, and then enter on the context. Compare, too, the passages quoted by Wetstein.

The same metaphor of training occurs exactly in 2 Tim. ii. 5: ἐαν ἐἐ καὶ ἀθλῆ τις, οὐ στεφανοῦται, ἐἀν μὴ νομίμως (i. e. 'according to the rules') ἀθλήση.

φθαρτὸν στέφανον, 'a garland of olive, parsley, bay, or (as observed under verse 24) pine.' ἀφθαρτόν. In 2 Tim. ii, 5, iv.

8, the crown is spoken of, as bere, in direct connexion with the metaphor of the Christian contest. It also occurs in Rev. iii. 11, and under the figure of a never-fading garland, in 1 Pet. v. 4 (Δμαράντι-νον); James i. 12 (στίρασος τῆς Σωῆς, a crown of living flowers and leaves).

 roirur, merely a particle of transition.

οὐκ ἀδήλως, i. e. 'so as to be sure of the prize,' or 'with a sure footing.' (See 2 Macc. vii. 34; 1 Tim. vi. 17.)

ούτως πυκτεύω. This introduces a new image from the same field; the metaphor of the race not expressing sufficiently the active and aggressive character of the course needed, the racter of the course needed, the or pancratistic combats. The self-mastery, which in the previous verses he had described as proparatory to the contest, he here describe as part of the contest itself; the self, which in the previous and in the reality, is here represented as the antagonist which he has to subdue.

ώς οὐκ ἀίρα δίρων, i. e. 'with firm blows, reaching the adversary.' (See Wetstein ad loc.).

 υπωπιάζω is for υπωπιάζων. in antithesis to δέρων όπωπιάζω. (comp. έντρέπων and νουθετώ, iv. 14), 'My blows are so direct that they cover my adversary - and that adversary my own body (uou rò σωμα), with bruises; not only so, but I lead it captive like a slave, as the victor leads the vanquished.' There is a variation in the form of the word which leads to a slight variation of sense. (1) ὑπωπιάζω in A. B. C. D¹. from ὑπώπων, -the part of the face under the eye, is 'to give a black eye,' and thence 'to bruise,' and still more generally to 'fatigue' or 'vanquish,' as in Luke xviii. 5 (of the importunate widow), and in Aristoph. Pac. 533, ύπωπιασμέναι πόλεις.

καὶ δουλαγωγῶ, μή πως ἄλλοις κηρύξας αὐτὸς ἀδόκιμος γένωμαι

γένωμαι. Χ. ¹Οὐ θέλω ²γὰρ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι οἱ πατέρες

when I have r been a herald ' to others I myself should become r disapproved.

X. For I would not that ye should be ignorant, brethren,

In this case the word is a pugilistic metaphor, and follows up πυκτεύω. (2) ύποπιάζω F. G. J. Κ. ὑποπιέζω D³. are the Doric and Attic forms of the same word ὑποπιέζω, 'I oppress,' or 'subject.' The compound occurs in the Fathers only, but the word πιέζω or πιάζω, frequently in the Gospels, as in Luke vi. In either case, the thing meant is his self-denial, as shown chiefly through the refusal to receive a maintenance, and thereby being compelled to work with his own hands, as though he had said, 'My hands (ai xeipec aurai, Acts xx. 34) have been worn away with the black tentcloths, my frame has been bowed down with this servile labour.' Compare έλεύθερος . . . έδούλωσα, ix. 19.

He then recurs to the training necessary for the contest: 'This I do, lest after having declared to others what they ought to do, I should myself be rejected as 'The unworthy of the prize.'

herald. The word enpéter, i having proclaimed; is onused in the sense of 'preaching' or 'announcing' the Goggle.
But, as it is here used absolutely,
we may more naturally take it, as 'having exercised the office of learnld,' with a double allusion, first to the usual religious meaning of the word; secondly, to the herald who proclaimed the prizes

at the games. This new complication of the metaphor is rendered less violent by the fact, that the office of the herald itself was an object of competition, and that sometimes, as in the case of Nero, the victor in the games was also selected as the herald to announce his success.

aδέομρε in used in a general sense, as 'unworthy of λόδεμετ. bably with especial reference to the examination of candidates before the contest. It may be observed, that this word, which, vi. 8, is translated in the Authorised Version 'exprobate,' is here (probably from a Calvinistic scruple) translated 'cast away.'

X. 1. He follows up his own example by stating, in the second place, the warning furnished by the history of Israel: 'It is possible that I may be rejected; it is needful for you to follow my example of abstaining from the full enjoyment of our liberty; because the whole history of the Old Testament teaches the lesson of distrust of ourselves.' γάρ, which is the right reading instead of ¿é, gives the reason for άδόκιμος in ix. 27, and thus connects the two arguments together.

The stress is on πάντες:
'All enjoyed the privileges, and

ήμῶν πάντες ὑπὸτὴν νεφέλην ἦσαν καὶπάντες διὰ τῆς θαλάσσης διῆλβον, ἐκαὶ πάντες εἰς τὸν Μωυσῆν ἐβαπτίσθησαν ἐν τῆ νεφέλη καὶ ἐν τῆ θαλάσση, ¾ καὶ πάντες τὸ ἀυτὸ ὁ πυεν ματικὸν ἐφαγον βρῶμα ¹καὶ πάντες τὸ αὐτὸ ° πνευματικὸν ¿ξαπτίσαντο.

 τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα.
 τὸ αὐτὸ πόμα.

how that all our fathers were under the cloud and all passed 2 through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the 3 cloud and in the sea, and did all eat the same spiritual 4 food and did all drink the same spiritual drink (for they yet only a few availed themselves of them. 'Many were called, but few were chosen.' Compare the parallel expression in the parallel clause, ix. 24, 'All run, but one receives.' Here, the sense would be clearer if, as there, μèr followed on πάντες.

'Our fathers' (spior), is remarkable as addressed to readers, many of whom were Gentiles. But, as he has been speaking of himself just before, he naturally passes to the thought of the Israelites as his own ancestors. We must also bear in mind how many, even in Gentile Churches, had already been Jewish proselutes.

2. The privileges selected are such as correspond most nearly to the two Christian sacraments. This is the only passage where they are thus brought in juxtaposition.

iv Ty repthy cal Bahásony .
'under the cloud,' i. e. 'over'The shadowed by the cloudy Cloud' pillar, as in baptism we pass under the cloudy veil of water,' 'through the sea,' as 'through the waters of baptism.' This agrees with the Rabbinical representation of the cloud. 'It encommassed the camp of the Israelites, as a wall encompasses a city.' Pirke, Eleazar, c. 104, as quoted by Dr. Gill. Compare also Numb. xiv. 14: 'Thy cloud standeth over them.'

in a warre, i fear-relopear. 'And thus were haptired into the dispensation of Moses.' Comp. Ex. xiv. 31: 'They believed the Lord and his servant Moses' (after the passage of the Red Sea). Although ifearrichpoqueours in A. C. D. E. F. of the stream of the services of the εἰς τὸν Μωυσῆν, used as a parallel to εἰς τὸν χριστόν.

4. The food and drink are parallel to the Lord's Supper. The word 'spiritual' (rupu-tree') is employed partly from the preternatural character of the preternatural character of the xxi. 14, xxii. 6; Numh. xx. 2—11, and with regard to the manna, in especial reference to its descent from heaven, and its designation in Pa. Ixxviii. 24, and 'angele' food, of heaven, and 'engle' food, of έπιον πόμα (έπινον γὰρ ἐκ πνευματικής ἀκολουθούσης πέτρας, ἡ ἀπέτρα δὲ ἦν ὁ χριστός). ὁ ἀλλὶ οὐκ ἐν τοῖς πλείοσιν αὐτῶν μηὐδόκησεν ὁ θεός: κατεστρώθησαν γὰρ ἐν τῆ ἡ δὲ πέτρα.

» εὐδόκησεν,

drank of "the spiritual Rock that followed them, and "the Rock was Christ): but with "the greater part' of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wil-of the water, to the glory which was reflected on the earthly clements from their relations to Christ. The 'cloud' and the 'sca,' though evidently used here as figures of baptism, had not been brought into the fixed circle of Messianic ideas: therefore to them the word is not anplied. But the manna and the water seem to have been long understood as figures of Him who was to supply all the longings of His people, and they are accordingly so used in John vi. 50: 'I am the bread which cometh down from heaven,' and John vii. 37, 39: 'If any man thirst, let him come unto Me. . . . (this spake He of the Spirit)." With regard to the manna, no explanation was needed. But for the allusion to the The rock rock an explanation followed, was needed, and is given, because the tradition to which it refers is not contained in the Old Testament. This tradition maintained that there was a well formed out of the spring in Horeb, which gathered itself up into a rock. 'like a swarm of bees,' and followed the people for forty years, sometimes rolling of itself, sometimes carried by Miriam; and always addressed by the elders when they eucamped, in the words of Numb. xxi. 17: 'Spring up, O well.' See the Targums, as quoted by Wetstein, Schöttgen, and Heydenreich.

In accordance with this notion. the Rock of Moses, as pointed out by the local tradition of Mount Sinai, is not a cliff in the mountain, but a detached fragment of rock, about fifteen feet high, with twelve or more fissures on its surface, from which the water is said to have gushed out for the twelve tribes. This local tradition is as old as the Koran, which mentions this very stone (ii. 57, vii. 160); possibly as old as Josephus, who describes the rock of Moses as 'lying beside' (παραπειμένην) the mountain, Ant. iii. 1, 7. Here, as elsewhere, the Apostle sees nothing of the outward history except in its reference to Christ, already in the wilderness, the Life and Guide of His people. Hence his allusion to the tradition, which would have been out of place had the actual facts of the history occupied the prominent place in his thoughts, becomes intelligible if he used the story as a vehicle to convey the idea of the ever-present power of Christ. Instead of adhering to the Mosaic parrative, which represents the miraculous appearances of the water as isolated facts at the beginning and at the end of the wanderings, he adopted the story which endeavoured to bridge over the ἐρήμῳ. ⁶ ταῦτα δὲ τύποι ἡμῶν ἐγενήθησαν, εἰς τὸ μὴ εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἐπιθυμητὰς κακῶν, καθὼς κἀκεῖνοι ἐπεθύμησαν. ⁷μηδὲ

6 derness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted.

interval between the two, by representing the clif (sela) at Kadesh to have been identical with the rock (tzur) which had been struck at Mount Horeb. But, in adopting this representation, he guards himself from any literal agreement with it: the word 'spiritual' (πνευματικής) raises our thoughts at once to the figurative sense in which alone it could be applied to the rock; and the concluding words, 'but the Rock was Christ,' seem specially inserted to impress upon his readers, that, whatever might be the facts of the history or tradition, the only Rock which was in his mind at the moment was the Messiah (ὁ χριστός), as in the case of 'Christ our passover,' v. 7. He was, in a far higher sense than the actual cliffs of Hor or Horeb, the rock which was always in view with its shadow to protect, and its waters to refresh them, at the end, no less than at the beginning, of their long wanderings

Christ has the same relation to the Spirit as the rock to the water; it is from Him that the Spirit flows (comp. John vii. 37), and one is here put for the other, as in 2 c. cr. iii. 71: 'The Lord is 'the.' Spirit.' For a similar interpretation see Gol. iv. 24, where by abk-payed-gurn he exhaust the seed of the seed

For the traditional comparison of the Messiah to the rock, see Philo, Alleg. 11, 21: Quod deterius potiori ins. § 31; and the Targums on Isaiah xvi. 1 (quoted in Wetstein). For the comparison of God to a rock in the desert, see Psalm xci. 1, 2; takis xviii.

Isaiah xxxii. 2.
5. 'Such were their privileges.
But they were not saved thereby from the heaviest judgments.
Out of the whole number who partook of these blessings, the greater part perished.'

γάρ, i. e. We know that it is so, for this is the proof.' Compare Luke vii. 47, 'Her sins are forgiven her, because she loved much.'

κατεστρώθησαν, 'their bodies were left to moulder away on the sands of the desert.' The word is taken from κατέστρωσεν, Numb. xiv. 16. For a similar argument, see Heb. iii. 17. 6. ταϊτα δὲ τύποι. 'In theso things we may see our own models. Trivoc is generally used for a model as an example; here, for a model as a warning. The parallel is drawn from such sins of the Israelites as most resembled those to which the Corinthians were liable.

of evil things, probably a general phrase, 'with your appetites set on evil rather than on good.' If it has a more special allusion, it must be, in the case of the Corinthians, to the idol-feasts, and of the Israelites, to the fiesh-pots of Egypt and

έπιθυμητάς κακών, 'desirons

είδωλολάτραι γίνεσθε, καθώς τως αὐτῶν," ὤσπερ γέγραπται Εκάθιτεν ὁ λαὸς φαγείν καὶ πεῶν, καὶ ἀνέστησαν παίζεν, "μηδὲ πορνείνωμε, καθώς τικες αὐτῶν ἐπόρεντων καὶ ἔτεσταν μιὰ ἡμέρα είκοσι τρεῖς χιλιάδες. "μηδὲ ἐκπειράζωμεν τὸν «κύριον, καθώς τυνες αὐτῶν ἐπείρασαν καὶ ὑτο τῶν ὁφεων ἀπάλοντο. "Θηνδὲ γογγίζετε, καθώς τως αὐτῶν ἐγόγγι-ωs.

 ἐ του Χροστὸν, καθὸς καί τινες.
 ι Δας Μπ. Ed. 1. ἀπώλλιντο.
 ΄ καθὸς καί τινες.

7 Neither ⁷ become ye idolaters, as were some of them, as it is written, 'the people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to splay.' Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. 9 Neither let us tempt ⁴the Lord, as some of them ⁴ tempted to and ⁷ perished by serpents. Neither murnur ye, as some the quails, Numbers xi. 4, 18, 33.

εἰδωλολάτραι, i. e. ' by countenancing or partaking in the rites attendant on the feasts.'
 ωπτο γέγραπται, i. e. ' in the matter of the golden calf: 'the quotation is from Ex. xxxii. 6, in the very words of the LXX. παίζειν, 'to dance,' as in the παίζειν, 'to dance,' as in the heathen ceremonies, both of Syria and of Greece. 8. πορνεύωμεν, i. e. 'by joining in the licentious rites, which, especially at Corinth, were blended with the worship of Venus. For this juxtaposition of the two, compare Acts xv. 29; and notes on 1 Cor. vi. 12.

irúpysvar, i. e. in the matter of Baalper, Numb. xxv. 1.—9, where, as well as in Philo, Josephus, and the Rabbis, the number is 24,000, not, as here, 23,000. The variation must be referred to the original text of the Apselle, not to any subsequent error or correction of the copyists, as they, if they altered it at all, would have been more likely to have altered in conformity with Numbers than against it.

 εκπεφάζωμεν τὸν κύριον, 'Let us not tempt Christ by going to the verge of our Christian liberty,' as in the expression 'tempting God' in Matt. iv. 7.

of paer (E. C.) Sa'ar (A.) perhaps corrections of xpaerier (D. E. P. G. II. I. K.) But cépuer and xpaerier (equally refer to Christ's presence in the Old Testament, as implied in verse 4; Jude 5; Hob. special reason for the thought, that he wishes to bring before the Corinthians (as in viii. 12), that it was against Christ, their loving Redeemer, that they sinsed, in this abuse of their lised, in this abuse of their liκαθώς τινες ἐπείρασαν. This would most naturally refer to Massah at Horeb, Exod. xvii. 7. The destruction by serpents, however, was on a later occasion, Numb. xxi. 6.

γογγύζετε, i. e. 'do not complain against the authority of Paul as an Apostle' (referring to the argument in ix. 1—10).

* τύποι συνέξαινου.

κατήντησεν,

11 of them * murmured, and * perished by the destroyer. Now all these things happened unto them for *examples,' and *it was' written for our admostition, upon whom the ends 12 of the * ages are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he is standeth take heed lest he fall. There hath no temptation taken yow but such as is common to man: * and God is faitly, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make "the way to escape."

έγόγγυσαν, i. e. in the matter of Korah, where the judgment was a plague, Numb. xvi. 49.

του ολοθρευτού, i. e. the Destroying Angel-' the Angel of Death, from the LXX. translation ὁ ὀλοθρεύων, Exod. xii. 23. Compare Ps. lxxviii. 50, where, by a reverse process, what is in Exod, xii, 23 called the 'Angel' is called the 'pestilence.' See also the Rabbis in Lightfoot. For a curious resemblance to the words and to the general sense of this passage, comp. Judith, viii. 25 -27, where, as here, the Israelites are warned not to give way to their trials, because God tries them only as He tried their fathers (πειράζει ήμᾶς καθά καὶ τοὺς πατέρας ἡμῶν). Thus far the Greek; but the Vulgate adds: 'Illi autem qui mutationes non susceperunt cum timore Domini, et impatientiam suam et improprium murmurationis suz contra Dominum postularunt, exterminati sunt ab exterminatore, et a serpentibus perierunt."

 τυπιεῶς is only used here in the New Testament, and hence perhaps the substitution of τύποι in D. E. F. G. J.

ewifeuror (plural) refers to the creatis detail; irpsign (singular), to the record as a whole.

'These events occurred historically to them, but the record of them was made for us, who, fur removed from them, have been overtaken by the last great days of the world's existence; 'theirs of all the sees.'

rà τέλη τῶν αἰώνων, the same as συντέλεια αἰῶνος, Matt xiii. 39, the plural nominative resulting from the plural genitive, the plural of αἰῶν being here used, as elsewhere in St. Paul's Epistles.

κατήντηκεν, 'came down, as to their natural resting-place.'

12. 'Therefore, with these warnings before us, let no one be so proud of his Christian privileges, as to think that he is above the danger of falling.' For other indications of pride and over-consciousness of supeἔκβασιν τοῦ δύνασθαι "ὑπενεγκεῖν. 14 διόπερ, ἀγαπητοί μου, φεύγετε ἀπὸ τῆς εἰδωλολατρείας.

όμῶς ὑπενεγκεῖν.

1. that ye may be able to bear it. Wherefore, my o beloved, flee from idolatry.

riority in the Corinthian Church, compare i. 12, iv. 8, xiv. 36.

13. He passes abruptly from a warning to an encouragement: 'Let every one take heed lest he full; for he can avoid falling, inasmuch as he is not exposed to insuperable temptations ' (ἀνθρώmuros, 'on a level with human powers'); 'on the contrary, he may rely on the justice of God. who will not overwhelm us but by our own fault.' The passage expresses (what we find often in the Psalms), that the faithfulness or justice of God, rather than His mercy, is the sure ground of hone.

την εκβασιν, 'the means of light.'

ύπενεγκεῖν refers to the whole sense of the passage: 'You will be able to escape, and to bear up against your difficulties.'

14. This warning against idolatry immediately following indicates that the temptation spoken of was in the idol feasts. 'You are indeed in great difficulties; all the grandeur, all the beauty, all the festivity of heathen life, are around you to tempt you to fall into the same sins as those which overcame the Israelites; but still, by all the motives which I have laid before you, I conjure you by the love which I bear to you (daynerse; pass), not merely to avoid representations of the property of the prop

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. IX. 1-X. 14.

When I speak of the self-denial which I would exercise rather than entangle any Christian in sin, I speak of what you know that I bear out by my habits of daily life. Yes, you know that such is my habitual course, you know the toil and servile labour of tentmaking which I undergo for your sukes, of my oun free will, and in spite of my Apostable dignity. It is indeed a coluntary self-denial, for my right to support from the Churches is undoubted. I am on Apostle at truly as the original Tweebee. I, like them, have seen the Lord Jesus. I have, to you at least, given the most incontestable signs of my Apostleship, by your conversion. And therefore the refusal to receive maintenance from you is not. as some would insinuate, because I have not the right to ask it. I have this right as fully as the most favoured of the Twelve, as fully as even Peter the first of the Apostles, and the immediate kinsmen of Christ Himself; and this right I claim. first. on the general grounds which apply to all occupations: to the soldier, who receives his pay for fighting; to the planter of the vineyard, who eats the grapes of the vineyard; to the shepherd, who supports himself on the milk of the flocks and herds which he feeds. And I claim it also under the sanction of a higher authority than any human custom; the command which allows the ox to eat of the corn which it treads out, applies in principle to men also, for whose sake this, and all the commands about the brute creation, are recorded; and this principle fully instifies the practice of rewarding the labourer by a share in the harvest which he has helped to produce. What is thus true of the literal, is true also of the spiritual harvest, the seeds of which I have sown amongst you, and which now flourishes so abundantly : and in claiming from you a maintenance in return, I should not be claiming, like the earthly labourer, a reward the same in kind, but one far inferior, a reward merely of perishable outward maintenance in return for a harvest of imperishable spiritual gifts. Nor, again, should I be claiming anything which you refuse to grant to others, but only what you do grant to those teachers who with all their pretensions have none comparable to mine who am your founder. Such is my right; but I decline to exercise it, and endure all manner of privations, rather than, by incurring the slightest suspicion of interested motives, to impede the advance of the glad tidings of the coming of the Anointed Deliverer,

Let me, then, urge my example upon you; but first I must again reasser my right; the right which opons immediately out of that glad tidings which it is my great mission to proclaim, and which by our Lord's own command as surely entitles its heralds to a maintenance, as an occupation in the service of the Temple entitles its priests to a share in the sucrifical gifts and afferings. Yet this right, whatever others may have done, as I said just now, I have not used. And when I said it, remember that I said it not, as some would instinate, with a view of exterting money from you by other means. So far from using any covert means of procuring a maintenance from you, nothing could induce me to forfeit the only merit I have. To proclaim the glad tidings on which my right is founded, is no merit in itself: it is the discharge of an inevitable duty, for which I deserve no more thanks than a slave who administers his master's property. A reward I have, it is true; but that reward is to receive no reward; it consists in the pursuance of my mission without reward, and therefore without suspicion and without offence. And you know that I am sincere in what I say; my whole life attests it. Not only have I, in this matter of the maintenance, changed the personal liberty which I might justly have claimed, for degrading and servile labour; but that I might gain converts, even a few out of the mass of the unbelieving world, I accommodated myself amongst you to the feelings alike of Jews and Gentiles. Above all, I always showed my sympathy for the weak and unenlightened conscience. And all this I did and do in order that I, as well as those whom I converted, might share in the aladness of those tidings which I proclaimed to them.

I have been speaking up to this time rather for those Jewish converts who question my right, than for those Gentile converts who abuse theirs. But my last words recall me to the recollection of the necessity of self-denial, for the sake, not only of others, but of ourselves. As certainly as the Jews know the right conferred by sacred services on those who minister in them, so surely do Gentiles know the eagerness of those who in the areat national games of Greece contend for the prize, and the rigid discipline practised by them beforehand. Let this be an example to you, remembering only how much greater is your reward than the pine-leaf garland of the Isthmian games. Such too is my practice, not less eager or less severe; and the enemy with whom I contend is my own body, which bears in the marks of its hard service the proof of my self-denial. He who has been the herald of the contest and of the prize to others. must beware lest he himself be rejected at the end of the day as worthless. For indeed no privileges, however exalted, are able to secure us against the danger of temptations, as we know from the example of our ancestors in the faith. They, like us, had their Baptism in the Red Sea, and in the shadow of the cloudy pillar. They, like us, had their Eucharist in the manna and in the water from the rock; the rock which followed them, according to the tradition, throughout their wanderings; the rock which was no less than Christ, All alike were so favoured; and yet of all, except too, the careases were left bleaching in the desert. In their sins we see the likeness of those to which we in these latter days are tempted; the idolatrous rites, the sensuality of heathenism, the abuse of Christian liberty, the nurmurar against authority. Become, then, let you fall. So fur from being exposed to superhuman difficulties, God's justice veil always give an issue from your trials, if only you will auty yourselees of it. And so, though your temptations to idolatry are areat, yet you can and ought to escape from them.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF TEACHERS.

Is some respects the preceding Section resembles the discussion on Marriage in Chapter vii. The Apostle lays down a general principle, from which his own conduct is an exception. Both the principle and the exception derive remarkable illustration. The principle and the exception derive remarkable illustration. The principle and the exception derive remarkable illustration that principle is the citeranie. Same as that which Plato asserts in the first book of thinded by the Recublic, that all professions, the hirbest as the hirbest as the size of the principle is the principle of the principle of

The examples—crates, says Mr. Grote, 'considered such a bargain angles—crates,' says Mr. Grote, 'considered such a bargain as nothing less than servitude, robbing the teacher of Sorniva all free choice as to persons or proceeding; and assimilated the relation between teacher and pupil to that between two lovers, or two intimate friends, which was thoroughly dis-honoured, robbed of its charm and reciprocity, and prevented from bringing about its legitimate reward of attachment and devotion, by the intervention of money payment.' This was the Anostle's feeling towards his converts; and although the actual order of the world, as he himself acknowledges, would render it almost impracticable as a general rule, yet it is impossible not to appreciate at once the loftiness of his sentiment and the force of his argument. In an age or in a The relisociety, where the minds of men are disposed readily to gious auacquiesce, there is usually no authority greater than thority of that of an order of established teachers. But in a time of unsettlement or inquiry, such as was the Apostolic age, and, it may be added, our own, the authority of a layman in religious matters is usually far higher than that of a clergyman; and for this reason, that every sentiment which he utters on such subjects is regarded as spontaneous, disinterested, and unprofessional, to a degree not felt in the case of the regular and established organs of instruction. Such a lay position, if one may so speak, the Apostle here labours to vindicate for himself.

Hist. of Greece, vol. viii. p. 482; founded on Xenophon, Mem. i. 2. 6.

A POSTOLICAL COMMUNION.

THE concluding verse of the last Section has brought him back to the original subject of the sacrificial feasts; but whereas he dwelt before only on the scandal to others, he now, in accordance with the train of thought begun in ix. 23, dwells chiefly on the evil to themselves. And the sense of this evil is enhanced by the recollection incidentally introduced in x. 3 of the only Christian institution which bore any resemblance to these feasts. This argument from the Eucharist he introduces by an appeal, not, as before, to his own authority or example, but to their common sense and reason. It was a practice with which they were all familiar as with an institution which belonged equally to the whole society. It was an argument which, with their boasted logical assumen, they must recognise as self-evident

That Christ is one with His people, is a truth which pervades the whole of St. Paul's teaching. The peculiarity of this passage is that, for the sake of a more direct contrast with the idol feast, he urges the closeness of this communion, not in Christian life generally, but in the feast or meal of the Eucharist. The reality of this communion he enforces chiefly by two arruments.

First, he refers them to the words of the institution, with which, as we know from xi. 23, they were already familiar. Every expression points back to the scene of the Last Supper, as if he said, "The cup, the words of blessing, the bread with the act of breaking, bring before our minds the memorable night when He said, "This is the new covenant in my blood, this is my body," and therefore you know what is implied in drinking of that cup, and eating of that bread."

It is observable that, whereas in all other passages the bread is mentioned before the cup, according to the order of the original institution, here and in verse 21 the cup is mentioned before the bread, probably from the turn given to the whole passage by the parallel in the heathen feasts, where the libation preceded the meal.

The plural form (εὐλογοῦμεν, κλῶμεν) probably points to the fact that the whole society in some manner took part in the blessing of the cup and the breaking of the bread. This is required by the turn of the argument which, especially in verse 17, implies that the 'communion' was a joint act of all, 'The conad which here implies that this joint communion con-musion.' sisted, not in 'drinking' and 'eating,' but in 'blessing the cup' and 'breaking the bread.' This joint act may have been performed either by themselves actually assisting in the blessing and the breaking, or as represented by the president of the feast, whilst they, in the case of the blessing, responded to it by the Hebrew 'Amen' (as must be inferred from xiv. 16). From the expressions used in Acts ii. 46 ('they,' i. e. the believers generally, 'breaking bread'), and xx. 7 ('they came together to break bread'), it would seem that, at least, in the case of the bread, it was a joint action; and such is the opinion even of the Roman Catholic commentator, Estius.

' Communion ' (κοινωνία) is here alone used of the Eucharist, and is the origin of the name as applied to it. The predominant idea of the word in this place is that of union with Christ (as in i. 9), in contrast, as it afterwards appears in verse 20, to 'union with demons.' But the especial allusion to the Eucharist, leads him to express this union in the stronger language 'communion of the blood . . . and of the body . . . of Christ,' as suggested by the words of the original institution. which coincided with the sentiment of entire identification. elsewhere expressed under the same forms of speech (as in John vi. 50-56); and here of especial importance for the argument against the idol feasts. 'You are one with Christ,' he would say, 'because you are one with each other; and this too is expressed in the Christian feast.' The thought is suggested to him: (1.) By the sense always latent in the word κοινωνία, not merely of a participation, but of a joint participation; so that, although it is capable of application to a single person, it almost always involves the notion of several. (2,) By the nature of the ceremony itself. Having, for the reason above stated, begun with allusion to the cup, he proceeds to the bread, or 'loaf' (such is the meaning of τον άρτον), which, unlike the modern mode of celebration, seems to have been placed whole on the table, and then divided into its several portions; thus representing the idea, so frequent in the Apostle's writings, of the one community, with various parts and functions, but united in their common Head. Jamblichus (in his Life of Pythagoras, p. 18) says that, 'according to the barbarian custom in former times, all friends agreed together over one loaf' (ἐπὶ iva άρτον συνίσσαν). (3.) By the use of the word 'Body' (σῶμα)

The Body of Christ. This, in St. Paul's language, almost aiof Christ'. ways means, not life listeral corporal frame, but that new body which is Ilis by virtue of His union with His followers, manely, the whole Christian society. Compare vi. 15, xii. 12, 27; Eph. i. 23, ii. 16, iv. 4, 16, v. 30; Col. i. 24. The exceptions to this usage are Phil. iii. 21, 'fashioned like unto His glorious body; 'Col. i. 22, 'you... hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death; 'and perhaps Rom. vii.
4, 'dead to the law by the body of Christ'.

This idea of the Apostle is somewhat different from that which in later times has usually been attached to the act and words of the institution of the Eucharist. It has, however, found expression in the double meaning of the word 'communion,' and in such Eucharistical services as the Second Prayer after the celebration of the Communion in the Church of England: 'We most heartily thank Thee... for that Thou does assure us thereby ... that we are very members incorporate in the mystical body of Thy Son, sokich is the blessed company of all futility leopels.' Compare, for analogous expressions, Ignatius (ad Trall. 8): 'Fatilt which is the flesh of the Lord, Lore which is the blood of Jesus Christ.'

15 ώς φρονίμοις λέγω» κρίνατε ύμεις ο έφημ. 18-70 ποτήριου τής εύλογογίας διελογούμεν, οὐχί κοινωνία. "τοῦ αἰματος τοῦ χριστοῦ ἐστώ; τὸυ ἀρτου δυ κλώμεν, οὐχί κοινωνία τοῦ σώματος τοῦ χριστοῦ ἐστώ; "Τόπ εἰξ άρτος, ἐυ σώμα οἱ πολλοῦ ἐσμυ" οἱ γλη πάιτες ἐκ τοῦ ἐνὸ ἀρτου μετέγομε». "βλί-ἐσμυ" οἱ γλη πάιτες ἐκ τοῦ ἐνὸ ἀρτου μετέγομε». "βλί-ἐσμυ" οἱ γλη πάιτες ἐκ τοῦ ἐνὸ ἀρτου μετέγομε». "βλί-ἐσμυ" οἱ ἐνὸ ἀρτου μετέγομε».

* Luchm. Ed. 1. κοινωνία έστλν τοῦ αΐμ,

15, 16 1 speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? the bread which we break, is it not the communion 17 of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, Is and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread. Bcως φρονίμοις, i. e. 'in your acknowledged character of wise men.' Comp. i. 5, viii. 1, ὑμεῖς, i. e. 'you, as distinct from me.' Comp. 2 Cor. i. 24.

16. 'The cup of blessing' occurs only here in the New Testament. It is in allusion to the fourth and most sacred cup at the Paschal feast, which was so called from the words pronounced over it: 'Blessed be Thou, O Lord our God, the King of the world, who has created the fruit of the vine.' (Lightfoot ad loc.)

citosyris, as used in the LXX, is properly, via properly, via properly, via hone via praise, 'to congratulate,' and it may thus be applied with equal propriety to God and to man. The Hebrew word γ1χ, of which it is frequently a translation, means in the first instance via funcel, and the first instance via funcel, and via proposition to man is only secondary, videy is used here, as in xiv. 16, and Matt xxvi. 26 (compare Luke xxii. 19), as equivalent to elegateries, the only difference being that eichon of the comparison of the γία expresses the form, and εὐχαριστία the substance of the speech. The one is 'a blessing of God,' the other, 'a thanksgiving to God.' But there is the further thought that by this thanksgiving or 'grace,' the ob-ject so spoken of is consecrated to God's service. Comp. 1 Tim. ίν. 4, 5 : οὐδέν ἀπόβλητον μετά ε ὑχαριστίας λαμβανόμενον άγιάζεται γάρ δια λόγου θεού καί έντεύξεως. Hence arises the application of the word to inanimate objects. ὁ εὐλογοῦμεν, ' over which we pronounce our blessing of God.' So 'He blessed the loaves,' Luke ix. 16, and (on one occasion only) in the Old Testament, 'He doth bless the sacrifice' (1 Sam. ix. 13: εύλογει την θυσίαν, LXX.). Βυ a like confusion the elements of the bread and wine were afterwards called by the name of thanksgiving or 'Eucharist.' Comp. Justin. p. 93: τοῦ εὐχαρισθέντος άρτου καὶ οίνου καὶ ΰοατος . . . καὶ ἡ τροφή αθτη καλιζται παρ ήμων εύγαριστία.

17. δτι είς.... σί πολλοί έσμεν.
The argument is as though ho πετε τὸν Ἰσραὴλ κατὰ σάρκα: "οὐχ οἱ ἐσθίοντες τὰς θυσίας κοινωνοὶ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου εἰσίν; ¹⁹τίοῦν φημί; ὅτι ᾿εἰδωλόθυτόν τι ἐστὶν ἢ ὅτι ΅εἶδωλόν τι ἐστὰν; ²⁰ἀλλ' ὅτι ἃ ωὐχὶ, Transpose είδωλων and εἰδωλόθυτόν.

hold Israel after the flesh: have not they which eat of the 19 sacrifices reommunion with the altar? What say I then? that "what is offered in sacrifice to idols is anything or 20 that the idol is anything?" "Nay, but that the things said, 'In the cup you jointly partake of the blood of Christ, according to His words. But in the bread you jointly partake of the body of Christ by a still clearer argument. For what is the meaning of the one loaf with its several parts, except to set before us that one loaf and one body which we are collectively? (οί πολλοί, see xii. 12.) For this is the meaning of that solemn act in which we all (of mapric, not one or two only, but the whole society) partake, not of separate fragments, but of the one complete loaf (έκ τοῦ ἕνος gorov). And this one body. which we thus prove ourselves to be by this act, is the body of Christ of which we partake in the Eucharist.'

18. The practice of the Israelites is introduced to imSacrifices, press upon his readers, in a case more familiar to them than Grecian customs,
the necessary connexion of all sacrificial feats with the worship to which they belonged.

'Israel after the ffesh;' i. e. the Jews literally, as distinct from 'the Israel of God,' Gal. vi. 16. Here, as in Gal. iv. 3, 8, 9 ('the beggarly elements of the world'), the Apostle speaks of the Jewish mation and system, as if, in comparison with the Christian society, they were nearly on a level with the Gentile nations and Pagan worship, much as we might now speak of the sacrifice of the Mussulmans or Samaritans. The Jewish sacrifices of which he here speaks were not the sin-offerings (which were entirely consumed on the altar), but those called 'peace-offerings' or 'thank-offerings'.

For the practice of eating the remainder of sacrifices, see Lev. viii. 31; Deuteron. xii. 18, xvi.

The somewhat harsh expression 'have communion with the altar,' seems to be substituted for what we should naturally have expected, 'with God; partly in order to bring more vividly before them the connexion of the feasts with the altar from which they were taken, but chiefly because 'communion with God' was too high a thought to be brought down to the level of the mere outward ceremonial of the fleshly Israel. For this substitution of words comp. viii. 2, ix. 17.

19, 20. The suppressed conclusion of the last verse would be, 'So you by partaking of the heathen feasts partake of their worship.' And this recalls the assertion in viii. 4, that the heathen divinities had no real existθύουσιν δαιμονίοις καὶ οὐ θεῷ θύουσιν, οὐ θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς κοινωνοὺς τῶν δαιμονίων γίνεσθαι. ²¹οὐ δύνασθε ποτήριον κυρίου πίνειν καὶ ποτήριον δαιμονίων, οὐ δύνασθε τραπέζης

* βύει τὰ έθνη, δαιμονίοις θύει, καὶ οὐ Θεῷ :

which they a sacrifice, 'they sacrifice to devils and not to God,' and I would not that ye should have 'communion with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils, ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the ence. As though he said, 'When I speak thus, do I contradict what I said before? No; but what I say is this (άλλ' ὅτι).' As in viii, 4 he had said that whatever might be the notions of heathens about their divinities, at any rate for Christians those divinities had no real existence; so here conversely, he says, that whatever might be the feelings of Christians about the The heafalse divinities, still to then Deities the heathen they had a real existence. And in proof of this he quotes from the LXX. version of Deut. xxxii. 17, έθυσαν δαιμονίσιο καὶ οὐ θεώ. From this passage his meaning has often been taken to be that, although the particular divinities, as conceived under the names of Jupiter, Venus, &c., were mere fictions, vet there were real evil spirits who, under those names, or in the general system of pagan polytheism, beguiled them away from the true God. (So Ps. χονί. 5, πάντες οἱ Θεοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν čαιμόνια.) Such certainly was the general belief of the early Christians. But the strong declaration in viii. 4, reiterated here in verse 19, of the utter non-existence of the heathen divinities, renders it safer to understand him as saving that in the mind of the heathen sacrificers, whatever Christians might think, the sacrifices were really made to those whom the Old Testament called δαιμόνια. It is in fact a play on the word δαιμόνιον. The heathen Greeks (as in Acts xvii. 18, the only passage where it is so used in Biblical Greek) employed it as a general word for 'Divinity,' and more especially for those heroes and inferior divinities, to whom alone (according to the belief of this later age), and not to the supreme rulers of the universe, sacrifices as such were due. The writers of the New Testament and the LXX., on the other hand, always use it of 'evil demons,' although never perhaps, strictly speaking, for the author of evil, who is called emphatically 'Satan,' or 'The Devil.' It is by a union of these two meanings that the sense of the passage is produced. 'The words of Deut. xxxii. 17 truly describe their state, for even according to their own confession, although in a different sense, they sacrifice to demons.' A similar play on the same word, although for a different object, occurs in the Apology of Socrates, where he defends himself against the charge of atheism, on the ground that he believed in a demon (δαιμόνίον); and that demons (δαιμόrea) being sons of gods (9:00 κυρίου μετέχειν καὶ τραπέζης δαιμονίων. 22 ἡ παραζηλοῦμεν τον κύριον; μη ισχυρότεροι αὐτοῦ ἐσμέν;

28 Πάντα * έξεστιν, άλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει · πάντα * έξ-

* Add not.

22 table of devils. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we mightier than He?

All things are 'in my power', but all things are not 'pro-παίδες), he must therefore be acknowledged to believe in the rods themselves.

There are here great varieties of reading; but none important, except that Marcion read ors ispoθυτόν τι έστιν η είδωλόθυτόν τι ione; an alteration apparently made in order to place Jewish sacrifices (lepóθυτα) on the same level as heathen (είδωλόθυτα).

21. He now turns to the practical conclusion that there is a real incompatibility between Christianity and partaking in the sacrificial feasts as such. 'The cup of demons' is the bowl (sparip) of libation which was poured forth at the beginning of a feast or of a sacrifice; hence to drink of the wine of libation was regarded by the Rabbis as a sign of apostasy (see Wetstein).
'The table of demons' may either be the table for the meal following upon the sacrifice, or the more solemn banquets laid out, as in the Roman lectisternia, on tables attached to the altars. (Macrob. Sat. ii. 11.) The phrase τράπεζα τῷ δαιμονίῳ occurs in Isa. lxv. 11 (LXX.). 'The table of the Lord,' as distinct from ' the cup of the Lord,' is the table on which the bread is

'The Lord's placed. The use of Table,' the word agrees with the description of the actual ceremony in xi. 20-34: the Lord's Table being the natural accompaniment of the Lord's Supper (xi. 20). For the general argument compare 2 Cor. vi. 15. The incompatibility is heightened, and in part suggested, by the recollection that one of Christ's peculiar works was the casting out of demons.

22. ή παραζηλούμεν τὸν κύριον; 'Or if we think we are able to unite these discordant elements, are we prepared to challenge the Lord to anger? Surely we are not stronger than He?' The words are a continuation of the same quotation in Deut, xxxii, 17-21. as that from which the words of verse 20 are taken: καὶ εἶδε κύριος καὶ έζήλωσε ... καὶ εἶπεν ... Αύτοι παρεζήλωσάν με έπ' ου θεώ, παρώξυνάν με έν τοῖς εἰδώλοις abrev (comp. also Baruch iv. 7, 8). There is the same play upon κύριος here, as upon δαιμόνια in 19: 'Shall we provoke the jealous Lord who has in the Law denounced idolatry, by mixing His cup and His table with that of devils?

For this identification of Christ with 'the Lord' of the Old Tostament, comp. verses 4 and 9. The expression παραζηλούμεν is taken from the metaphor of marriage between God and His people, which pervades large portions of the O. T., especially Hosea and Ezekiel. The strength of the expression would seem to indicate that they had conceived έστιν, ἀλλ' οὖ πάντα οἰκοδομεῖ. 14 μηδεὶς τὸ ἐαυτοὺ ζητείτω, ἀλλὰ τὸ τοῦ ἐτρουι. 12 πᾶν τὸ ἐν μακελλφ, πωλούμενον ἐσθετεμηδὲν ἀνακρύοντες διατήν συνείδηστο 12 Οῦ λκηρίου γὰρ ἡ γὴ καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς. 12 Εἰς καλεῖ ὑμᾶς τῶν fitable: all things are 'in my power', but all things edify not.

2. Let no 'no essek his own, but "" that which is anothers. What25 soever is sold in the shambles, that cat, "not asking" ques25 tions' for conscience sake: for 'the earth is the Lord's, and the 27 fulness thereof." If any of them that believe not bid you to the possibility of celebrating the Eucharist at an idol feast. Compare xi. 30, where in speaking of a similar subject he alludes to the indements provoked by it.

judgments provoked by it. 23. The transition here is so abrupt that one would almost imagine the ensuing section to stand entirely by itself, merely as a practical summary of the whole question, especially as the argument is taken up again from the original point of view which had been dropped since ix. 23. But the allusions to the Eucharist in verses 26, 28, 30, still furnish a thread of connexion. Here, as in vi. 12, an impassioned appeal of the Apostle, expressing the contrariety between the profession of Christians and the practice of heathenism, is broken off by what seem to be the words of an objector, 'all things are lawful,' which St. Paul takes up, adopts as his own, and proceeds to justify and moderate. The first qualification, 'all things are not expedient,' is the same as in vi. 12. The second 'all things edify not' (οἰκοδομεῖ), is peculiar to this passage, and is used in reference to the argument already begun in viii. 2. 'This indifference about idol feasts does not, as you suppose, advance a man in Christian knowledge or holiness; it may tend only to retard him.' Comp. viii, 10.

24. 'Every man's actions affect his neighbour's welfare as well as his own.'

 Now follow the practical rules; and first, the concessions to latitude.

μάτελλον, a Latin word, which Plutarch uses to explain the Greek word κρεωπώλιον. It was also used by the Rabbis, μου.

under araspirores, 'asking no questions, whether the food is or is not from the flesh of victims.'

διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν, 'because of the religious scruple which it may excite, whether in yourselves or in others.'

26. 'The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, from Ps. xxiv. 1, was the common form of Jewish thanksgiring before the meal (see Wetstein, ad loc.); and hence probably it was the carry Eucharistic blessing, and thus alluded to in this place, 'This, therefore, is not inconsistent with the cup of blessing and the table of the Lord.'

τοῦ κυρίου, used ambiguously for 'Christ,' and the Lord of the Old Testament, as in 22.

τὸ πλήρωμα, i. e. 'that which απίστων καὶ θέλετε πορεύεσθαι, πῶν τὸ παρατιθέμενον ὑμῶν ἐσθίετε μηδὲν ἀνακρίνοντες διὰ την συνείδησων. ³⁰ ἐὰν δε τις ὑμῶν εἰτη Τοῦντο 'ἐερθύντου ἐστυν, μη ἐσθίετε δι ἐκείνου τὸν μηνόσαντα καὶ τὴν συνείδησων. ³⁰ συνείδησων δὲ λέγω οὐχὶ την ἐαντοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὴν τοῦ ἐτέρου. Γνα τί γὰρ ἡ ἐλκυ-θερία μου κρίνεται ὑπὸ ἀλλης συνείδησως; ³⁰εί ἐγὸν ὰρμιτι

• είδωλόθυτον.
• Add τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς.
• εί δὲ.

a feast and ye "desire to go, whatsoever is set before you cat," not asking questions for conscience sake. But if any 28" one say to you "this is offered in sacrifice unto idols," eat not for his sake that shewed it and for conscience sake. 29 "A Conscience I say not thine own, but "that of the other. 30 For why is my liberty judged by "another conscience?" MI If by grace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that for fills it.' For the general sense compare 1 Tim. iv. 4.

 The invitation supposed is to a private meal, not in the temple. For the transposition of τῶν ἀπίστων comp. viii. 11, ix. 10, xv. 19.

Θέλετε, 'are anxious to go.'
This shows that the persons addressed are the enlightened party.

28. τε. Not the host (who would not be again introduced in this way), but one of the guests, either a heathen who wished to put the Christian to a test, or a Jew who wished to point out the danger. iερόθυτον (A. B. H.) is a neutral word, εἰδωλθόντων (C. D. E. F. G. J. K.), a contemptuous one.

29, 30. Here follows a compressed dialogue, like Rom. iii. 1.—8. St. Paul says, 'By the religious scruple I mean, not that of the enlightened, but of the weak Christian. To which the enlightened Christian answers, 'WDy, what is this ('iver 1'páp)' What is the reason that my liberty is to be condemned by a scruple in which I have no concern? If calumny for a meal for 'Why is which I give thanks?' my liberty To this St. Paul re- judged?' turns no direct answer, but turns it off abruptly with the general conclusion in verse 31: 'If you give thanks to God for what you do, remember that every act, even in eating and drinking, must be done to His glory, and if to His glory, then without offence to any.' As in Rom. iii. 1-8, instead of answering the objector, he abruptly, and as if still continuing the objector's sentence, says, 'whose condemnation is just.'

The abrupt introduction of the words of the opponent may be explained by the supposition that he is quoting the words of the Corinthian letter, as in vi. 12.

vii. 1, viii. 1, x. 23, xi. 2. Compare Rom. xiv. 8, where, after

I eat with a grateful thanksgiving, why am I to be exposed to stating the indifference of days and of meats, he concludes, 'Whether therefore we live or die, we are the Lord's.' rptyrrat*, 'is brought under μετέχω, τί βλασφημοῦμαι ὑπὰρ οὖ ἐγὰ εἰχαριστῶ, ¾ εἶτε οδυ ἀσθίστε είτε πίνετε είτε τι ποιεῖτε, πάντα εἰς δόξαν θεοὐ ποιείτε. ¾ αὐρός κοποι * καὶ Ἰουδαίοις γύανεθε καὶ Ἑλλησυ καὶ τῆ ἐκκλησι τοῦ θεοῦ, ¾ καθῶς κάγὰ πάντα πάσω ἀρότκω, μὴ ζητῶν τὸ ἐμαιντοῦ *σύμφορο, ἀλλὰ τὸ τῶν πολλῶν, ὑτα σωθῶσυ. ΧΙΙ. ¹μμηταί μου γύκεσθε, καθὼς κάγὰ χριστοῦ.

· γίνεσθε καὶ Ἰουδαίοις,

^b συμφέρου.

as which I give thanks? Whether therefore ye act or drink sor whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Give none offence, neither to "Jews nor " Greeks, nor to the church sof God, even as I please all in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but "that of "the many, that they may be I saved. X. Is Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ.

judgment,' with an allusion to ἀνακρίνοντες in verses 25, 27.

xúorr, 'by grace', and eiyaparéa, 'I give hanka', seem tofer to the Eucharistic blessing, as in 26, and to imply that it accompanied the social meal. Compare ver. 31, illustrated by Col. iii. 17: 'Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giring thanks (riyaparosoverc) to God and the Father by Him.'

βλασφημούμαι, 'misrepresented.' Compare Rom. ii. 24 and xiv. 16.

31, 32. "To the glory of God," Pating i.e. so that God may and drab. receive praise (comp. ing to be vi. 20; Matt. v. 16; God from your acts being God from your acts being force, either to Jewa, as shrinking from the heathen sacrifices; or to Gentlies (comp. 28), as watching for your acquiescence in their idelatry, in order to justify themselves; or to the for their most solemn ordinance." έσθίειν καὶ πίειν, is used in speaking of the Lord's Supper, xì. 22.

The form of consecrating all human acts to God, was already in use amongst the Jews, by whom, as now amongst Mussulmans, every act was performed 'in the name of God.' Formed the third point of the formed the constant of the feelings of others. Epicetus, on being asked how anyone could ext so as to please God, answered, and thankfully, the preparetely, and thankfully, its preparetely, and thankfully, its preparetely.

άρέσκω of itself has (like ἄρεσκος) something of a bad sense. Comp. Gal. i. 10, τῶν πολλῶν, not 'many;'

but 'the many,' the whole mass with whom he had to deal.

XI. 1. He here returns to his own example, as in ix. 1-16, and to the example of Christ, as in viii. 11.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. X. 15-XI. 1.

You must keep yourselves distinct from acts of idol worship, both for your own sake and for that of others. And the allusion just made to the Eucharist suggests an additional reason for doing so. such as will come home to the common sense of all, especially of you who pride yourselves on your wisdom. You know that when we join in blessing the cup, not of heathen libations, but of our sacred Christian meal, we join, as Christ Himself has tought us, in partaking of His blood; yet more, when we join in breaking the loaf, we join in partaking of His body ; for the very meaning of that joint act is to express that we, the Christian society, are as truly one body, the body of Christ, as the various particles of bread are one compact loaf. Such is the closeness of communion with Christ, into which our Christian feasts bring us. It now remains, on the other hand, to point out how closely the sacrificial feasts of the heathens bring them into connexion with the objects of their worship. It is involved in the very principle of sacrifice. Look at the Jewish sacrificial feasts, with which all Jewish converts are familiar, and remember how entirely those feasts are identified with the altar, on which the victims are killed, and upon which their blood is sprinkled. However much the social elements may appear to prevail, yet the religious element lies at the basis of the feast. And so in the heathen sacrifices, although the false divinities to whom they are offered, have for us no real existence; yet the very words, which they use to designate those divinities, serve to identify their act of sacrifice with that which is described in the Law as a sacrifice, not to God, but to demons. If then their libations be shed, and their table be spread for demons, it is manifestly inconsistent with the sacred cup which you drink, the sacred meal of which you partake in the name of Him whose work on earth was to destroy and drive out demons, it is an insult to His majesty; and as we read in the same passage of the Law, which speaks of the heathen sacrifices, He will be roused to jealousy, and by visible judgments compel us to acknowledge His power.

The conclusion, then, of the whole argument is, that although in the highest sense, all these matters, as relating not to things inward but outward, are absolutely indifferent, yet that indifference must always be subject to two qualifications: (1.) That the welfare of the whole Christian man must be attruded to. (2.) That advance in Christian holiness must not be impeded, whether in ourselves or in others; for in all things we must consider others rather than ourselves.

The practical result therefore is that, although you may eat of meat sold in the shambles, and accept invitations to feasts in the houses of heathens, without scruple; yet, if any one tru to test your belief by reminding you that it is part of a sacrificial feast, then abstain. The thankful enjoyment of all God's gifts, which constitutes the essence of a Christian meal, ceases at once when it offends the religious scruples of others. In every meal, and in every act, we must so conduct ourselves as that praise and honour may return to God. This can only be by avoiding carefully everything which may ensure either the Jewish or the Gentile portion of the community, or the Christian community itself as convened for its solemn meals in the presence of God. This is my own conduct, as I have already set it before you, and this is what I entreat you to imitate in my acts of habitual self-denial, as I imitate the selfsacrifice of Christ Himself.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF THINGS INDIFFERENT AND OF SELF-DENIAL.

In the three foregoing Sections there are two main subjects, one rising out of and above the other. First, the settlement of the question of the sacrificial feasts. Secondly, the general lesson of self-denial enforced by the Apostle's own example.

(1.) Of these subjects, the first may be regarded as one branch of the more general question of 'things in Controlifferent,' discussed in Rom. xiv. 1—xv. 13. If very reschibits the Apostle's treatment of the difficulties 'specing which always arise when a purer religion comes into different contact with false or imperfect forms of worship, which from long establishment have become so intervoven with social usages as to appear, in fact, inseparable. In the Apostolical age the chief point around which this controversy settled, was the sacrificial feasts. In Tertullian's time, when the sphere of the collision had become more general, and when the earlier 'As to difficulty had been, to a great extent, laid to sleep, benine either by the authority of the Apostle or by the subsentificer;

sidence of the Jewish scruples on unclean meats, the question related rather to the attendance on public amusements, measurements, the service in the Roman armies, and occasioned the two celebrated treatises 'De Spectaculis,' and 'De Corond Militis.' In a yet further stage of this collision of Christiansity with Paganism, the question of the lawfulness of attendance on pagan or semi-pagan rites was exchanged for the question of the lawfulness of transplanting them into the Christian soil. And lastly, within the bosom of the Christian soil. And lastly, within the bosom of the Christian presuits. Idea of the controversy, in the question whether amusements or practices which belong to heathen times, or to the more secular curses of the world, are of themselves to be shunned as profance.

The decision of the Apostle in regard to the abstract view of the case is clear and positive. Whereas up to this Decision in their time, not only Jewish doctors, but Christian Apostles, had deemed that Gentile converts should altogether by the abstain from a feast of meats offered to idols, St. Paul declares that, in itself, it contained no pollution; that, unless expressly asserted to be a religious ceremony, it might be fairly treated as a social meal, to be celebrated with the usual forms of Christian devotion. The same principle had, indeed, been involved in the precept and example of Gamaliel, who, when reproached with bathing in the baths of Ptolemais (Acre) in an anartment where there was a statue of Venus, replied, 'The bath was not made for the statue, but the statue for the bath.' But it was reserved for the Apostle to make this principle, not merely the rule of a philosophical school, but the law of the whole Christian world. In all the circumstances which have just been described as giving birth to similar questions, the main tendency, the genius (if one may use the expression) of Christendom, has followed, sometimes, perhaps, even with exaggerated freedom, in the wake of the Apostle's decision, 'Loca non contaminant, sed quæ fiunt in locis,' was tullian. the verdict with which even the fervent Tertullian closed the question about the entrance into temples and theatres. Greby Gre. gory the Great advised Augustine of Canterbury not to destroy, but to Christianize, every heathen building and every heathen custom in Britain. John Wesley's well-known saying, when he adapted profane tunes to sacred songs, is but an expression of the common sense of Christendom. If Christianity gave the death-blow to the spectacles rites, but of their cruelty. If the licentious and superstitious parts of the pagan ritual disappeared on the conversion and he of the Empire, the great mass of its usages has been Christenretained wherever any Christian ceremonial of any dom generally. extent has been maintained. If a few ardent spirits have been, in later times, eager in denouncing as profane all secular arts and amusements, they have failed in producing any deep impression on the bulk of the Christian community, which has always been wont, often it may be with injustice, to regard their efforts as the sallies of a sectarian and mistaken zeal.

(2.) Such, in spite of the qualifications with which he guards it, is the abstract principle laid down by the Apostle, Union of especially in viii. 8, x. 23, 25, 26, 27. But the true teleration moral greatness of this passage consists, not in its gard for announcement of Christian liberty, but in its exhibi- scruples. tion of Christian love. It expresses the rare union of wide toleration with tender sympathy; such as at once elevates characters above the mere mass either of thinking or of feeling men; such as presents, in the contemplation of the human mind, a sense of interest and beauty, analogous to that which is awakened in the physical world by a view containing the varied elements of mountain and lowland scenery. With the deepest conviction of the utter indifference of meats in themselves, and of the utter groundlessness of the scruples raised concerning them, the Apostle checks himself in full view of the liberty which he forbore to grasp, with the sentiment, 'I will not eat meat whilst the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.' This is the expression of his self-denial in its first fervour of love. The second stage of his example discloses it, in its more general form, under the strictest control of forethought and sagacity; - I have become all things to all mon. if by any means I might save some.' The third and last stage is summed up in the words, often since repeated by preachers and teachers as matter of course, but then uttered with all the freshness of real humility and awe, so unlike any hierarchical or philosophical pretensions, so strongly contrasted even with his own Apostolical greatness, that translators have tried to soften down the vehemence of the expression, 'I "bruise" my body and bring it into "slavery," lest when I have preached to others I myself should be "proved unworthy."

Few later parallels to this double phase of the Apostle's

character can be found. Yet it must not be dissembled that, with many obvious and essential differences in their general Example character, the most striking likenesses are to be sought of the amongst the higher and better spirits of the 'Society Society of Jesus. of Jesus.' In them, indeed, we look in vain for the Apostle's devotion to truth and freedom, or his wide and comprehensive view, which saw at a glance what was essential and what was insignificant; we see the elements of worldly organisation and worldly statecraft, which, in his teaching, were almost entirely absent; even the very same fervour of love and self-denial, at a later age, must differ from what they were in their first youthful freshness in the first age of Christianity. Still it is to the lives of Ignatius Lovola and Francis Xavier that we ought to look, if we would wish in any degree to see translated visibly into flesh and blood, the self-denying versatility with which the Apostle, for no selfish object, but for the cause of Christ, 'became all things to all men.' He, it is true, was much which they were not: the other great characters of the sixteenth century exhibit the freeness and breadth of Christianity as these exhibit its fervour and tenderness; in any case a mechanical cony of either him or them is impossible. But it is not unimportant to ask how much and how little of his example are still applicable; how far reckless disregard of scruples is really inseparable from the one side of human character, or craft and submissive servility from the other: how far the tenderness and pliancy of the ancient Greek or the modern Spaniard or Italian can be united with the fixed conviction of the ancient Jew, with the truth and freedom of the modern Englishman or German.

ANSWERS TO THE LETTER OF THE CORINTHIANS (CONTINUED).

WORSHIP AND ASSEMBLIES.

XI. 2 XIV. 40.

THE opening words of this Section, which apply more or less to all that follows in xi. 2-xiv. 40, imply that, as in vii. 1, viii. 1. he still has before him some letter or statement of the Corinthian Church, from which he quotes and adopts their argument, followed probably by questions. 'You claim "my praise for remembering me and keeping my commands as I commanded you;" 'to which he replies here, as in xi, 17 and 22, that they have his praise, but with certain grave exceptions, which he proceeds to specify.

The first exception of the Apostle relates to the abandonment of the usual Grecian head-dress by the Corinthian women, when they met in the Christian assemblies. In order to understand the stress laid by the Apostle on what would seem to us a matter of comparative insignificance, we must recall the importance attached in the ancient world to dress. as indicative of national customs or moral habits.

In the early days of Greece, the longer or shorter of dress in garment which a man wore at once declared whether he belonged to the Ionian or Dorian race;

in other words, it was an index to the gods of his worship, the mode of his education, the moral and religious ideas which formed the basis of his character. And, although this was probably worn out before the first century of the Christian era. vet the language of the Roman satirists, especially Juvenal, points to the moral importance of deviations, however slight, from the national costume.1

Amongst the fashions of dress which admitted of no variation. was that which Greece (with the exception of Lacedæmon) retained in common with the Oriental nations gene- Head-dress of rally, of women always appearing in public with women. their heads covered (not, indeed, with a veil, but) with the

See the notes of Ludovicus Capellus, on xi. 4.

'peplum,' or shawl, which they commonly wore on their shoulders, but on public occasions threw over their heads like a hood. The Theban veil (Diezearch. Descr. Græc. x.), and that of Tarsus (Dio Chrys. Orat. 1), are described as covering the whole face except the eyes, as still in Mussulman countries. Great stress was laid by the later Jewish authorities on the veiling of the women; and though they were unveiled in the synagogues, this was because they were shut off from the men, and so in private.1 The special covering here meant is described in xi. 15 as a mantle (περιβόλαιον). This word, in the only other passage where it occurs in the New Testament (Heb. i. 12, from Ps. cii. 26), and in all the passages in the LXX. Version of the Old Testament, means, according to its derivation, a mantle or covering wrapt round the body, like ἐπιβόλαιον, which is used indifferently for a 'mantle,' as in Judg. iv. 18; or for a 'kerchief' on the head, Ezek. xiii. 18; and so in Mark xiv. 72, ἐπιβαλών ἔκλαιεν probably signifies, 'he drew his mantle' (the Oriental hyke) 'over his head, and began to weep.' In this passage the Apostle would refer to the 'peplum,' which the Grecian women used ordinarily as a shawl, but on public occasions as a hood also, especially at funerals and marriages; of which last an instance is given in a woodcut in 'Smith's Dictionary of Classical Antiquities' (Peplum), representing the reception of the bride thus hooded, by her husband bareheaded, at the door of the nuptial chamber, and thus exhibiting, in a lively form, the contrast here intended.

This costume the Corinthian women had ventured to disuse, in the Christian assemblies, where, as one may suppose, they would urge that, all distinctions of sex being done away in the presence of Christ, it was unworthy the dignity of a Christian prophetess to wear the badge of Seculsion, almost of servitude, which belonged to her only as a Grecian with

Sco the Rabbis, quoted in Wetstein and Lightfoot, on xi. 5.

² Έπαινῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς,* ὅτι πάντα μου μέμνησθε καὶ καθὼς παρεδωκα ὑμῶν τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε. ³θελω δὲ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι ὅτι παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἡ κεφαλὴ ὁ χριστός ἐστιν, κεφαλὴ δὲ ἡνυαικὸς ὁ ἀνῆρ, κεφαλὴ δὲ ἡτοῦ Ἰ γριστοῦ ὁ θεός.

Add åårand.

b Omit του.

2 Now I praise you, at that ye remember me in all things and keep the roommands as I roommanded them to you. 3 But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of o woman is the man, and the head

 The words παρέδωκα, παραδύσεις, as applied to the 'Traditeaching of the Apostles, tions,' are used for the communication sometimes of practical regulations, as here, 2 Thess. iii. 6, and Acts xvi. 4; sometimes of facts, as in xi. 23, xv. 3; sometimes of warnings, as in 2 Thess. ii. 15. They correspond to παραγγέλλω, παραγγελία, in classical Greek. The verb is well expressed by the Latin 'trado,' as in the phrase 'docendo, narrando, trado.' The word 'tradition,' formed from the less frequent substantive 'traditio,' in its present sense implies 'handing down orally from generation to generation,' a meaning alien to passages like the present. Here the word is best expressed by 'command' or 'communication;' such 'command' being sometimes oral, sometimes written (2 Thess. ii. 15), but always delivered, not 'traditionally' through many links, but direct from the teacher to the taught.

But I would have you know' (θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, θέλω ὑμᾶς οὐκ ἀγνοεῖν) is the usual formula by which he prefaces an objection or a warning, x. 1, xii. 1, 2 Thess. iv. 13. The argument springs from the relation, so often insisted upon, between Christ and the human race, the image being here more vividly brought out than in vi. 15, x. 16, by the representation of Christ, not only as the body, but as the Head. From this relation, to which alone the mctaphor properly applies, he illustrates the relation of the man to the woman; being thereby enabled to turn the metaphor into an argument directly bearing on the practical question; as though he said, 'If the man is thus the head of the woman, then, in a religious sense, her head is not her own; it is the type or likeness of her husband. The last words, explaining the relation of Christ to God, result from the usual tendency of the Apostle to fill up the whole view of his readers with the subject of which he is speaking. See iii. 23; and, for the general truth conveyed in the expression, see xv. 27. For the illustration of the relation of husband and wife by the relation of Christ and man, see Eph. v. 23.

¹πας ανήρ προσευχόμενος ή προφητεύων κατά κεφαλής
 ²ξων καταισχύνει την κεφαλήν αὐτοῦ. ⁵πασα δὲ γυνή προσευχομένη ή προφητεύουσα ἀκατακαλύπτω τῆ κεφαλή of Christ is God. Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered dishonoureth his head. But every 5 woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head "unveiled

In describing this truth, δu - $\theta \rho u v \sigma c$ would have been the natural word to use with reference to Christ, as in xv. 45; but for the sake of the contrast with 'woman,' he has changed it to $\dot{\alpha} r \dot{\eta} \rho$. (See note to verse

4. The practice of men praying with covered heads is attacked, not because any such peculiar custom existed at Corinth, but for the sake of illustrating the practice of the women. The Romans (see Servius ad Æn. iii. 405) and the Jews prayed with their heads veiled; and the Jews. like all Oriental nations, still express reverence by uncovering, not the head, but the feet, and add to the common covering of the hat or turban that of the veil or 'tallith.' The pertinacity with which, in modern synagogues, they keep their heads covered, is partly derived from the practice of the Levites in the Temple, partly from the laws of Maimonides for Jews in Mahometan countries. (Capellus ad loc.) If, therefore, St. Paul alludes to any existing custom as a sanction for his position that men should pray uncovered, it must be that of the Greeks, who usually went bareheaded, not only (as is still the case in Greece) in common life, but in worship. (See Macrob. Sat.

i. 8, iii. 6, quoted by Grotius on this passage.) The context implies that he is speaking only of public prayer and prophesying. He begins by attacking, not the practice itself, but the exaggerated feeling from which it proceeded. 'Internally and spiritually there is no longer any distinction of sex; but viewed externally, there is a graduated scale in creation, which no inward change can invert. Christ, the second Adam in this new creation, is to the whole human race, and to every member of it, as the head to the body. In like manner man, although one with the woman, is yet as the head, without which her existence would be incomplete. And so (to go back to the example of Christ, and see this principle of subordination carried into the very highest sphere of all) God, although one with Christ, is yet the Head from which He comes and to which He returns.

cariz ακραλής τ΄χων (εcil. r.: so Esher vi. 12, LXX.): The dishonours his head. Both the literal and the metaphorical seme are included. 'He dishonours his head by an unseemly effeminate practice (see note on verse 14); and thereby Christ, who is his spiritual Head. 'The head, as being the symbol of Christ, is καταισχύνει την κεφαλήν * αὐτῆς. ἐν γάρ ἐστιν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ τῆ ἐξυρημένη. εξι γὰρ οὐ κατακαλυπτετα γυτή, καὶ κει ράσθω: εἰ δὰ αἰσχρὸν γυνακὶ τὸ κεἰρασθαι ῆ ξυρὰσθαι, κατακαλυπτέσθω. ἢ ἀνὴρ μὲν γὰρ οἰνι ὀφείλει κατακα. λύπτεσθαι τῆν κεφαλήν, εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα θεοῦ ὑπάρχων 'ἢ γυνη δὰ δόξα ἀνδρός ἐστιν. εδῦ γὰρ ἐστιν ἀνηρ ἐκ γυναι· faurâs.

^b Om. η

dishonoureth her head. For that is even all one as if she were shaven. For if the woman he not "veiled, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, rlet her be 'veiled. For a man indeed ought not to 'veiled. head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God; but sthe woman is the glory of "man. For "man is not of the reverence as is the body, in vi. 19, as being the temple of the Spirit.

 For the prophesying of women in the Christian Church, see Acts ii. 18, xxi. 9.

ακατακαλύπτω may be 'bareheaded,' or (as in 2 Cor. iii. 18, ανακεκαλυμμένος) ' unveiled,' probably the former; implying the absence, not of a veil for the face, but of a covering for the head. This agrees better with Plutarch, Quæst. Rom. c. 11 (where the nearly corresponding words απαρακαλύπτω τη κεφαλή are used simply as the equivalent of the Latin 'aperto capite'), with the comparison to the hair of the woman, with the stress laid on the head, and with the mention of the περεδόλαιον in verse 15.

Here again, in the word 'head' is contained the double allusion both to her own head, and her husband's as represented by it. This diagrace is illustrated by the comparison of the loss of the head-dress to the loss of hair, which in Greece, as well as in Judea, was regarded as a special mark of infamy in a woman (see being confined either to women being confined either to women of bad character (comp. Tac. Germ. 19); or else to cases of mourning and wows, as amongst the Jews and Romans (but he Jews as sein and loc., and Smith's Classical Dictionary, Come and Vestalit). 6. szápszápat, 'eroppod co.

short.' ξυράσθαι, 'shaved. 7-9, is the resumption of the argument of verse 3, only that the relation to Christ is here dropped, and the relation of man to God, as based on the early chapters of Genesis, substituted for it. 'He is created in the image of God, and therefore is the reflex of the glory of God, "being crowned with glory and honour, and having therefore dominion over the works of God" (Ps. viii. 5. 6: Gen. i. 26): and he, therefore, ought to have nothing on a head which represents so Divino a majesty, nothing on a countenance which reflects so Divine a κός, ἀλλὰ γυνη ἐξ ἀνδρός. ⁹καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐκτίσθη ἀνηρ διὰ την γυναίκα, ἀλλὰ γυνη διὰ τὸν ἀνδρα. ¹⁰διὰ τοῦτο ὀφείλε

9 woman, but ° woman of ° man: for neither was ° man 10 created for the woman, but ° woman for the man. For glory. (Compare for the last image, 2 Cor. iii. 18.) But the woman is a reflex of the glory not of God, but of man; he intercepts the glory of the Divine countenance; as all his outward manifestations have reference to God, so all hers have reference to man. Hence we read in Gen. ii. 21, that the woman was " taken out of the side of man," and the reason of this (καὶ γὰρ) was that the woman was made to be an " help meet for man," when "it was not good that he should be alone."' (Gen. ii. 18.) The quotation from Gen. ii. 21 is thus a result of that from Gen. ii. 18; and the quotation from the latter, a reason for that from the former. The whole stress, as often in Scripture, is fixed on one word, and all the rest of the imagery is, as it were, left to shift for itself. Such is here the case with the word 'glory.' Taken strictly, the woman is as much the image of God as the man; and the words in Gen. i. 26 are in the original addressed to male and female equally, under the common name of 'Adam,' or 'man.' 'God created man in His own image, male and female created he them' (see Gen. i. 27, and comp. Gen. v. 1, 2), But this was not to the purpose of the Apostle's present argument, and he therefore puts out of sight the relation of woman to God, by omitting altogether in her case the word 'image,' and dwelling only on her subordination to man, for the sake of which alone he had brought forward the contrast of the greatness of man. The general character of man, under the Hebrew name answering to διθρωπος, on which the passage of Genesis dwells, is here, as in verse 3, merged in the word διήρ, which only expresses his relation to the woman.

10. The general sense of this text, as gathered from the context, can be nothing more or less than an assertion of the subordination of the woman to the man. But in the difficulty of its several portions, it stands alone in the New Testament, unless perhaps we except Rev. xiii. 18, or except Rev. xiii. 18, or difficulty of peculiar obscurity.

(I.) 'Power on her head,' ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τῆς her head.' ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τῆς her head.' στο conjectural emendations are:
(1) ἐξουδίαν, a supposed Latinism, for 'exuvisia'. (2) klouriar, a supposed derivative of like, 'a habit,' or a mistranlation of 'habitum,' on the hypothesis that the Epistle was written in Latin. (3) klosen, 'when she goes out. (4) leevieur, 'according to her mature. 'evieur, 'according to her mature. 'when she goes out. (4) levieur, 'a broad-him Macdonian hat.' (7) A Grecied form of the Hebrew word 'co-sooth, 'casooi,'—'a covering.'

Rejecting all these conjectures, the simplest explanation would be that *!£ousia is an unusual name for a 'veil,' or 'covering.' Various approxi-

ή γυνη ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους. ¹¹ πλην "οὔτε γυνη χωρὶς ἀνδρὸς οὔτε ἀνηρ χωρὶς γυναικὸς ἐν · οδτε άπλο χωρίς γυναικός, οδτε γυνή χωρίς άπδρός,

this cause ought the woman to have power on her head beti cause of the angels. Nevertheless neither is ° ^{Da}woman without ° man nor ° man without ° woman' in the Lord;

mations to such a sense have been discovered. In Arculphus, A. D. 700 (De Sanctis Locis); and in Paulus (Pand, Flor, iii, D.) A. p. 200, quoted in Columesius' Observationes Sacrae, p. 22, the word 'imperium' occurs amongst an enumeration of female ornaments. So 'impera' and 'imperia' are used in Digest. 23, 10, 34, 2, and 'Regnum' is used for the imperial crown, from the time of Constantine downwards (see Ducange in voce). In Hebrew, רדיד 'radid,' which in Isa. iii. 23; Cant. v. 7, is used for a 'veil,' is derived from the root רדה , רדה 'radad, radah,' 'to subdue,' But the root from which 'radid' is derived, is not necessarily that of 'power,' but 'of drawing out as over a surface' (as in 1 Kings vi. 32). In Greek the only instance ever adduced of such a use of the word iξουσία, is the phrase έξουσίαν τριγώματος in Callistratus (Eκφράσεις, p. 896), which, however, even if it be the correct reading, has no reference to dress; but, as in p. 907 of the same work, expresses the form or quantity of the hair.

Such are the only instances which the learning of seventees centuries has been able to produce in illustration of the meaning of itsourier as a 'veil.' They cannot go further than to show that there may have been a Cilician provincialism, of which no other example is extant, but of which the Latin and Hebrew analogies may afford a slight confirmation. It remains, therefore, to suppose that the Apostle uses the phrase to signify 'the symbol of the man's power over the woman, as expressed in the covering of the head.' It is true that, over and above the harshness of the expression, there are several grave objections to this use of the word. έξουσία in these carlier Epistles (1 Cor., viii. 9, ix. 4, 5, 12, 18; 2 Cor. x. 8, xiii, 10: 2 Thess, iii, 9) does not mean 'dominion' but 'right' or 'liberty.' The phrase ($youngs τρείς βασιλείας έπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς. Diod. Sic. i. 47-'three kingdoms,' i. e. 'three crowns'). commonly quoted to justify this use of the name of the thing signified for the symbol, though natural where the power spoken of belongs to the person, would be unnatural when applied to the power exercised over that person by some one else. Still, in default of any better explanation, it may be urged that ¿ξουσία in the Gospels and later Epistles is used constantly for 'authority,' or 'dominion,' that in one instance (έξουσιασθήσομαι, vi. 12) there is an indication of such a use in this Epistle, and that the fact of the veil or hood being used in marriage would suggest the idea of its being a symbol of the husband's power, κυρί ϕ . 12 ὧσπερ γὰρ ή γυνη ἐκ τοῦ ἀνδρός, οὔτως καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ διὰ τῆς γυναικός, τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ. 13 ἐν

12 for as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also 13 by the woman; but all things of God. Judge in your-especially if the root of the Hebrew word (as above mentioned) were present to the Apostle's mind. For a similar instance of the Apostle's recurrence to the root of the Hebrew words which he Grecises, see 2 Cor. iv. 17. Nor should we forget the Roman 'capitis diminutio' which the woman underwent on taking the veil in the 'confurreatio.' So that the sense would then be: ' Because of this subordinate relation, the woman ought to bear upon her head the mark of man's dominion over her,' in allusion to Gen. iii. 16, 'He shall rule over thee.' Compare a similar allusion in Gen. xx. 16, where in the LXX. τίμη (whether in the sense of 'honour' or 'fine') is used to translate the Hebrew "a covering'; and for a somewhat similar train of thought and expression in the Apostle himself, 1 Cor. xii. 22, 23.

'Because (II.) Thus far the sentence, though harsh, would be complete in itself. But in the next words, in addition to the reason for the covering taken from subordination to man, is introduced another reason, 'On account of the angels.' Here again all the conjectural emendations are to be rejected. As: (1) διά τὰς ἀγέλας. on account of the crowds. (2) διὰ τοὺς ἀγελαίους, 'on account of the men who crowded in.' (3) dià rove avdoue, 'on account of the vulgar' or 'the gazing men.' (4) διά τοὺς έγγελαστάς, on account of the mockers.

(5) διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας, 'throughout [the whole of] her [divine] message.' (6) διὰ τοὺς ὅχλους, 'on account of the mobs.' Also all the interpretations founded on neculiar uses of the word dyyéλους or διά: as, (1) 'On account of the Bishops or rulers.' (2) 'On account of the spies sent to watch the assemblies. (3) 'On account of the messengers sent by the bridegroom to see the bride before marriage,' (4) An adjuration 'by the angels' (čià for vi). (5) 'On account of divorces' - as a translation of the Latin term 'nuntius' for a bill of divorce. It remains, therefore, to take the words in their obvious sense, 'on account of the angels.' In part, the introduction of this new idea might be explained by the belief implied in early Christian writers (Tert, de Orat, c. 12; Orig. c. Cels. v. 233; Apost. Const. viii. 4) that the angels were in a special manner present at Christian worship; and that the women were to veil their heads in imitation of them, as they (Isai, vi. 3) veiled their faces in the presence of God.

But the close connexion with the preceding argument implied in the words der robre requires, if possible, a more distinct allusion than this to the duty of the woman's subordination to man, which is the main subject of the sentence. The following train of thought, though beset with difficulties, may render the introduction of the words more intelligible. The Aposito ύμιν αὐτοις κρίνατε· πρέπον ἐστὶν γυναικα ἀκατακάλυπτον τῷ θεῷ προσεύχεσθαι; 140 οὐδὲἡ φύσις αὐτὴ διδάσκει ὑμᾶς, selves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God run-14 veiled? Doth not even nature itself teach you, that if a had dwelt on the necessity of this subordination, as shown in all the passages in the early chapters of Genesis, where the relation of the sexes is described, viz. Gen. i. 26, ii. 18, 23, iii. 16, The mention of these passages may have carried on his thoughts to the next and only kindred passage in Gen. vi. 2, 4, in which those relations are described as subverted by the union of the daughters of men with the sons of God .- in the version of the LXX, the angels, of anyelor. In this case the sense would be 'In this subordination of the woman to man, we find the reason of the custom, which, in consequence of the sin of the angels, enjoins that the woman-ought not to part with the sign that she is subject, not to them, but to her husband, The authority of the husband is as it were, enthroned visibly upon her head, in token that she belongs to him alone, and that she owes no allegiance to any one besides, not even to the angels who stand before the throne of God.' The 'fall of the Angels' thus spoken of is the same as that indicated in Jude 6, 2 Pet. ii. 4, where the context shows that the fall there intended is supposed to be at the time not of the creation, but of the Deluge. not from pride but lust. The connexion of this text with the veil or head-dress is illustrated by earlier Christian writers. The apocryphal work called the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, speaks of the watchers (ένρήνοpor) before the Flood being attracted by the women adorning their heads and faces; a practice which, it is said, they pursue because they have not authority (¿ξουσίαν) or power over man. (Fabric, Cod. Apoc. V. T. i. 529.) In Tertullian the thought occurs repeatedly. See De Orat. c. 22, 'Propter Angelos ait velari oportere, quod angeli propter filias hominum desciverunt a Deo ; ' De Virg. vel. 7, ' Propter angelos scilicet quos legimus a Deo et cœlo excidisse propter concupiscentiam fornicatorum.' In the Eastern world generally there are traces of the same belief, both in the Jewish and Mussulman traditions. It was said by Rabbi Simeon, 'If a woman's head (or hair) is uncovered, evil spirits come and sit upon it, and destroy everything in the house.' (Wetstein ad loc.) A strange story is contained in the earliest accounts of the revelations of Mahomet: 'Khadijah said to Mohamed after his first vision, "If the Angel appears, let me know." Gabriel again appeared, and he said to her, "I see him." She placed him first on her left, then on her right shoulder, and asked, " Seest thou him still?" He answered, "Yes." Then she said, "Turn, and lie on my bosom. When he had so done, she asked again, "Seest thou him?" He answered, "Yes," Then she took her veil from her head, and asked,

"Η οὐδὲ αὐτὴ ἡ φύσες,

οτι ανήρ μεν εάν κομά, ατιμία αὐτῷ ἐστίν, 15 γυνὴ δὲ ἐὰν

15 man have long hair, it is a shame unto him, but that if a

"Seest thou him still?" This time he answered, "No." Then she said, "By God, it is true, it is true; it was an angel, and not a devil." On this story the Arabian biographer remarks: 'Khadijah knew from Waraks that a good angel must fly from before the face of an unveiled woman, whilst a devil would bear it well.' (Weil's Mohamed der Prophet, p. 48.)

Advantage that I replies, b. 8c.) and a second of the real replication of spirits, whether good or evil. In that case compare its use in vii. 37: Elemetar Year replication of Spirits, whether good or evil. In that case compare its use in vii. 37: Elemetar Year replication of Spirits whether good or evil.

τοῦ ίδιου θελήματος. Finally, we must ask why a Connexion train of argument, otherwith con- wise simple, should be thus abruptly interrupted by allusions difficult in themselves, and rendered still more so by their conciseness. The most natural explanation seems to be that he was led by a train of association familiar to his readers, but lost to us. Such is the allnsion in 2 Thess. ii. 5, 6, 'Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth,' &c. An argument in their letter, a conversation, a custom to which he had before alluded, would account not only for the introduction of the passage, but for allusions which, as addressed merely to a local or transitory occasion, might well be couched in terms so obscure as to forbid in effect, if not in design, any certain or permanent inference from them for future ages. The difficulty of the text is, in fact, the safeguard against its misuse.

11. A qualification of verse 9, 'Although there is this subordination, yet in their communion with Christ each is necessary to the other, and both are subordinate to God.'

πλήν, 'only.' ἐν κυρίω, as we should say, 'in Christianity.'

 Referring to the creation of woman in Gen. ii. 22, and the birth of man.

ἐκ θεοῦ. For the climax compare iii. 23.

14. A short summary of the argument, as in x. 15—18, here, as there, appealing to their common sense.

ή φύσις, nature, i. e. 'the natural distinction of the long tresses of the woman.' Here, as in verses 4 and 7, the example of the man is brought forward only for the sake of the contrast. Strictly speaking, the natural argument does not apply so strongly here. But at the time the Apostle wrote, the long hair in a man Long hair was regarded as a mark condemned. either of effeminacy or savage manners. Amongst the later Romans, especially after the year n. c. 300, the long locks by which their ancestors were distinguished were laid aside, and the derivation of 'cassaries,' the hair of the male sex, from 'cedo,' to cut, although κομᾶ, δόξα αὐτῆ ἐστίν; ὅτι ἡ κόμη ἀντὶ περιβολαίου δέδοται αὐτῆ.

woman have long hair, it is a glory to her? for her hair is given her rinstead of a covering.

etymologically false, is historically true. And Juvenal speaks of the gathering-up of the thick tresses into a golden head-dress, as the last climax of effeminacy and profligacy — Reticulumque comis auratum ingentibus implet, Sat. ii. 96. In the East, men usually shave the whole head, leaving only one long lock.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XI. 2-15.

I now come to the regulations on particular subjects, which I luid down, and which on the whole you have well observed; but there are exceptions which I shall proceed to notice.

First, there is the disuse of the head-dress by the women, in their public prayers and prophesyings. The gradations and distinctions of nature are not destroyed by Christianity; on the contrary, the order of the successive stages of life and being is more clearly revealed by the opening of new spheres above the range of this visible world. Christ is the ruling and control. ling power, the universal prototype of every man, as the man is of the woman, and as God is of Christ Himself. Now, the best illustration of all these relations is that of the head to the body; for this reason, the human race, the Christian society, and every member of each, is represented as part of Christ's body; He being, as it were, the head from which they derive their intelligence, their dignity, their life. The head, therefore, whether of male or female, is naturally invested with peculiar importance; and we cannot treat with indifference the customs which enjoin that when the man appears in public, and therefore in the public worship of God, his head, which represents his Divine Master, is not to be profuned by those artificial coverings or ornaments, invented by the effeminacy of later times. In like manner the woman is to appear with her head, the symbol of her husband, not defrauded of that seemly covering which nature suggests by the long tresses which it has given her, and which general custom has confirmed by making a shaven head the mark of female infumy. Even in the primeval records of the human race, in those solemn passages which speak of the first institution of the relations of the sexes, you will see the grounds of this distinction. There we read that, whilst man represents the nature and the majesty of God, woman represents the majesty of her husband. It is from the uplifted open countenance, the 'os sublime,' of man, that God is to receive glory; it is from the covered head and veiled face of woman created from his side, and for his companionship, that man is to receive glory. Therefore his authority is to be seen visibly resting on her head in the covering which shrouds her from the view of those angelic beings who, as we read in those same primeval records, were the first to break through the sacred relation of man and wife, the first to entice her from that subjection to which God had appointed her. It is not meant that in Christianity either man or wife is independent of each other. Each by the very fact of their origin is dependent, one on the other, and both on God.

But it needs no elaborate arguments to convince you of this; it is enough to appeal to the mere teaching of nature. Think of the degraded effeminate appearance presented by a man with long tresses of hair. Think of the glory in which a woman seems to be enveloped with her long hair flowing round her, the very image of the folds of the hood or mantle which is thrown about her in imitation of it.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF SOCIAL AND NATIONAL DISTINCTIONS.

THE practical effect of this Section on the customs of Christendom is well known. Whatever may have been its reception in the Church of Corinth, the recommendation of the Apostle has been so strictly observed in later times, that, in contradistinction to the practice which prevails in Jewish synagogues and Mussulman mosques, no man would, as an ordinary rule, Actual be found in a Christian place of worship with his head effect of effect of covered; no female with hers uncovered. What was a sanction of the comment. The comment of the distance laid down as a sanction of the Grecian peptium in Christian assemblies, and as a reduction.

^{&#}x27; Holland is an exception. In their heads during the Psalmody only. Dutch congregations, men uncover See Ludovicus Capellus on xi. 4.

is now observed in countries to which the details of Greek society are wholly unknown, in which ebullitions of wild finanticism are the last evil to be dreaded in Christian worship. It is instructive to witness this instance of unconscious obedience to the incidental recommendation of one who then felt himself called upon to enforce it by a complicated and elaborate argument, which has in its turn afforded, by two obscure expressions (xi. 10), an occasion for the diligence and ingenuity of scholar after scholar in the whole field of philological and antiquarian learning.

But it is of more importance to ascertain the principles involved in the Apostolic rule. The first is the asser- Principles tion that Christianity does not directly affect the social involved: relation of the sexes. That it has indirectly affected to of the it, is indeed proved by the whole state of domestic so- sexes not cicty in modern Europe, in part, doubtless, owing to affected by the infusion of Teutonic customs, but in part, at least, Christianowing to the gentleness and tenderness of the Christian ity character, as well as to the direct assertion of the spiritual equality of the sexes, not only in the Gospel narrative, but by the Apostle himself in his declaration that 'in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female.' But here, as in the case of slavery, it was of the highest importance to the success of the destined amelioration, that it should take place by a gradual development of Christian principles, not by an abrupt revolution. To what excesses the alleged indifference to the distinction of sexes led in the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th centuries is well known; and it was, therefore, not without reason that in the first burst of excitement which accompanied the announcement of Christian freedom, the Apostle should throw himself across its path, appeal to the earliest records of society, the simplest instincts of natural taste and decency, and suppress the first outward mark of the exception claimed by Christian prophetesses from ordinary social customs. The choice of the colour of a flag has been known to turn the tide of human revolution. The rejection of the Grecian head-dress may be considered as the triumph of Apostolical order over fanatical anarchy.

And this brings us to the second point worthy of note in this advice; namely, the solemn sanction given by the Apostle to what might be thought merely a local or national fashion. 2. Sanction In this instance it resulted in great measure from the importance then attached to the outward manifestaof legal tions of character in costume; and the same may and national be said of the allusions to dress in other parts of usages. the Epistles,2 But it is also remarkable as showing how completely the Apostle identified himself with what was, as far as appears, a merely Grecian custom; belonging in part, indeed, to the Oriental world generally, but in part, peculiar to the Greeks. Seeing that it was an ancient national practice. he felt that it ought as fully to receive the sanction of the Christian Church, as if it had come down from Abraham or Moses. And if the thoughts with which he brings it into connexion seem almost too sacred for an occasion and subject comparatively so insignificant, we must remember that the vivid consciousness of the presence of Christ in all things justified to him the outward expression of that which to us can only exist inwardly and ideally. To one thoroughly penetrated with the religious and serious sense of natural objects, > the meanest flower can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

And in like manner, to one who lived in the intense conviction that on him lay the awful responsibility of bringing the whole world into communion with Christ, there was no custom so trivial—the head-dress, the flowing tresses of the woman, the relation of husband and wife, the relation of women to society in general—that did not recall to his mind their common relation to Christ and to God.

¹ Sec Notes on verses 3, 5, 14.

² See xii. 23; 1 Tim. ii. 9; 1 Pet. iii. 3; James ii. 2

ANSWERS OF ST. PAUL (CONTINUED).

DISPUTES IN THE PUBLIC ASSEMBLIES, AND ESPECIALLY AT THE LORD'S SUPPER.

XI. 16-34.

In order to enter into the following passage, it is necessary to form some conception of the celebration of the Eucharist in the Apostolical Church. The earliest recorded instance of the practice may be taken as a type of the rest. 'They continued daily, with one accord in the Temple (of Jerusalem), and breaking bread from house to house (κλώντές τε κατ' οίκον άρτον), did cat their meat in gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favour with all the people.' Acts ii. 46. That this has reference to the Communion is clear from the emphatic expression of 'breaking bread,' repeated from verse 42: 'They "were attending" on the Apostles' "teaching," fellowship, and breaking of bread, and prayers,' where the insertion of the expression between two directly religious acts, clearly indicates that it has itself a religious character. 'Breaking bread' would be obviously insufficient to describe a common meal; whereas, if we suppose it to have been the chief act of the Eucharistic Supper, and to have been in fact its earliest name. we can understand how it was used to express the whole ordinance. Compare the recurrence of the same words (aprov έκλασεν) at the opening of each of the four accounts of the institution, and in the allusion to it in x. 16 (τον ἄρτον ον κλώμεν). From this account, then, we gather two things: (1) That it was an act of religious worship; the expression of Christian devotion in private, as the Temple service was the expression of general devotion in public. (2) That it was in some manner either directly connected with or a part of a common daily meal. The words 'daily' (καθ' ἡμέραν), 'in their private houses' (κατ' οίκου), 'partook of their food' (μετελάμβανον της τροφής), conjointly taken, admit of no other interpretation.

With these indications agree all the other passages which mention it. In Acts xx. 7, we read that 'the disciples came together at Troas, on the first day of the week to break hread. Here again the mention of the first day of the week (compare 1 Cor. xvi. 2) indicates something of a religious character in the meeting of the disciples, while, at the same time, all the accompaniments are those of an ordinary parting mea; the lateness of the hour, from evening to midnight, and from midnight till the break of day; the long conversations (jui-horse not having yet acquired its historical sense of 'prechaing'); the taking of nourishment for the journey, which is immediately connected with the mention of the Apostle's departure—Akdaus daron sail yeuodason. . . . ofrow $2\overline{\text{Phi Phi W}}$, where yourdayons implies not merely 'eaten,' but 'made a meal' (compare Acts x. 10; Luke twi. 24).

More doubtful, perhaps, but still in the same direction, is the narrative of Acts xxvii. 35, which relates how on board the ship St. Paul 'took bread, and gave thanks to God: and when he had broken it, be began to cat. And then were they all of good cheer, and themselves partook of the food. That this was an ordinary meal is obvious; and as a great proportion of the crew were heathens, it could not have been, in the same sense as in the two previous passages, regarded as a full celebration of the Eucharist. But the exact copy of the words of the first institution could hardly have occurred, without intending to imply that there was at least a pointed reference to it in the Apostle's act.

The only remaining allusions in the New Testament are those contained in this Epistle, which still confirm the practice as we find it in the Acts. Thus in x. 16-22, although the cup is more prominently brought forward in opposition to the heathen libations, the main argument implies, as in the Acts, that the breaking of the bread was the most significant part of the ceremony; through it the partakers became, or intimated that they were, 'the body of Christ.' In like manner the union of the religious with the social element is also apparent, both in the comparison with the manna and the water in the wilderness-which if used with a higher meaning, were yet in the first instance employed for common sustenance-and also with the idol feasts which, though connected with sacrifices, were yet in themselves social banquets. Hence in both cases the expression used is (not 'the altar of demons,' the 'altar of the Lord,' but) ' the table of demons,' ' the table of the Lord.' So too, the phrases used for the celebration, in x, 16, 30-'blessing,' 'thanksgiving,' indicate the thankful offering of the heart to God, and 'the communion of the body and blood of Christ' (conservier, x. 16) implies a solemn sense of identification with Christ; whilst, on the other hand, the plural expressions and the general turn of the argument (x 4, 16, 17, 21) imply that throughout the ceremony, not merely one or two individuals, or selected portions of the community, but the whole community of Christians as such, with all their imperfections and errors bore their part. And a comparison of x. 21 with x. 30 indicates that some even conceived it possible to celebrate the 'breaking of bread' in the act of partaking of a feast of sacrificial food, where heathens were present

Such was the institution of which the Apostle proceeds to speak in the passage now before us, and which there The Enpresents substantially the same image. It is a social charist a meal, where the hungry looked forward to satisfying supper. their wants (xi. 34), and where some indulged even to excess (xi. 21). It is a supper, that is, not merely a morsel of bread and a drop of wine taken in the early morning, or in the seclusion of an Eastern noon, but the regular substantial meal of the day; a supper (δείπνον, xi. 20, 21) at the usual hour after the sun had set, and therefore in its time, as well as in its festive accompaniments, recalling 'the night' (xi. 23) of the original institution, and agreeing with the account of the parting meal at Troas, in Acts xx. 7. Everything in outward form still continued as it was in the earliest recorded instance of its celebration, in Acts ii. 46. But the inward spirit of harmony, which, at that time, made it the natural expression of the feelings of 'those who had all things in common' (Acts ii. 44)—the exulting joy (ἀναλλίασις), the unoffending and unoffended simplicity (adelorns), which would then have made disputes at such a moment impossible-had now begun to wax The sacred meal, which seemed the most fitting expression of the whole Christian life, where all things, ' whether they ate or drank,' could be done 'to the glory of God,' seemed in danger of being swallowed up in worldly disputes of precedence or even of revelry. That these were the kind of disputes which the Apostle here attacks seems clear, both from the context of the passage, 'If any man seems to be contentious,' 'I hear that there are divisions,' 'parties' (xi. 16, 18, 19), 'among you,' and also from the specific allusions to such discords in xi. 21, 22, 33. But in what way they originated is difficult to perceive clearly. The most probable explanation seems to be, that, as in a Greek dining-club! ("pavos), it was often the practice for the richer members of the club to supply the wants of the poorce; so here the banquet, which was chiefly provided by the rich, was designed to be enjoyed by all equally and at the same time as an expression of Christian unity. But this was not observed; the same distinctions of rank in the Christian assemblies, against which St. James (ii. 1-4) protests to his Jewish hearers, broke out on these occasions in the Gentile Church at Corinth; the richer members, following, probably, the example of the common Grecian clubs, seized upon the portion of the food which they had brought, before the poorer members could get hold of it (see xi. 21), alleging, in their defence, that they were hungry (xi. 34), and could not wait; and the consequence was a scene of general disorder (xi. 21), and a complete disruption of the unity which the feast was intended to promote. The practice of the Grecian clubs was for each guest to eat that which he brought with him in his own basket (Athen, viii, 17, p. 365). And the rule recommended by Socrates in order to prevent disorder (Xen. Mcm. iii. 14. 1) was, as here by St. Paul, that they should not begin to cat till the contents of each basket were placed in public on the table.

It was to put down this practice that St. Paul here brings forward more strongly than had been before customary, the religious, as distinguished from the social, character of the supper; and by recalling to their minds the solemnity of the original institution, impresses upon them the danger they incurred by such dosceration of it. Not merely had the order of the assembly been disturbed, but the original institution, so emphatically alluded to in z. 16—22, of partaking in one and the same loaf, one and the same cup, was rendered impossible. The practice mentioned by Irenaus (Fragm. Venice ed. vol. it. in p. 10), of offering part of the bread and vine as oblations, was probably a vestige of the original Christian practice of placing all the food that was brought on the common public table, and then partaking of it—a practice here urged by the Apostle, in opposition to the heathen custom of the Corinthians.

¹ See Boeckh's Public Economy of Athens, i. 264.

² See the remarks of Mr. Blakesley, in his 'Prælectio Academica in Scholis Cantabrigiensibus habita,'

DISPUTES IN THE PUBLIC ASSEMBLIES, AND ESPECIALLY AT THE LOND'S SUPPER.

¹⁸Εἰ δέ τις δοκεί φλιδυκικος εἶναι, ἡμεῖς τοιαίτην στωθίθεἰα οὐκ ἔχομεν, οὐδὲ αἰ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ θεοῦ. ¹⁷ τοῦτο δὲ παραγγέλλω, 'οὐκ ἐπαινῶν ὅτι οὐκ εἰς τὸ κρείστου ἀλλ' εἰς τὸ ἦστον στικέρχεστθε. ¹⁸πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ στικερχομένων ὑμῶν ἐν· ἐκκλησία ἀκούω σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῦν ὑπαρχευ, καὶ μέρος τι πιστείω. ¹⁹δεὶ γὰρ καὶ αἰρότεις ἐν ὑμῦν εἰναι, ὑα

• παραγγέλλων οδικ έπαινώ . . . κρείττον . . . ήττον. b èν τῆ.

16 *Now if any man seem to be contentious, so have no such Teustom, neither the churches of God. Now 'this I declare, not praising you' that ye come together not for the better libut for the worse. For first of all when ye come together in the church I hear that there be divisions among you; and 11 partly believe it. For there must be 'zects among you,

16, 17. These verses may be referred either to the preceding or to the following context. The latter seems preferable, as the word φιλενεων points rather to party strife, such as that in verse 18 and in i. 12; and with this agrees the reading of veiro 28 many γλλω ωία feruver, Λ.Β.C. Terrang, C.P. B. E. J. X. D. vapper, γλλω, see izrawing, D. — This precept against discord I give, not praising you in this respect.

obs lπairw refers apparently to the words in verse 2,—' I praise you generally, but not for this.' συνέρχεσθε refers to their meetings generally.

κρείσσον and ησσον (both probably pronounced at this time, as in Romaic, with the same sound of the Italian i) are apparently put in juxtaposition, for the sake of the play on the sound. Comp. the-repetition of παρὰ in verse 23.

The rejection of span in Verse 2.5.

18. It would seem from the control of the stress haid upon the divisions in verses 16.—19, that he had intended to speak at length of them here, but had been interrupted by his wish to proceed at conce to the question of the Lord's Supper, and either did not resume it at all, leaving it amongst the same of the control of the co it in a different form in xii. 1. μέρος τι, i. e. (not merely 'in part,' but) 'in great part.' See Thuevd. i. 23, vii. 30.

έν ἐκκλησία, 'in public assemblies;' the article omitted as in English 'when you meet in assembly,' i. e. 'assembly-wise.'

19. αἰρέσεις. The context shows

[*καί] οἱ δόκιμοι φανεροὶ γένωνται ἐν ὑμῶν. ²⁰συνερχομένων οδν ὑμῶν ἐπὶ τὸ αἰτὸ οὐκ ἐστιν κυριακον δείπνον φαγεὐ·· καὶ τος και τὸ ἰδιον δείπνον προλαμβάνει ἐν τῷ φαγεῦν, καὶ δς μὲν πεινῆ, δς δὰ μεθύει. ²² μη γὰρ οἰκίας οὐκ ἐχετε

Om. zel.

that they which are approved may be made manifest among 20 you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this zi is not to eat the Lord's supper; for in eating every one taketh before other his own supper, and one is hungry, and 22 another is drunken. What! have ye not houses to eat and

'Heresies' that this is merely an aggravated form of σχίσματα. 'I believe that there

σχίσματα. 'I believe that there are divisions amongst you; for there must even (καl) be seets, in order to test those who are really good, and who rise above them.' The word 'party' or 'sect' expresses both the more neutral sense in which it is usually employed (Acts v. 17, xv. 5, xxiv. 5, 4, xxviii, 22), and the darker sense in which it occurs here, and in Gal. v. 20;

2 Pet. ii. 1. Justin Martyr (Dial. cum Tryph. 35) attributes the words ἐσονται σχίσματα καὶ αἰρίσεις to Christ. γάρ expresses the reason (not for the Apostle's belief, but, for the fact. 'There are divisions, for it is a part of God's providence that there must be.' Compare Matt. xviii. 7, 'offences must needs come.'

ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ=ἄμα, 'at the same place and time.' Comp. Acts i. 15, ii. 44, iii. 1.

ove ieriu, e. r. \(\). 'In your meetings there is no such himp as eating the Lord's Supper; for it is rather the case their cach takes his own super before another, as he eats; and the consequence is, that whilst one has not been able to partake of the bread at all, another has even drunk to intoxication the wine reserved for the end of the feast.'

κυριακόν δεῖπνον. Though the epithet is here used in contradistinction to τἔουν, yet the adjectival form, as in κυριακή ημέρα (Rev. i. 10), indicates that it was already the fixed name of the institution.

stitution.
21. ἐν τῷ φαγεῖν is 'in the meal.' For its position at the end of the sentence, comp. viii.

11, ix. 10, xv. 19.

The phrase 'takes before another,' implies that each man belepd himself; that there was nothing corresponding to what in later times is called 'an administration of the supper.' Compare the expression 'the Dead which we break,' in x. 16.

Terulian, De Coron. Mil. 8, speaks of this as the original practice, and notices the change in his own time.

ος μέν, 'the poor man,' ος δέ 'the rich man.' μεθύει. The use of this word in John ii. 10, shows that it need not be always taken of intoxication; but this is its natural meaning in most passages. See Matt. xxiv. 49; Acts ii. 15; 1 Thess. v. 7.

22, 23. μη γὰρ οἰκίας οὐκ ἔχετε; 'Why surely ye are not without houses!' els το ἐσθίευ καὶ πίνεω; ἡ τῆς ἐκκλησίας τοῦ θεοῦ καταφρονείτε, καὶ καταισχώνετε τοὺς μὴ ἔχουτας; τὰ ἔἰπω ὑμῦ; ἐἐπαινῶ ὑμᾶς ἐν τούτω; οὺκ ἐπαινῶ. ¾ ἔγὸ ἡ κης παρελαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ κυρίου δ καὶ παρέδωκα ὑμῦ, ὅτι ὁ κύριος Ἰησοῦς

Τί δμών είπω;
 ἐπαινέσω ὁμᾶς; Ἐν τούτφ οὐκ ἐναινῶ.

to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? What 'am I to' say to you? 'do I praise you sin this? I praise you not. For I received of the Lord that which also I 'commanded you, that the Lord Jesus τῆς ἐκκλησίας τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'the whole assembly, which you thus divide and distract, and yet in which God dwells.' Comp. x. 32, where the phrase is also used with regard to the public assemblage for the Eucharist. καταισχύνετε, i. e. 'by making their poverty apparent.'

τους μη έχοντας, 'the poor.' Compare Luke iii, 11.

ri érus; 'what am I to say '' alluding, as in verse 17, to verse 2. 'However much you think yourselves descring of praise for having kept my commands (παραδάσεις), you have not done so; for my communication from the Lord, which I commanded (παρέωσω) to you, was quite otherwise.'

έγὼ, in contradistinction to their practice—'I, whatever you may have done or thought.' παρέλαδον ἀπὸ τοῦ κυρίου. The word wapé, rather than aré, would have been most natural; but árè may have been chosen here to avoid the triple repetition of rapé. The use of the words wapé.Acop and wapé?ava, as in xv. 3, is against his derivation of the fact from inmediate revelation. But the introduction of the phrase 'from Lord' natural repeats of the continued to him by he had had confirmed to him by revelation, what he already knew as a fact.

23-27. The ensuing verses form probably the earliest record of the institution of the Eucharist, and they contain also the earliest recorded speech of our Lord. Twenty years, Words of indeed, had elapsed the instisince their utterance; tution of the but there can be no Eucharist. doubt that the Apostle regarded them as perfectly authentic. To explain them at any length, or to adjust their relation to the other three versions in St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Luke, would be to encroach on questions belonging only to the Gospel parrative; yet those who are familiar with those questions will abserve: (1) That their almost exact coincidence with the account in St. Luke is important, as confirming the tradition of the author of that Gosnel being the same as the companion of St. Paul. (2) That in this, the most ancient record of certainly one of the most important speeches of our Lord, it is possible to discern elements of the discourses in St. John's Gospel, viz. vi. 35-58, xv. 1-6. (8) That even in the four extant versions of this short passage, there are yet verbal variations of such an extent as to έν τῆ νυκτὶ ἦ παρεδίδετο ἔλαβεν ἄρτου ²⁴καὶ εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασεν καὶ εἶπεν ἙΤοῦτό μου ἐστὶν τὸ σῶμα τὸ ὑπέρ ὑμων [°] τοῦτο ποιεῖτε εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησω. ²⁵ὧσαύτως καὶ τὸ

* ταρεδίδοτο.
* Add Λάδετε, φάγετε.
* Add κλώμενον.

24 the same night in which He was betrayed took bread and when He had given thanks He brake and said % this is my body, which is % for you: this do in remembrance of Me.'

show that it was the substance, rather than the exact words, which the Apostle and the Evan-gelista nimed at producing, eglista of a find at producing, of a familiar and fixed formula, especially in the opening words. (5) That it implies on the part of his heavers a full alequantaneous and Passion, as, indeed, the Apostle himself implies in the phrase 5 cd rappits, on, and also in the previous allusions to the words of the institution, in x 16.

The word aquilibra in the sense of 'betrapa' is curious, as following on aquilibra, in the sense of 'communicated;' but its frequent occurrence in the sense of 'communicated;' but its frequent occurrence in the sense here. Comp. a like variation of meaning in 2 Cor. ii. 7, 8, aquilibra, aqui

24. τὸ σώμα τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν (A. B. Cl.), ἐλώμινον (C. D.) Ε. F. (G. J. K.), ἐνωμινον (C. D.) Ε. F. (G. J. K.), ἐνωμινον (G. D.) Both from authority, and from its abrupt simplicity, τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμωρὶ is the probable reading,—'this is my body which is for you.'
If so, ἐλώμειον was omitted because of the Apostle's strong sense of the ideal or spiritual nature of the Lord's body, as so fully expressed in x. 16, 17. The omission may also have arisen from a fear lest it should contradict John xiv. 36, 'A bone of him shall not be broken;" for which same reason, θρυπτόμενον ('bruised') was probably substituted in D. If κλώμενον be genuine, it is used in reference to the breaking of the bread, and hence the present tense (comp. ον κλώμεν, x. 16). The word κλώμενος is, however, applied in Josephus B. J. ii. 12, to the breaking and distorting of the body by torture.

röbro ποιείτε, 'this do,'—applied both to the bread and the cup—must refer to the 'thanksgiving' just described (είχαριστήσας): 'Give thanks to God in remembrance of Me, in all your meals.'

The phrase, 'the cup when

He had supped, here, and in Juke xxii 20, 'The cup is the more remarkable, after and in Luke separal descause the general description of the Gospel narrative would lead us to suppose that the breaking of the bread as well as the blessing of the cup succeeded the series of the cup that the commence of the cup that the two implies that the bread was blessed at the commencent, and the cup at the end, of the supper. That the cup closed ποτήριον μετὰ τὸ δειπνήσαι, λέγων Τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον ἡ καινή διαθήκη ἐστὰν ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ αἴματι: τοῦτο ποιεῖτε, ὁσάκις 'ἐὰν πίνητε, εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησω. ³⁶ δσάκις γὰρ 'ἐλο ἐσθίητε τὸν ἄρτον τοῦτον καὶ τὸ ποτήριου' πίνητε, τὸν θάνα-ă», β Add τοῦτο.

25 After the same manner also the cup when He had supped, saying 'this cup is the new 'covenant, in my blood: this do 26 ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of Me.' For as often as ye eat this bread and drink 'the cup, ye 'proclaim the the meal agrees with the blessing of the cup after the Paschal feast, like a 'grace' at the end, as the blessing of the bread had been like a 'grace' at the beginning (see Mishna, Pesachim, cap. x. 7).

iν τω έμω αίματι, 'in My blood.' This form, peculiar to this passage and Luke xxii. 20, seems to mean: 'This cup is the new covenant signed or written in my blood,' with a double allusion to the libations which accompanied every an interest the mean 'treaty' or 'trace'); and also to the blood either of mean' freaty' or 'trace'); and also to the blood either of secrification of an in Arabian customer of the mean's treaty. Compare Heb. iz, 15—20.

'The new covenant,' as distinct from the Mosaic. See Ex. xxiv. 8: 'Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you.' For this use of iν τῷ σίματ, compare 'Whom God "set forth' "(προίθτο) a propitiation, through faith, in his blood' (iν not εἰτ), Rom. iii. 25.

26. ὑσάκις γὰρ ἰὰν ἰσθίητε, κ.τ.λ. This verse contains, strictly speaking, not the words of our Lord, but of St. Paul. But the two are allowed to run into each other, so that it cannot exactly be defined where one ends and the other begins. Compare parallel instances in John iii. 16—21, and 31—36. These words are complatically as often introduced, in order to an year's indicate the continuance and identity of the original meal through its subsequent celebrations: not only on that one sines. There may also be the further object of showing that in the original institution, the intention was that they should commencents the Lord's death, the state of the should commencents the Lord's death, and the should commence the Lord's death, and the should commence the Lord's death, and the should be sh they ate bread and drank wine.'

Two characteristics of the Eucharist are here given:
(1) ασαγγάλλατε. 'You preach,' or 'announce,' Lord's
according to the condeath,' stant usage of the word

(ii. 1, ix. 14, Acts passim),
'The Lord's Supper is a living sermon; an acted discourse.
(2) It was intended to supply, y a visible memorial, the absence of the Lord, 'untill He come,' the sense He come,' being brought out more strongly by the near expectation

τον τοῦ κυρίου καταγγελλετε, ἄχρις οῦ ελθη. 27 ἄστε δς ὰν ἐσθής τὸν ἄρτον ἡ πίνη τὸ ποτηριον τοῦ κυρίου ἀναξίως, ἐνοχος ἐσται τοῦ σώματος καὶ ετοῦ αἰματος τοῦ κυρίου. Εδοκιμαξένα δὲ ἀνθρωπος ἐαυτόν, καὶ οἴτως ἐκ τοῦ ἀρτου

* Aild av. * Add τούτον. * Om. τοῦ,

27 Lord's death till He come. Wherefore whosoever reats "the bread for drinks "the cup of the Lord unworthily, "will be 28 guilty of the body and "the blood of the Lord. But let a man prove himself, and so let him eat of "the bread and drink of

of His return. Comp. Matt. xxvi. 29.

Both points are well expressed by Bengel: 'Hee memoria est intima et vividissima, ut est intima et vividissima, ut est liberorum erga parentes, sponsas vel conjugis erga maritum, frattis erga frattem, cum fide, amore, desiderio, spe, gaudio, obsequio conjuncia, summan statta Christopia et al. (1998) est liberorum en discipita est liberorum est liberoru

27. This is the conclusion: 'Therefore he who partakes of this feast unworthily, is guilty of a sin against the body and blood of Christ.' As in x. 16, he had referred to the original words of Christ to show of tohat they partook; so here he refers to the same words, to show against that they sinned. As vorthip; wand As worthip; who we worthip; who we have been all the Syen, and in viii. 12, that indifferent was a sine summative to mancher's welfare was a sine summative, as here he shows that to Christian meal in a manner of the Christian here in a manner offered against the majesty of what Christ had Himself called His body and His blood.

ή πίνη, 'or drink' (B. C. D.

E. F. G. J. K., Vulgate, Italic and Syriac versions), is the true reading, 'Or drink.'

is the true reading, 'Or drink.'
'Whoever partakes of either part of the feast unworthily,' implying, like the words 'after supper,' in verse 25, that, in his conception of the supper, the bread and the cup were not, as now, inseparably united; but that the cup succeeded the bread after a long interval; and that therefore a profanation which might apply to one, would not of necessity apply to the other. Probably from the wish to accommodate the text to the change of custom, or from hostility to the Roman Catholic practice of administering the bread without the cup, the English translators have unwarrantably rendered #, 'and.' rai for # occurs only in A. and in 3 cursive MSS. ένοχος is usually followed by a dative; but in the New Testament more frequently, as here, by a genitive. It is used of the numialment incurred by guilt (as in Matt. xxvi. 66; Mark xiv. 64; Heb. ii. 15), of the law infringed by guilt (James ii. 10), and of the tribunal which awards the punishment (Matt. v. 21, 22). The present case presents a mixture of the two last uses.

28, 29. ἄνθρωπος, see on iv. 2.
 In this and the following verses, έσθιέτω καὶ έκ τοῦ ποτηρίου πινέτω. 29 ὁ γὰρ ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων κρίμα ξαυτώ ξσθίει καὶ πίνει, μὴ διακρίνων τὸ σώμα. b Add τοῦ Kuplou. · Add doubles.

29 the cup: for he that eateth and drinketh and eateth and drinketh "judgment to himself, "if he do not "discern' the "> body.

" Or judge.

the phrases, δοκιμαζέτω ξαυτόν. ζιακρίνων τὸ σῶμα, διεκρίνομεν έαυ-Discern- roug, appear to express ing the the same act; whilst the consequences of the omission of this act are expressed by κρίμα ἐσθίει, and ἐκρινόμεθα. διακρένω is used in this passage for the sake of the play upon κρίνω, 'to judge' (see verses 17 and 23); but in itself it never means 'to judge' in the sense of 'condemning,' but, as here, only in the sense of 'distinguishing ' or 'discerning. (Comp. xiv. 29, where it is used of the distinguishing of true from false prophets.) The sense, from false prophets.) The sense, therefore, will be: 'Let every one examine the state of his heart and mind, i. e., to see whether he is likely to be guilty of the profanation here condenned; for, if he does not so examine himself, if he does not discern that the body of the Lord is in himself, and in the Christian society, if he does not discern in the united loaf the likeness of the united Christian society. then heavy judgments will follow.' This is harsh; but not more so than other explanations, and it has the advantage of giving a uniform sense to diakpive throughout, and of agreeing with the Apostle's final conclusion in verse 34. 'The body of Christ, here as elsewhere in the Apostle's language (see the Introduction to x. 16), is not the literal frame of the Lord, but the body which He has left behind Him on earth, in the human race-the Christian society, or its members severally. This general truth is here, as in x, 17, and in the passages there quoted from the Fathers and the Liturgy, stated in regard to the Eucharist, as if St. Paul saw in our Lord's words, 'This is my body,' a declaration that the bread or loaf which He broke was the symbol of the spiritual Body, composed of the many grains of Christian souls, combined in one unbroken mass-If this truth were recognised, then the Lord's Supper would be properly celebrated; but, if Christians regarded themselves as having no connexion with their brethren, the Supper would be profaned, and turned into a common meal. This meaning is strengthened by the true reading of A. B. C1. omitting TOU KUPIOU. which is found in C3. D. E. F. G. J. K. Had the Apostle meant to say that 'the body' spoken of was in any peculiar sense the personal body of Christ, he would not have left it thus ambiguous, but would have added the words of 'the Lord Jesus,' or expres-sions to that effect. As the text stands, though he doubtless refers back to 'the body of the Lord,' in verse 27, the phrase is so generally expressed as to leave to his readers the application to themselves or to the whole society. This is also the probable reason for the omission of all reference to ³⁰διά τοῦτο & ὑμῶν πολλοὶ ἀσθενιξι καὶ ἄβρωστοι, καὶ κοιμῶνται ἰκανοί. ³¹ εἰ 'δὲ ἐαντοὺς διεκρώνομεν, οὐν ἄν ἐκριφελα. ³² κοι ὑμο ἀν ἀν ἐκριφελα. ³² κοι ἀν ἀν ἐκριφελα. ³³ κοτις ἀδολροί μου, συνερχάμους εἰς τὸ ἀραγια ἀλληλονι ἐκόζεγοθε. ³¹ "τις πεικά, ἐν οἰκφ ἀσθέτα, ὑτα μη ἐς κρίμα συνέρχησθε. τὰ ἐλ λοιπὰ ἀς ὰν ἐλθω διαπάδομα.

b al δέ τες.

so For this cause many 'among you are weak and sickly', and at some sleep. 'But if we would 'discern' ourseleer, we should anot be 'judged' but when we are judged' we are chastened by the Lord, that we should not be 'judged to condemnation' swith the world. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come to sayether to cat tarry one for another. 'a' If any 'one hunger, let him cat at home, that ye come not together unto 'judgment.

And the rest will I set in order "whenever I come.

Or judge.

the 'cup' and 'the blood.' And thus the translation of the Æthiopic Version, 'if his soul be not pure,' though not an exact version of the words μ) διακρίτων τὸ σώμα, truly represents their spirit. ἀναίως, 'unworthily,' though expressing the sense more clearly, is superfluous, and rests only on the authority of C3. D. E. F. G.

30. In the sicknesses and deaths which prevailed at Corinth the Apostle calls upon the Cornthians to winess the judg-Cornthians to winess the judg-the Supper. The Supper the Su άρρωστοι, a stronger word than ασθενείς.

31. 'If we were in the habit of discerning our own condition rightly, we should not be incurring these judgments from God. This is the force of the imperfect tenses. Comp. Gal. i. 10; Heb. viii. 4; Luke vii. 39; xvii. 9. For the general meaning see note on verses 28, 29.

The position of 'ourselves' (ἐσυτοὺς) makes it emphatic.

It is impossible in English to preserve the play on the words διεκρίνομεν, έκρινόμεθα, and κατακοιθώμεν.

32. κρίνω is here represented as a middle stage between διακρίνω and κατακρίνω. For the contrast of κρίνω and κατακρίνω.
compare χρώμενοι and καταγρίωμετος vii. 31; έχοντες and κατέκοντες 2 Cor. vi. 10. For the general idea, compare v. 5; 1 Tim. i. 20: παρέθωκα τῷ συατῆς έτα παθένθενοι μῷ βλασφημέν.

33. ἐκδέχασθε, 'wait for the arrival of the poorer brethren,' as in xvi. 11. Compare verse 21. This is the practical conclusion of the whole subject.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, XI, 16-34.

I now proceed, in the second place, to condemn the party spirit and divisions which prevail in your public assemblies; which must indeed be expected, because it is necessary that the good should be thereby tested; but of this hereafter. One of the most fatal instances of these divisions is that between the rich and poor, which takes place at the meal where you celebrate the Last Supper of the Lord. You remember the account of its original institution as I communicated it to you from Christ Himself; you remember how He called the bread His body, and the cup the covenant sealed by His blood; and how He spoke of it as continuing for a memorial of His death until His return. Every unworthy celebration of this meal, therefore, is a sin against His body and blood. His body is the whole Christian Society; it is in yourselves, if you will but look for it there. To partake of the supper without this consciousness of solemn communion with Him and with each other, is to provoke those judgments of sickness and death which have in fact been so frequent amongst you. To judge ourselves is the only way of avoiding the judgment of the Lord, whose institution we else profane; as His judgment by these outward misfortunes is the only way to save us from that heavier judgment which awaits the unbelieving world, Therefore, to sum up the matter practically, remember that in these feasts you must wait for each other; and those who come merely for the sake of eating and drinking, had better take their meals privately at home.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Ir has been truly said, though with some exaggeration, that for many centuries the history of the Eucharist might be considered as a history of the Christian Church. And certainly this passage may be regarded as occupying in that history a noint of remarkable significance. On the one hand, it shows us the most sacred ordinance of the Christian religion as it was celebrated by those in whose minds the earthly and Celebrathe heavenly, the social and the religious aspect of life tion of the Encharist as a social were not yet divided asunder. We see the banquet spread in the late evening, after the sun had set behind the western ridge of the hills of Achaia; we see the many torches blazing, as at Troas, to light up the darkness of the 'upper room,' where, as was their want, the Christian community assembled; we see the couches laid and the walls hung,2 after the manner of the East, as on the night of the betraval : we see the sacred loaves,3 each representing, in its compact unity, the harmony of the whole society; we hear the blessing or thanksgiving on the cup, responded to by the thunder of the joint 'Amen;' we witness the complete realisation in outward form of the Apostle's words, suggested doubtless by the sight of the meal and the sacrament blended thus together. 'Whether ue eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, do all to the glory of God.'5 'Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him.'6 Perhaps the nearest likeness now existing to this union of social intercourse with religious worship, is to be found in the services of the Coptic Church. The Eucharist is there indeed even more divested of its character of a supper, than in the Western Churches. But there is an air of primitive freedom, and of innocent enjoyment, blended with the prayers of the general service, which, bearing as it does the marks of

This is one side of the picture; but there is another side, which imparts to this passage its peculiar interest. Already Disorders attendant the difficulties of bringing an ideal and an actual life on this together make themselves felt. As the falsehoods of mode of celebra-Ananias and Sapphira profaned the community of tion: and property at Jerusalem, so the excesses and disorders the Arosof the Corinthian Christians profaned the primitive tle's remedy. celebration of the Eucharist. The time was come, when the secular and the spiritual had to be disentangled one 6 Col. iii. 17.

long antiquity, conveys a livelier image of the early Christian assemblies than anything which can be seen in Europe.7

¹ λαμπάζες ικαναί, Acts xx. 8.

² araytiov istrupivor, Matt. xiv.

¹ Cor. x. 17, xi. 29. 4 xiv. 16.

⁵ x. 31.

Such at least was the impression.

I derived from the one occasion on which I witnessed the worship of the Copts in their cathedral at Cairo.

from the other; the 'simplicity' and 'gladness' of the first Anostolical communion was gradually to retire before the Anostolical rebuke. The question arose whether the majesty, the tenderness, the awe of the feast should be lost in a senseless orgy: and it is (humanly speaking) by means of this verdict of the Apostle against the Corinthian Church, that the form of the primitive practice was altered, in order to save the spirit of the original institution. It is of the more importance to remember the extent of the danger to which the celebration of the Eucharist was then exposed, because a great part of its subsequent history would seem to be a reaction, in part just, in part exaggerated, against the corruption which then threatened it: a reaction encouraged by the extreme severity with which that corruption is denounced by the Apostle, and which was itself called forth by the greatness of the crisis. By the beginning of the second century, 'The Lord's Supper' had Gradual ceased to be a 'supper,' 1 and was celebrated by day, change in although in some Egyptian cities the practice of par- the mode of celebrataking of it on the evenings of Saturday still con-tion. tinued in the fourth century.2 Instead of the practice, according to which every member of the congregation took of the elements himself, after the time of Tertullian 3 the administration was confined to the chief minister. The social meal was divided from it under the name of 'Agape,' or 'Love-feast,' but still continued to be celebrated within the walls of churches as late as the fifth century, after which it disappears, having been already condemned by councils on account of abuses similar to those here described at Corinth.4 The daily celebration as recorded in the Acts had already ccased, if not before, at least in the second century, when it was usually confined to Sundays and festivals.5 Thus the Eucharist became more and more set apart as a distinct sacred ordinance; it withdrew more and more from the possibility of the Corinthian desecration, till at last it was wrapt up in the awful mystery which has attached to it, in the highest degree, in the Churches of the East, but in some degree in the Churches of the West also, both

¹ Plin. Ep. x. 97. ² Sozomen, A. E. vii. 19. Tert. De Cor. Mil. S.

Bingham's Antiquities, book xv. ch. 7

⁵ The subsequent revival of the daily celebration in the fourth century is probably to be ascribed, not to a restoration of the primitive feeling, but to the increasing importance attached to a physical participation in the consecrated elements

Protestant and Roman Catholic Beginning under the simple name of 'the breaking of bread,' and known from this Epish by the social and almost festive appellations of the 'Communion,' and 'the Lord's Supper,'—th first receives in Pliny the name of 'Sacramentum,' and in Justin Martyr that of 'Eucharistia;' both, indeed, indicating ideas of strictly Apostolical torgin, though more closely connected with the words, and less with the act, than would have been the case in the first Apostolical times; till in the days of Chrysostom it presents itself to us under the formidable name of the 'Dreadful Sacrifice.'

A study of the two views as now set forth side by side, will probably lead to the conclusion that as, on the one hand, the general view of the Apostolical practice, its simplicity, and its festivity, have been in later times too much un-Lessons to be derived derrated; so, on the other hand, the severity of from the his denunciation against unworthy partakers has spirit of the primi- been too generally and too rigorously enforced: tive cele- because the particular object, and the particular bration, need of his rebuke at that time, have not been clearly understood. The Holy Communion can never be again exactly what it was then; and, therefore, although his words will always impart to the great ordinance of Christian worship a peculiar solemnity, yet the real lesson which they convey relates now more directly to such general occasions as that out of which his warning grew, than to the ordinance itself. The joy and almost merriment of the first Christian converts after the day of Pentecost could not now be applied to the Eucharist as it was then, without fear of great profancness and levity. But the record of it implies that with a serious and religious life generally there is nothing incompatible in the free play of cheerful and innocent gaiety. In like manner, although we cannot without superstition imagine that the judgments which the Apostle denounced will fall on a desecration of the Communion different in all its circumstances from that which occurred at Corinth, yet there may and of the still be an irreverence towards sacred things, a want Apostle's of brotherly kindness, a dullness in discerning the presence of Christ, even in our common meals, which may make us fear 'lest we eat and drink condemnation to ourselves.' And in the Communion itself the Apostle's words are instructive as reminding us that 'the body of the Lord, to which he looked, was, as elsewhere in his writings, so here, 'the body' which is represented by the whole Christian society. It is an application of our Lord's words, not the meaning of those words themselves: but still it is an application doubly appropriate, first because it represents the unity and community of interests, feelings, and affections, which the Lord's Supper, both in its institution and in its continuance was designed to produce; and, secondly, because that very unity of the body of Christ's disciples is one chief purpose, constantly attributed in the Goopels and Epistles to the Death of Christ, which the Lord's Supper was specially designed to show forth.

ANSWERS OF ST. PAUL (CONTINUED).

Unity and Variety of the Spiritual Gifts.

XII. 1-30.

ONE of the chief characteristics of the Apostolical age was the nossession of what are here called 'spiritual gifts,' the signs that there was moving to and fro in the Church a mighty rushing wind, a spirit of life, and freedom, and energy, which stirred the dry bones of the world, and made those who felt its influence conscious that they were alive, though all around was dead. Before this consciousness of a higher power than their own, the ordinary and natural faculties of the human mind seemed to retire, to make way for loftier aspirations, more immediate intimations of the Divine will, more visible manifestations of the Divine power. Every believer, male or female, old or young, free or slave, found himself instinct with this new life, varying in degree and according to the strength of his natural character, but still sufficiently powerful to be a constant witness to him of the reality of the new faith which it had accompanied. It resembled in some degree the inspirations of the Jewish Judges, Psalmists, and Prophets: it may he illustrated by the ecstasies and visions of prophets and dreamers in all religions; but in its energy and universality, it was peculiar to the Christian society of the Apostolical age,

It may easily be conceived that this new life was liable to much confusion and excitement, especially in a society where the principle of moral stability was not developed commensurately with it. Such was, we know, the state of Corinth. They had, on the one hand, been 'in everything enriched by Christ, in all utterance, and in all knowledge,' coming behind in no gift '(i. 5, 6, 7); but, on the other hand, the same contentious spirit which had turned the most sacred names into party watchwords, and profanced the eelebration of the Supper of the Lord, was ready to avail itself of the openings for vanity and ambition afforded by the distinctions of the different gifts. Accordingly, various disorders arose; every one thought of himself, and no one of his neighbour's good; and as a natural were most useful, but which were most astonishing. Amongst these the gift of tongues rose pre-eminent, as being in itself the most expressive of the new spiritual life; the very words, 'spiritual gifts,' spiritual man' (πνευματικά, xiv, 1; πνευματιros, xiv. 37), seem, in common parlance, to have been exclusively appropriated to it; and the other gifts, especially that of prophecy, were despised as hardly proceeding from the same Divine source. To combat this particular exemplification of the factious and disorderly spirit which he had noticed in xi, 16-19, the Apostle proceeds to show: (a) That all the gifts, which were bestowed upon the Church, equally proceeded from the Spirit (xii. 1-30). (b) That Love was to be their guide in all things (xii, 31-xiii, 13), (c) That thereforc the most useful were also the most exalted gifts (xiv. 1-25); and (d) That order was to prevail throughout (xiv. 26-40).

ΧΙΙ. 1 Περί δὲ τῶν πνευματικῶν, ἀδελφοί, οὐ θέλω ὑμᾶς αγνοείν. ²οίδατε ότι [ότε] έθνη ήτε, πρὸς τὰ είδωλα τὰ

Now concerning the spiritual gifts, brethren, I would 2 not have you ignorant. Ye know that awhen ye were

ΧΙΙ. 1. Περί δὲ τῶν πνευματικῶν. The construction is the same as in vii. 1, 25, viii. 1. πνευματικών is probably neuter, as in the parallel constructions of vii. 1, viii. 1, and as in the use of the word in ix. 11, xiv. 1.

ού θέλω, 'I would not have you ignorant,' as in x. 1, xii. 1.

2, 3. The stress in these two verses is laid on the last clause, and the argument would probably be rendered clearer by a greater use of particles, as if it were more μέν έθνη ήτε, . . . νον δέ πιστεύοντες. ' Ανάθεμα' μέν ' Ίησους ούζεις . . . λαλών λέγει, 'Κύριος' δε ' Ιπσούς ' οὐδείς λέγει εί μη έν πνεύματι άγίω.

The argument is: 'You maintain that the influence of the Spirit is confined to its most striking manifestations. But you know that, by the mere fact of your conversion, you passed from a state where all was dead and dumb, to a state of life and conscious speech. Such being the contrast of your former and your present state (ĉiò), I remind you (γνωρίζω, compare xv. 1), that as certainly as no true prophet or speaker with tongues (έν πνεύματι θεού λαλών, compare xiv. 2) can utter the words which renounce the Name of Jesus, so the words by which we acknowledge His sovereignty, and thereby pass from heathenism to Christianity, simple as they sound, are gifts of the Holy Spirit, no less than those more remarkable gifts which usually claim to them-selves the name.'

2. στι στε, A. C. D. E. J.; στι, B. F. G. If ore is kept, the construction is an anacoluthon.

Two things are expressed by this verse : (1) The dead 'Dumb silence of the state of idols." heathenism, the 'idols' or images standing 'dumb,' 'voiceless' (apwa), with neither mouths to speak, nor ears to hear, silent amongst their silent worshippers: 'The oracles are dumb.' is contrasted with the music and speech of Christianity, 'the sound as of a mighty rushing wind '(Acts ii. 2), 'the voice of many waters,' which resounded through the whole Church in the universal diffusion of those gifts of which he was here especially speaking - prophesying, and, above all, of the gift of tongues. (2) The unconscious irrational state of heathenism. in which the worshippers were blindly hurried away by some overruling power of 'Even fate, or evil spirit of as ye were led. divination, or priestly caste, without any will or reason of their own (απαγόμενοι ως αν ήγεσθε), to worship at the άφωνα ώς ὰν ἦγεσθε ἀπαγόμενοι. δδιο γνωρίζω ὑμῶν ὅτι οὐδεὶς ἐν πνεύματι θεοῦ λαλῶν λέγει ᾿Ανάθεμα ˚ Ἰησοῦς, καὶ οὐδεὶς δύντατα εἰπευ "Κυρος Ἰησοῦς, εἰ μη ἐν πνεύματι ἀγίω, 'διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων εἰσύν, το δὲ αὐτο πνεῦμα ' ὅκαὶ κύριον 'Ιησοῦν.

Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols even as ye were sled . . Wherefore I 'make known to you' that no 'one speaking by the Spirit of God 'saith 'Cursed is Jesus': and no 'one can say ''The Lord Jesus,' but by the Holy 'Spirit,' 'Abow there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit;

shrines of these inanimate idols. This is contrasted with the consciousness of an in-dwelling Spirit, moving in harmony Spirit, moving in harmony that their spirits, and controlled by a sense of order and wisdom. Possibly in these words there was the further intention of impressing upon them the superiority of the conscious over the unconscious gifts of the Spirit.

unconscious gifts of the Spirit. 3. The words 'Ανάθεμα 'Ιησούς Jesus and Kipuos Ingous (accordanathe- ing to the reading of A. B. C., which produces a much livelier sense), were probably well known forms of speech. ' Jesus is accursed,' would be the test of renouncing Christianity, cither before the Roman tribunal (compare 'maledicere Christo,' in Plin. Ep. x. 97), or in the Jewish synagogue; probably the latter, if one may judge from the word 'Anathema.' 'Jesus is the Lord,' would be the form the Lord. of professing allegiance to Christ at baptism. as 'He commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord,' 'they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, Acts x. 48, xix. 5. For a similar formula applied to attest the presence or absence of the Spirit, compare 1 John iv. 2, 3.

If there be any difference intended between the 'Spirit of God' and the 'Holy Spirit,' it is that the first is a more general expression, the latter confined to the Spirit as animating the hearts of Christians.

4-6. The connexion is: 'If every utterance of a Christian is inspired by the Holy Ghost, then we must allow that a vast variety of gifts may all proceed from the same Spirit,—a vast variety of services exist under the same Master, whose sovereignty of services exist under the same Spirit,—a vast variety of effects of the Spirit,—a vast variety of except proceed from the same God, who acts by that Spirit,—a vast variety of effects proceed from the same God, who acts by that Spirit.

acts by that Spirit.' δέ is not 'but,' as in opposition to what has been said, but 'now,' as something said in addition. The first clause alone is essential. as depending directly on the previous assertion with regard to the Holy Spirit; the second is suggested by the words 'Jesus is the Lord;' the third, by the words the Spirit of God. But, although suggested in the first instance by the immediate context, the threefold division also refers to the distinction of the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, elsewhere either expressly or by implication brought forward in the New Testament. The three parts of the sentence are reδιαιρέσεις διακουιών εἰσύν, καὶ δι αἰτὸς κήριος "καὶ διαιρέσεις ἐικργημάτων εἰσύν, δὰ αἰτὸς" (λὸς δ ἐνεργῶν τὰ πάιτα το πάου το ἐιστος διος διαθομός τοῦ πενέματος πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον. "ὁ μέν γὰρ διὰ τοῦ πενέματος δίδοται κόγος σσόμας, αλλω φὰ λόγος γυώτεις κατὰ τὸ αἰτὸ πενέματος δίδοται τοῦ κόγος σσόμας, αλλω φὰ λόγος γυώτεις κατὰ τὸ αἰτὸ πενέμας.

* alitás fota

and there are diversities of "ministries, fand the same Lord; and there are diversities of workings, but it is the same (fold who worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit to "each not' is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the yourd of knowledge "according to the same Spirit; to another word of knowledge "according to the same Spirit; to another spectively different phases of the same idea,- gifts, services, effects,- the Spirit, the Lord, God.' The gifts are spoken of primarily as proceeding from the Spirit, because they are regarded as its most direct manifestations; what is sometimes called receiving 'the gifts of the Spirit' is in other passages called receiving 'the Spirit.' (See Acts x. 44, 45, 47; Gal. iii. 2, 5; Acts viii. 17, 18.) Then, viewed as instruments in the hands of a higher power, the modes of their employment are considered as services (deagovini) rendered to Christ the Lord and Master of all believers. Lastly, in their effects (Evenyhματα) on the world, they are considered as drawing all their efficiency from God, the cause of all power: the gift of the Spirit may exist, the work in which it is employed may be the service of Christ; but God alone can enable it to produce its due effect. Comp. iii. 5, 6: ' Paul and Apollos are ministers (ciá-KOPOL): they planted and watered ' with the gifts of the Spirit, 'but God gave the increase."

7. 'As the source of these gifts is the same, so also is the object: namely, the benefit of others.' As the previous sentence is inserted to repel the general assertion of an inequality of gifts, so this is inserted to repel the disparagement of prophesying in particular. For this sense of ro συμφίρον see x. 23.

8—10. He now proceeds to give at length the proof of the 6th and 7th verses, returning once more, in the 11th, to the same general conclusion, that the gifts, however various, had a common Divine source.

The following enumeration includes three divisions.

(1) Mental 'gifts.' 'Knowledge' is spoken of as such in i. 5, 6. And so 'Know-'Wisdom' in James i. ledge' and F. E.h i 17: Col. i. Wisdom.'

5; Eph. i. 17; Col. i. ""suons.
9; and 'faith' in Luke xvii. 5, are described as sought and received from God, in language more emphatic and distinct than is used in speaking of 'love,'
'hope,' or other more general virtues. For the explanation of 'wisdom' and 'knowledge,' see ii. 6, 7. 'Wisdom' (nope)' expresses something more disexpresses something more dis-θέτερω [δε] πίστις εν τῷ αὐτῷ πνεύματι, ἄλλω δε χαρίσματα ιαμάτων έν τω ενί πνεύματι, 10 άλλω δε ένεργήματα δυνάμεων, άλλω προφητεία, άλλω διακρίσεις πνευμάτων, έτέρω γένη γλωσσών, άλλω δε διερμηνεία γλωσσών 11 πάντα δὲ ταῦτα ἐνεργεῖ τὸ ἐν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ πνεῦμα, διαιροῦν

* að tŵ for és). > Add 8≥ · éounreia.

faith, in the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing, 10 in the one Spirit, to another the working of miracles, to another prophecy, to another discernments a of spirits, to another divers kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation 11 of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to reach one severally as He wills.

· Or judgments.

cursive and argumentative, as in St. Paul; 'knowledge' (yrwoic) something more intuitive, as in St. John. 'The word,' or 'utterance' (λόγος) is added, to express that it was through their communication in teaching that these gifts became known. (Comp. i. 5.) 'Faith,' or unshaken trust in God, which

'Faith,' in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians is described as changing the heart, is described here, in xiii. 2; in Matt. xvii. 20; and Luke xvii. 6, as expressing itself in preternatural energy.

(2) As 'wisdom and knowledge ' are the basis of ' prophesying and divers tongues,' so faith is the basis of 'gifts of healing and miracles,' and hence the immediate transition to these. 'Healing.' 'Gifts of healings'

(χαρίσματα ιαμάτων). The plural is used to express the healing of various disorders. That this was amongst the most common of the extraordinary gifts may be inferred both from its frequent mention in the Acts. and also from James v. 14: 'Is any sick among you,' &c.

' Effects of miraculous powers' (ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων). The parallel in verse 28, where 'powers' (δυνάμεις) alone is used, shows that this, and not 'effects,' is the emphatic word. δυνάμεις expresses not the miracles themselves, but the nower or virtue residing in him who worked them, and ένεργήματα δυνάμεων is therefore the full expression for these powers displaying themselves in action, as hovee goodac indicates wisdom displaying itself in utterance.

(3) For prophecy and the gift of tongues, see xiv. 1. The dis-cerning of spirits (i. e. the discrimination between those prophetical gifts which were true and those which were false) stands in the same relation to prophecy, as the interpretation of tongues to the gift of tongues.

11. He here again sums up their variety by reasserting their unity. The word 'worketh' (irepyei) is here applied to the Spirit as it had in verse 6 been applied to God; the personal agency of the Spirit being here more strongly expressed than in verse 4, as is also implied in the ιδία έκάστω καθώς βούλεται. ¹¹ καθάπερ γὰρ το σώμα ἐν ἐστιν καὶ μέλη πολλά ἐχεἐ, πάντα δὲ τὰ μέλη τοῦ σώματος πολλά ἀντα ἐν ἐστιν σώμα, ούτως καὶ ὁ χρωτός ¹¹ καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἐν πυεύματι ἡμεῖς πάντες εἰς ἐν σώμα ἐβαπτίσθημεν, εἰτε '10νδαῖοι ἐιτε 'Ελληνες, εἰτε δούλοι εἰτε ἐλειόἐθερο, καὶ πάντες ^{}ἐν πνεῦμα ἐποτίσθημεν. ¹⁴ καὶ γὰρ τὸ

* (yes τολλά. " σώματος τοῦ ένδς. " εἰς εν.

12 For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so 13 also is Christ: for 'in one Spirit 'also 'were ne all baptized into one body, whether Jews or 'Greeks, whether 'slaves or 12 freemen: and 'were all made to drink a' one Spirit. For the words 'as He wills' (καθὼς βούλεται), where the verb, although united to a neuter noun, implies that its subject is a person. 12. The argument is con-

Analogy of the human bedy.

Analogy of the spiritual to the natural body. According to the metaphor so strongly brought forward in this Episile, 'Christ' is here used for the Christian Society, by which His body is represented. See x. 17, xi. 29.

13. This explains and gives the reason for the former expression. 'I say, so is it with Christ; for by the one Spirit which we partake we were baptized into the one body of Christ.'

'In one Spirit' (ir iri πνεύματι) refers to the idea of 'baptism by the Spirit,' 'plunged, enveloped in the rushing blast of the Divine breath.'

'Into one body' refers to the formula, 'into the name of Christ.' Compare Matthew xxviii. 19.

"Whether Jews or Greeks," &c. This must be introduced only as being the kind of unity most prominently represented in baptism. Compare Galat. iii. 27, 28: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, their is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.' εν πνευμα έποτίσθημεν, 'were all made to drink one Spirit.' (J. reads έφωτίσθημεν for εποτίσθημεν, a curious instance of the use of φωτίζω for Βαπτίζω in ecclesiastical Greek, in which this variation originated.) This is an amplification of the preceding; πνευμα rising above σώμα, as έποτίσθημεν above έβαπτίσθημεν. 'We were made partakers, not only of the outward body, but of the inward life and Spirit which animates it (comp. Eph. iv. 4: 'there is one body and one Spirit'), we not only passed through the waters of baptism. but the Spirit by which we were baptized passed into us; we were penetrated by it through and through, even into our immost spirits.' There is in ἐποτίσθη-HEV the double sense of 'were watered,' which connects it with baptism, and 'were given to drink,' which connects it with the idea of nourishment, and possibly, therefore, with the cup of the Lord's Supper (comp. x.

4). The same play on the word

σώμα ούκ έστυν θε μέλος, άλλα πολλά. ¹² ἐὰν είτη ὁ πούς, ⁷⁰ Τι ούκ εἰμὶ ζείρ, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, οὐ παρὰ τοῦτούκ ἐξοτων ἐκ τοῦ σώματος. ¹⁸καὶ ἐὰν είτη τὸ οὐς, ⁷⁰ Τοῦκ εἰμὶ ὁβθαλμός, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ τοῦ σώματος. ¹⁰ εἰλον τὸ σώμα ο ὁβθαλμός, ποῦ τὸ ἀκοτιν ἐκ τοῦ σώματος. ¹¹ ἐι ὁλον τὸ σώμα ο ὁβθαλμός, ποῦ τὸ ἀκοτιν ἐκ τοῦ σώματος. ¹¹ ἐι ὁλον τὸ σώματος ¹¹ τὰ τοῦν ἐν τὸ τὸ ἀκοτιν ἐκ τοῦ ἐξοτο τὸ μέλη, δε ἐξοτο τὸ αὐκη, δε ἐξοτο τὸ μέλη, δε ἐξοτο τὸ αὐκολὰ [μέν] μέλης τοῦ τὸ σώματ. ¹¹ ἀκὸ δύναται. ¹¹ οῦ δύναται. ¹¹ οῦ δύναται. ¹¹ οῦ δύναται.

b susí,

15 body ralso is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, 'because I am not the hand, I am not of the body,' it is 'e not' on that account" not of the body. And if the ear shall say, 'because I am not the eve. I am not of the body: 'it is not' on

17 that account" not of the body. If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were 18 the smelling? But now God *set the members, every one of 10 them in the body as He "willed: and if they were all one 20 member, where were the body? but now are they 'indeed 21 many members, but one body. And the eye cannot say unto appears in iii. 6, where the phrase 'Apollos watered' (ἐπό-τιστ) conveys the first of these meanings, and the phrase, '1 fed you with milk' (γάλα ὑμᾶς ἐπότισα), conveys the second.

14—18. In 'order to answer the argument of those who maintained that the gift of tongues was the only manifestation of the Spirit, he enlarges on the necessity of variety in the constituent parts of the human frame, and the acknowledged use of each.

14. καὶ γὰρ gives the reason for πάντες in the previous verse. 'I say that we all received life and strength from one Spirit, for so also it is in the human body, which does not consist of one limb, but of many.'

15. οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο οὐκ ἔστιν, 'It is not, therefore, no part of the body.' παρὰ τοῦτο, 'on this account,' 'along of this.' νῦν ôt. 'But as it is (as the human frame is really constituted) there is not one predominant sense or faculty, but many.'

caθώς ἡθέλησεν, i. e. 'not according to man's fancies but God's pleasure.'

19. În the previous verses, he has set forth the variety of the human frame; in these, 19—26, with a view to the confusion which arose out of the exaggneted estimate of one gift in the Corinthian church, he sets forth its suity. wo v̄ σ σ σ μ = i white would become of the organisation of the body as a whole?

20. νῦν δέ. As in verse 18.
21. As a practical consequence of this joint variety and unity in the human body, he sets forth the nutual dependence of the different senses and limbs; again, with the view of reproving the

[82] * δ δφθαλμὸς εἰπῶν τῆ χειρί Χρείαν σου οὐκ ἔχω, * * * ἀλλὰ πάλιν ἡ κεφαλή τοῖς ποσύ Χρείαν ὑμῶν οὐκ ἔχω * * ἀλλὰ πολλῷ μάλλον τὰ δοκούντα μελη τοῦ σώματος ἀσθενέστερα ὑπάρχειν ἀναγκαϊὰ ἐστυ, * καὶ ἃ δοκούμεν ἀτμότερα εἶναι τοῦ σώματος, τούτοις τιμήν περισστέραν περιτίθεμεν, καὶ τὰ ἀσχήμονα ἡμῶν εὐσχημοσύνην περισστέραν ἔχει, * * τὰ ἐσχήμονα ἡμῶν εὐσχημοσύνην περισστέραν ἔχει, * * τὰ ἐ ἐνσχήμονα ἡμῶν οὐ χρείαν ἔχει. * ἀλλὰ ὁ ἀθος συνεκέρασεν τὸ σῶμα, τῷ * ὑστερουμένφ περισστόραν δοὺς τιμήν. ὑνα μὴ ἤ σχίσμα ἐν. τὰλλὰ τὸ ἀπὸ δυὸς τιμήν. ὑνα μὴ ἤ σχίσμα ἐν. σὰ σώματι, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀπὸ ὑπερ

• Om. &.

^δ δστεροθντι.

the hand 'I have no need of thee,' nor again the head to the 22 fect 'I have no need of you:' nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be 'weaker are necessary, 23 and those members of the body, which we think to be less

23 and those memoers of the body, which we talk to be less honourable, upon these we bestow more abundant honour, and 24 our 'unseemly parts have more abundant 'seemliness, 'and our 'seemly parts have no need. But God 'tempered the body recently parts have no need. But God rempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part 25 which lacked, that there should be no division in the body, contempt with which the gifts of teaching were regarded by those endowed with the gift of tongues.

²2. Aλλά πολλφ μαλλον. *Not only do the hand and foot stand in need of each other, but even the feeblest and humblest parts the feeblest and humblest parts and the standard of the feeblest and humblest parts entity of the feeblest parts and the f

The passage indicates the same strain of argument as forms the hasis of xi. 3—15, appealing to the natural feelings of men on the subject of dress.

τα άσθινέστερα, άτιμότερα, άσχήμονα, are best lest undefined, as the Apostle has lest them: the words being accumulated and varied designedly, so as to include all parts of the human frame, without particularly specifying any.

υπάρχειν here seems to retain its classical sense, 'to be in their own nature weak;' distinguished from εΙναι in verse 23, 'to be by general consent unbonoured.'

23. τιμήν περτίθεμεν. The word περετίθεμεν (comp. Matt. xxvii. 28; Mark xv. 17) points to dress; and if so, τιμήν may possihly have been suggested by the passage in Gen. xx. 16, where it is used by the LXX. for 'a covering of the eyes.'

The covering of the body, and uncovering of the face, is probably one chief point of the contrast.

24. ¿ Séoc συνεκέρασεν, 'God through these natural instincts provided a compensation.'

25. The particular expres-ἀλλήλων μεριμνώστω τὰ μέλη, ¹⁸καὶ εἶ ¹τι πάσχει ἐν μέλος, συμπάσχει πάντα τὰ μέλη εἶτε δοξάζεται ἐν μέλος, συγχαίρει πάντα τὰ μέλη. ¹³ ὑμεῖς δέ ἐστε σώμα χριστοῦ καὶ μέλη ἐκ μέρους. ²⁸καὶ οῦς μὲν ἔθετο ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῆ

a un) eller

but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members 26 suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ and mem-2' bers in particular. And God 'set some in the church, first 28 sions used here, σχίσμα, μεριμνώσιν, πάσχει, δοξάζεται, συγγαίρει, 'care,' 'suffering,' 'division,' 'care,' 'suffering,' 'glory,' 'joy,' may all be taken for the physical and involuntary sympathy of the human frame, as Chrysostom explains συγχαίρει, 'The mouth speaks, and the eyes laugh and sparkle,' But they also indicate that the Apostle's mind was chiefly fixed on the moral application of these natural phenomena; and that in this application he has strayed beyoud the limits of the particular subject of the gifts into the contemplation of Christian unity generally, of which he had spoken in verses 14-19. Compare verse 13. And the momentary fervour by which this passage is distinguished from the rest of the argument arises from the consciousness of his own intense sympathy, as already described in viii. 13, ix. 19-22, and as given almost in the same words in 2 Cor. xi. 28, 29: 'That which cometh upon me daily. the care (ἡ μέριμνα) of all the Churches. Who is weak (τίς άσθενεί) and I am not weak?

(adtivit) and I am not weak? ' 26. δοξάζεται, 'glorified.' If this has any precise reference to the parts of the body, it is another illustration of the significance (as in verse 23, xi. 214) which the Apostle attaches to the ornaments (as crowns, &c.) to which it probably would allude.

27. ὑμεῖς δέ έστε σῶμα χριστοῦ καὶ μέλη ἐκ μέρους. The greater elevation of the previous passage had prepared the way for the transition from the statement of the analogy to its moral application. 'But you, the Christian society,-as distinct from the bodily organisation, of which I have just been speaking,-you are, collectively speaking, the body of Christ; as, individually, you are His limbs.' Compare vi. 15: 'know ye not that your bodies (i. e. your individual bodies) are members of Christ?'

28-30. This general application is now unfolded in detail: ούς μέν έθετο ο θεός έν τη έκκλησία, corresponds to ver δέ δ θεὸς έθετο τα μέλη, in verse 18: 'As in the natural body He placed the various limbs, so "in the Church" (ἐν τῷ ἐκκλησία being used with especial reference to the public meetings, comp. xi. 20) He placed men endowed with different gifts.' It is evident from the context, and from comparison with the parallel passage in Eph. iv. 11-16: (1) that he is speaking here, not of offices, but of gifts: (2) that the gifts which he enumeέκκλησία πρώτον ἀποστόλους, δεύτερον προφήτας, τρίτον διδασκάλους, έπειτα δυνάμεις, έπειτα χαρίσματα ίαματων, άντιλήψεις, κυβερνήσεις, γύση γλωσσών. 29 ή πάντες ἀπόστολοι; μή πάντες προφήται; μή πάντες διδάσκαλοι; apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, 'after that' gifts of healings, helps, 'insights, 'divers 29 kinds' of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all rates, were not enjoyed by two or three orders only, but by the whole of the Christian society.

· dra

cicty. οὖς μὲν would naturally have required οὖς ἐἐ in the next clause, but the form of enumeration is exchanged for πρῶτον, ἔἐντερον, τοἰτον, as that again is exchanged for έπειτα, έπειτα.

έθετο refers to the first foundation of the Church. This enumeration stands midway between that of the gifts in verses 8-10, and that in Eph. iv. 11; less abstract than the first, and (as might be expected from its priority in time) less concrete than the second. To a certain extent the gifts of 'knowledge and wisdom, correspond to the offices of 'Apostles, prophets, and teachers.' 'Apostles' are placed first, as the founders of the Church (comp. Eph. ii. 20, and Rev. xxi 14), and as endowed in the highest degree with spiritual gifts. The name expresses the character of those who had either been immediately sent forth by Christ Himself, or who had been raised to a level with the Twelve by direct revelations from Him.

For the juxtaposition of 'prophets' with 'Apostles,' compare Eph. ii. 20; iv. 11. For the word itself see ch. xiv.

29. διδάσκαλοι, 'teachers.'

These also are noticed in Eph. iv. 11; Acts xiii. 1, in the same order, and by implication in Rom. xii. 7.

The name expresses the function of regular teaching or expounding, as distinct from the inspired and impassioned preaching of the 'prophets.' Of all these 'gifts' it is the one which approaches most nearly to an established order of clergy.

For the rest of the gifts compare verses 9, 10. Two are added here, which are there not expressly 'Helpa' named, 'helps' (ἀντιλήψεις) and 'governments' (κυ-βερνήσετς). If, as is possible, they designate gifts like those mentioned in the analogous part of the enumeration in verses 8, 10; then none are more likely to be alluded to than the two here omitted, viz., 'interpretation of tongues' (ξυμηνεία γλωφωνα)ν, and 'discernments of spirits' (διακρίσετες πνευμάνευς).

άντλόψε as used in the LXX. is not (like δεακονία) help ministered by an inferior to a superior, but by a superior to an inferior to superior (see Ps. lxxxix. 18; Ecclus. xi. 12, li. 7); and thus, whilst inapplicable to the ministrations of the deason to the presbyter, would well express the various helps rendered by those who had the gift of interpretation, to the congrega-μὴ πάντες δυνάμεις; ³⁰μὴ πάντες χαρίσματα ἔχουσιν ἰαμάτων; μὴ πάντες γλώσσαις λαλοῦσιν; μὴ πάντες διερμηνεύουσιν;

30 teachers? are all miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

tion at large, or to those who were vainly struggling to express themselves intelligibly in their strange accents. X-diperage, which in the ments. New Testament occurs only here, is in the LXX. always used as the rendering of n'ivalung, 'wise foresight,' ing of Mining, 'wise foresight,' &c. as in Prov. i. 5, xi. 14, xxiv. 6. So in the unpublished 'Glosses on the Proverbs,' quoted by Schleusner, it is explained as ἐπιστήμη τῶν πραττο-prisms, and in Hesychius (appanently in explanation of this very passage), vs/psprisec are mid to be *psronyrical exertification and open rights. This meaning would exactly accord with the discernments of spirits,' and thus the two enumerations would as nearly as peasible coincide; and we should then have works (otherwise waning) to which core in verse 30, Do all interpret?

PARAPHEASE OF CHAP. XII. 1-30.

With regard to the gifts of the Spirit, you must not confine your appreciation of them to any one class. If you compure your present state with the blind unconscious condition in which you were before your conversion, you must be ware that even the simple acknowledgment of Christ as your Lord, which you made at your conversion, was an utterance of the Spirit of God; and you may therefore concrive that, however various are the gifts bestowed upon you, they all equally proceed from the breath of the Spirit; even as the services which they enable you to perform are all wrought for the one Master whom you acknowledged at your conversion; and as the effects which they produce are produced by the power of God from whom the Spirit comes. And as they all issue from the same source, so they have all the same end, namely, the benefit of others. This unity of origin and object is in no way contradicted by the variety of the gifts, moral, preternatural, or spiritual, and may be illustrated by the analogy between the framework of the human body and that of the body of Christ, which is the very form assumed by the Christian society in consequence of its participation in these spiritual wifts. In the human body no one limb or organ is allowed to sevarate itself from the rest, or absorb the rest into itself, without self-destruction : so that, on the one hand, the independence of the separate senses is preserved, and, on the other hand, the unity of the organisation as a whole; and the consequence of this joint variety and unity is a mutual dependence of the several limbs and faculties upon each other, so that even the most insignificant and obscure have parts to perform, which the general consent of mankind has delighted to honour and adorn. Now, what the several limbs are in the natural body, that the individuals who compose the Christian society are in the body of Christ. Every individual believer has some gift, but not the same. There are the Apostles, the messengers of Christ Himself, the prophets with their inspired utterances, the teachers with their ordinary training and learning, the extraordinary powers inherent in some, the gifts of healing, the interpreters, the discerners of spirits, the speakers with tongues ; these are all different from each other, and none need encroach on the others' functions.

THE MIRACLES

AND THE ORGANISATION OF THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

This Chapter is the most detailed contemporary record extant of the extraordinary powers which manifested themselves in the Christian society during the first century. They resolve themselves into two classes: (1) Those which relate to healing, and which exactly correspond with the de- bealing. scription of the miracles of Peter and John,1 and with the allusions in James v. 14, 15: 'Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up;' and in Mark xvi. 18: 'They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.' (2) The gifts of teaching, which are here classed under the names of 'prophets,' 'teachers,' 'knowledge,' 'wisdom,' are traching. implied rather than expressly claimed in the authority which the narrative of the Acts ascribes to the numerous speeches of the Apostles. But to gifts of this kind allusions are expressly made in the intimations in Matt. x. 20, and John xvi. 13, of 'the Spirit speaking in the disciples,' and 'guiding them into all truth.' And to the same effect are the passages in Rom. xii. 6, 7, 8: 'Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; . . . or he that teacheth, let him wait on teaching, or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; 'Eph. iv. 7, 11: 'Unto every one of us is given grace. . . . He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11: 'As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another. . . . If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God.' The Apostle seems to claim this gift for himself, both by implication in all his Epistles, and expressly in 1 Cor. vii. 40: 'I think that I also (i. e. as well as others) have the Spirit of God.' Of the special gifts of prophesying and speaking with tongnes, there will be another occasion to speak in considering the 14th chapter. In the highest development of these various forms of the gift of teaching, we find the only direct recognition of what in modern language is called 'inspiration;' and although the limits of such a gift, and the persons in whom it existed, are never clearly defined, the description of it is important, because, unlike the other gifts, its results can still be appreciated. We cannot judge of the gifts of healing; their effects have long since passed away. But we can judge of the gift of teaching by the remains which it has left in the writings of the New Testament; and these remains incontestably prove that there was at that time given to men an extraordinary insight into truth, and an extraordinary power of communicating it.

' Acts iii, 1-10, v. 12-10, ix. 33-42.

It is important to observe, that these multiplied allusions Universal imply a state of things in the Apostolical age, which diffusion of has certainly not been seen since. On particular octhese gifts, casions, indeed, both in the first four centuries, and afterwards in the middle ages, miracles are ascribed by contemporary writers to the influence or the relics of particular individuals; but there has been no occasion when they have been so emphatically ascribed to whole societies, so closely mixed up with the ordinary course of life. It is not maintained that every member of the Corinthian Church had all or the greater part of those gifts, but it certainly appears that every one had some gift; and this being the case, we are enabled to realise the total difference of the organisation of the Apostolical Church from any through which it has passed in its later stages. It was still in a state of fusion. Every part of the new society was instinct with a life of its own. The whole atmosphere which it breathed must have confirmed the belief in the importance and novelty of the crisis.

But yet more remarkable, both as a proof of the Divine power and wisslom which accompanied this whole manifestion, Moderne, and also as affording a lesson to after times, is true in the the manner in which the Apostle approaches the Apostle's subject, and the inference which he draws from it. appeal to His object in enumerating these gifts is, not to enter gifts. large on their importance, or appeal to them as evidences of the Christian faith; it is to urge upon his readers the necessity of co-operation for some useful purpose. Such a thought at such a moment is eminently characteristic of the soberness and calmness which pervade the Apostle's writings, and affords a striking contrast to the fanatical feeling which regards miracles as ends and not as means; and which despises, as alien and uncongenial, the ideas of co-operation, subordination, and order.

This chapter has a yet further interest. It is the introduction of a new idea into the Sacred Volume. It has been truly observed, that the great glory of the trine of Mosaic covenant was, not so much the revelation of waity, at truth before unknown, as the communication of waity that truth to a whole people; the first and only exception which the Eastern world presented to the spirit of caste and exclusion. But even in the Chosen People this universal sympathy with each other, and with the common objects of the nation, can hardly be said to have been fulfilled as it was intended.

The idea of a whole community swayed by a common feeling of interest and affection, was not Asiatic, but European. It was Greece, and not Judea, which first presented the sight of a πόλε or state, in which every citizen had his own political and social daties, and lived, not for himself, but for the State. In the Old Testament, the duty of brotherly concord was enforced, not by the lively image of the body and its members, but by the wholly different metaphor of the dews of Palestine and the priestly oil. It was a Roman fable, and not an Eastern parable, which gave to the world the image of a 'body politic,' in which the welfare of each member depended on the welfare of the rest. And it is precisely this thought which, whether in conscious or unconscious intuitation, was suggested to the Apostle, by the sight of the manifold and various gifts of the Christian community.

The image of the Christian Church, which the Apostle here exhibits, is that of a Iving society in which the various faculties of the various members were to perform their several parts,—not an inert mass of mere learners and subjects, who were to be authoritatively taught and ruled by one small portion of its members. It is a Christianisation, not of the Levitical hierarchy, but of the republic of Plato. It has become in after times the basis, not of treatises on Church government, but of Butler's Sermons on the general constitution of human nature and human society. The principle of co-operation, as generally acknowledged in the economical and physical well-being of man, was here to be applied to his moral and spiritual improvement. But there was the fear lest an object so high and abstract as the promotion of man's moral welfare might be lost in the distance. Something nearer and more personal was required to be mixed up with that which was indistinct from its very vastness. The direct object, therefore, of Christian cooperation, according to St. Paul, was to bring Christ into every part of common life, to make human society one living body, closely joined in communion with Christ, And lest this comparison of the Church with the human body might in one respect lead to error, because there resides such a sovereignty in the brain or head, that in comparison of its great activity some of the other members may be called passive; therefore the functions of the head in the Christian Church are by the Apostle assigned exclusively to Christ Himself.1

¹ Ps. cxxxiii. 1—3. For the frequent use of the figure first known through the fable of Menenius

This idea of Christian community in the Apostolical age, was kept up, not only by the universal diffusion of the spiritual gifts, but by all the outward institutions of the Church; by the primitive mode, as already described, of celebrating the Lord's Supper; by the co-operation of the whole community in the expulsion or restoration of offenders; by the absence, as would appear from this chapter, of any definite form of government or constitution; and, in the Church of Jerusalem, by the community of property.

Of these institutions most, if not all, had, even before the Apostolical age, been either Apostolical age, been either Apostolical age, been either Apostolical by the greatly modified or had ceased to exist; and the Apostolical gifts, from which the institutions derived their life statement is modern and apprint; had, as the Apostole himself anticipated, seating almost, if not altogether, vanished away. But the general truth which their existence suggested to St. Paul is still applicable to the natural gifts which constitute the variety of all civilised society. The earliest form of the Christian society was, as it were, a microcosm of the world at large; what was supplied to it in its first stage by miraculous intervention, is to be sought for now in the natural faculties and feelings

¹ For this whole subject of the idea of the early Church and its relations to the institutions of later times, I cannot forbear to refer to the instructive passages in Arnold's Fragment on the Church, pp. 149, 150.

which it has comprehended within its sphere. And therefore it is truly a part of Christian edification to apply what St. Paul and St. Peter 1 have said of the diversity and relative importance and final cause of the first extraordinary display of the gifts of the Spirit, to the analogous variety of the gifts of imagination, reasoning powers, thought, activity, means of beneficence. Variety and complexity are the chief characteristics of civilisation; and it is one of the many indications of the new birth of the world involved in the introduction of the Gospel. that these very same qualities, by which human society is now carried on in nations and in Churches, should thus appear impressed on the face of primitive Christianity. A new word has lately come into existence, to express the necessary interdependence of men and of nations; but no better definition of 'solidarity' can be given than the old words here first uttered: 'Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it: or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it?

¹ Rom. xii. 6—8; 1 Cor. xii. 28; 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11. See Arnold's Sermons, vol. ii. 217; vi. 300.

LOVE, THE GREATEST OF GIFTS. XII. 31-XIII, 13.

THE Apostle, in the preceding verses, had pointed out the necessary variety of the gifts; he had asked indignantly whether there was indeed anything in the actual state of God's dispensations to warrant the attempt to subordinate all gifts to one; and then it would seem as if, after his manner, he suddenly paused. The very fervour of his own rapid questions has brought before him vividly the angry jealousy with which the Corinthians grasped at one out of these many gifts, and that, though the most startling, the least useful. Already, in speaking of the Factions, and of the scandals occasioned by the sacrificial feasts, he had seen how much they thought of themselves, and how little of others; and he now wishes to urge upon them that far above any other gift-far above even the gift of tongues, or the gift of knowledge, is the gift of Love, which would teach them that the true measure of the value of gifts was their practical usefulness.

On this connexion with the general argument, Bengel well remarks: 'Characterem amoris, quem Paulus Corinthiis, et characterem sapientize, quem Jacobus item iis, ad quos scripsit, cap. iii. 17, attemperavit, utiliter inter se conferas, adhibito loco, 1 Cor. viii. 1.'

There is no word which exactly renders the signification of Charity, 'Ayrian,' Caritas' was diverted from its usual meaning feeling that the Latin' amor 'was not sufficiently spiritual. And from this word, in slightly altered forms, have been derived the words by which its force has been usually expressed in French, Italian, Spanish, Swedish, and English. In itself, 'charity' would not be an unsuitable rendering. But in English the ilimitation of its meaning by popular usage has so much narrowed its sense, that the simpler term 'Love,' though too general exactly to meet the case, is now the best equivalent. It is used in the German Versions (Liebe), and was used in the older English Versions down to 1582, as it is still in the present version, wherever it occurs in the writings of St. John.

LOVE, THE GREATEST OF GIATS.

⁸¹ Ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ χαρίσματα τὰ "μείζονα" καὶ ἔτι καθ' ὑπερβολὴν όδὸν ὑμιν δείκνυμι. ΧΙΙΙ. ¹ἐὰν ταῖς γλώσσος τῶν ἀθρώπων λαλῶ καὶ τῶν ἀγγέλων, ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, γέγονα χαλκὸς ἡχῶν ἡ κύμβαλον ἀλαλάζον. ²² κᾶν ἔχω та кребттона.

 каl ¿áv.

31 But seek "zealously the 'greater gifts: and yet show I lunto you a more excellent way. XIII. Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not 'Love, I 2 am become sounding brass or a 'clanging cymbal. And

31. ζηλούτε δὲ τὰ γαρίσματα τὰ μείζονα. 'The humblest gifts are not to be despised; but if you are to be envious of any, if you are to be desirous of acquiring any, desire not the worst, not the most useless, but the best: such as the gift of prophecy, which conduces to the good of others.' That such is the meaning appears from the parallel in xiv. 1, where 'rather that ye may proplicay' corresponds to 'the best gifts' here. For the bad sense implied in ζηλοῦτε compare verse 4 (οὐ ζηλοί). For a similar play on its good and bad senses see Gal. iv. 17, 'They zealously affect you (ζηλοῦσι), but not well. . . . But it is good to be zealously affected (ζηλούσθαι) always in a good thing." For this qualification of the general sentiment which he had been expressing just before, compare Matt. xxiii. 23: 'These ought you to have done, and not to leave the other undone.'

καθ' ὑπερδολὴν is to be taken with ὑδόν. Compare ἀμαρτωλὸς καθ' ὑπερδολήν, like 'par excellence,' Rom. vii. 13.

όδόν, 'way of life.' Compare the use of $\display \display \display

XIII. 1—3. There is a climax in the passage throughout.

Without Love the greatest gifts are worthless, even though they be: (1) The gift of tongues, verse

The gift of tongues, verse
 (2) The gift of prophecy, and of knowledge, and of faith, verse

 (3) The gift of zeal for man as shown in outward acts, verse

And in each case the conclusion corresponds to the expression used in the first part of the sensence. He speaks throughout in the first person, as in Rom. vii. 7—25, personifying, as it were, human nature in himself.

The gift of tongues is mentioned first, as it was against the exaggerated estimate of this that he had chiefly to contend. The expression is hyperbolical, like viii. 13, or Rom. ix. 3, but still based on a real feeling. 'Though the tuterances of this gift included all that both worlds could express of great and glorious; προφητείαν καὶ είδω τὰ μυστήρια πάντα καὶ πάσαν τὴν γιωσιν, καὶ ἐὰν έχω πασαν τὴν πίστιν ώστε ὅρη "μεθιστάναι, αγάπην δὲ μὴ έχω, οὐθέν εἰμι. 3° καν ψωμίσω πάντα τὰ · naì đày douićo. · nebiordreir.

and knowledge, I could remove a Love. I am nothing.

yet without Love to harmonise them, they would be but jarring and unmeaning discord.' For the phrase 'men and angels,' comp. iv. 9.

χαλκὸς ήχῶν, ' sounding brass,' is a general name for musical instrubrass. ments (not a trumpet, for which he would have used the word σάλπιγξ, as in xiv. 8). άλαλάζον, 'clanging.' In Ps.

cl. 5, two different kinds of cymbal are spoken of, rendered by the LXX. κυμβάλοις εὐήχοις, and κυμθάλοις άλαλαγμού, 'the well-tuned cymbal,' and 'the loud cymbal. The last is the one here alluded to. Apion the grammarian was called the 'cymbalum mundi.' (Plin. Præf. Hist. Nat.) The force of the epithets depends on the unmeaning character of the sound of cymbals. compared with the significance of real music; compare xiv. 7, where the same contrast is implied between the gift of tongues and the gift of prophecy.

He proceeds next to speak of prophery, as the gift of which he himself thought most highly, and which he wishes to contrast with that of tongues, as spoken of in the preceding verse. For its connexion, as here, with the gift of knowledge and with faith, see xii. 8, 9, 10; and Rom. xii. 6. 2. πάντα τὰ μυστήρια, 'the whole range of God's secrets.' (An inexact expression for siow ric though I have prophecy and understand all recrets though I have all mountains, but have And though I rdole away all my μυστήρια πάντα καὶ ἔχω πᾶσαν την γνώσιν.) Comp. Rom. xi. 33, πάσαν την γνώσιν, 'all the knowledge in the world.' πάσαν την πίστιν, 'all the faith in the world,' in the same sense as in xii. 9. For the phrase 'to move mountains,' 'Move compare our Lord's mountains. saying in Matt. xvii. 20, xxi. 21. It seems to have been a proverbial expression. Compare the Rabbinical passages quoted by Heydenreich ad loc.; and Lightfoot on Matt. xxi. 21, where the most distinguished teachers are called 'uprooters of mountains.' Compare also the well-known story of Mahomet, and the Eastern proverb, 'Man may go to man, but not mountain to miracles of St. Gregory of Casarea, and of St. Nonnosus in Estius. οὐθέν εἰμι, 'though I seem to have control over the whole spiritual world, I am nothing.

man: ' and the legends of similar

3. From the gift of prophecy, with its accompanying graces, he proceeds to the outward expressions of Love itself. κάν ψωμίσω πάντα τὰ ὑπάρ-χοντά μου, according to Ψωμίζω, the use of ψωμίζω, in Rom. xii. 20; Numb. xi. 18, may be taken in the general sense of 'supplying food,' governing, like πατίζω, a double accusative, so that here τον πτωχον must be understood. But it may also be.

ύπάρχοντά μου, *κάν παραδῶ τὸ σῶμά μου ἵνα ^bκαυθήσω*καὶ ἐἰν, * Lachm. Εd. 1. ἐνα κανχήσωμα.

goods, and though I give my body to be burned, and according to the etymology, ' If I divide all my goods into morsels.' Coleridge in a MS, note on this passage says: 'The true and most significant sense is, "Though I dole away in mouthfuls all my property or estates." Who that has witnessed the almsgiving in a Catholic monastery, or the court of a Spanish or Sicilian bishop's or archbishop's palace, where immense revenues are syringed away in farthings to herds of beggars, but must feel the force of the Apostle's half satirical ψωμίσω?

The Received Text and Lachmann, on the authority of C. D. G. and the Latin MSS. read γνα καυθήσωμαι. Lachmann in his first edition, on the au-

Give τη καυχήσωμαι. If my body to be burned. καυθήσωμαι be correct, there is then an allusion to the Three Children in Daniel iii. 28 (παρίζωκαν τὰ σώματα είς πῦρ), or to the martyr in 2 Maccab, vii. 5; and the sense would be that, as in the first clause he excludes services to men, so here he excludes zeal for God. And the warning would apply to such spurious martyrdoms as took place from time to time in the early Church, not from conscience, but from ambition. Compare Cyprian's Letters; Hieron. ad. Gal. v.; and the story (quoted by Heydenr. ad loc.), of Sapricius, a Christian of Antioch, who, on his way to martyrdom, refused to forgive his enemy Nicephorus. And already in the Apostle's time instances of such self-immolation were sufficiently wellknown from Pagan examples: as when Calanus burnt himself before the army of Alexander, and as afterwards Peregrinus the Stoic philosopher did the same at the Olympic games, in the time of the Antonines, and in the presence of Lucian, who describes it. But on the whole, the reading "ra καυχήσωμαι ('that I may boast'), seems preferable : the construction, though harsh, is borne out by 2 Cor. xi. 16: ώς άφρονα δέξασθέ με, ίνα κάγὰ μικρόν τι καυχήσωμαι, and the sense agrees better with the context. It would seem to be still a continuation of the instances of self-denying beneficence : 'Though I sacrifice not only my property, but my bodily case and comfort; ' 'though I give up,' not strictly the life (which would be wexne, as in Acts xv. 26), but the means of life; what in classical Greek would be Bioc, as distinct from ζωή. If so, he alludes to the hard life which he led by his determination to maintain himself by his own labour, and which was the especial subject of his boasting, as of an extraordinary merit. Compare ix. 27 (ὑπωπιάζω μου τὸ σῶμα), and ix. 15, 16, where, as here, he applies to it the same expression καύχημα.

'It profiteth me nothing.'
This is said to express that, in spite of such vast exertions, no result follows. Compare Matt. xvi. 26: 'What shall it profit a man to gain the whole world?'

μαι, ανάπην δὲ μή ἔχω, "οὕθὲν ώφελοῦμαι. "ἡ ανάπη μακροθυμεῖ, χρηστείεται ἡ ἀγάπη, οὐ ξηλοῖ [ἡ ἀγάπη], οὐ περπερεύεται, οὐ ψονοιοῦται, "οἰκ ἀσχημονεί, οὐ ἰχηκο ἐαντῆς, οὐ παροξύεται, οὐ λογίζεται τὸ κακόν, ⁶οὐ χαίρει ἐπὶ τῆ ἀδικια, συγχαίρει δὲ τῆ ἀληθεία, ⁷πάντα στέγει,

4 have not "Love, it profiteth me nothing. "Love suffereth long, "Love is kind; "Love envieth not; vaunteth not 'heself, is not puffed up, doth not behave 'herself unseemly, secketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh "not évil, rejoiecht not in iniquity, but rejoiecht "with the truth,

4—7. He now drops his own example and personifies Love itself, as in Rom. v.—viii. He personifies Sin, Death, and the personifies Sin, Death, and the virtue of Christian Zeal (spabujan), and as Wisdom is personified in the Books of Proverbs, Wisdom, and Ecclesiasticus. The cumeration of qualities begins with especial reference to the with experiment in xii. 10, 11. (1) puspolyput, pagericerus, ob

(1) µuxpollupit, χοηστεύεται, οὐ ζηλοί. Lachmann's punctuation gives an expressed nominative case to each of these first three attributes. 'Love bears long with offenders; there is a kindness in Love; there is no envy or jealousy (comp. ζηλοῦτε in xii. 31) in Love;

(2) περπερεύεται, φυσιούται, ἀσχημονεί, relate to the humility inserparable from true Love. περπερεύεται (from the old Latin word 'perperus', a braggart, see Polyb. xxxii. 6, 5, xl. περπερεί. 6, 2), 'shows itself off'.

σθαι. 0, 2), 'shows itself off,' as distinguished from aλαζονεύεσθα, which is 'to pretend to qualities which one has not.' (Compare ἐνεπερπερευσάμην, in Cicero ad Att. 1.14.)

in Cicero ad Att. i. 14.) φυσιούται, 'is inflated with vanity,' see viii 1.

άσχημονεί, 'is disorderly,' but rejoiceth with the truth,

'eccentric,' apparently with the notion of pride implied (as in vii. 36), alluding to the disorders occasioned by the use of the gifts. See xiv. 10: yadara texpulsives produced to the contrution to perform degrading acts,' as if he had read dryquors;
instead of eke dryquors,
instead of eke dryquors,
(3) ek curs in dawric, et πα-

(3) οὐ ζητεῖ τὰ ἐαυτῆς, οὐ παροξύνεται, οὐ λογίζεται τὸ κακόν. These three indicate the unselfish placid qualities.

n οὐ ζητεῖ, ² grasps not at her own c rights' (what in classical Greek c is expressed by ἐλασσοῦσθαι), see g x. 24, 33.

οὐ παροξύνεται, 'is not provoked to anger.'

ob λογίζεται, 'does not impute or store up in her calculations the injury she has received.'

(4) ab yatiput fair r

g dekig. All these qualities express the sympathy and self-denial of Love for others. Injunities and Justice of the self-denial of Love for others. Injunities and Justice of the self-denial of Love for others. Injunities are self-denial to the self-denial of Love for others are self-denial of Love for others. Injunities are self-denial to the self-denial of the self-denial to the self-denial self-denial to the self-d

πάντα στέγει may be:-

πάντα πιστεύει, πάντα ἐλπίζει, πάντα ὑπομένει. δή ἀγάπη οὐδέποτε *πίπτει. εἴτε δὲ προφητεῖαι, καταργηθήσονται εἴτε γνῶσσαι , παύσονται εἴτε γνῶσις, καταργηθήσεται.

ἐκπίπτει.
 Note. MS. C. is deficient between γλώσσαι] and [μέν ἡ τῶν, xv. 40.

7 beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things ensureth all things. Those never faileth. But whether there be prophecies, they shall rvanish away'; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall

(1) 'conceals faults in a neighbour; ' according to the general sense of Prov. x. 12. 'Bears all στένω in Ecclus, viii, things. 17, is thus used: 'Con-(στέγει). sult not with a fool, for he cannot keep counsel ' (στίξαι). And in classical writings, compare Eur. Phœn. 1214; Soph. Phil. 136; Œd. Tyr. 341; Thuc. vi. 72. For the sense of the passage so understood, compare an interpretation sometimes put on 1 Pet. iv. 8, αγάπη καλύπτει πλήθος άμαρτιών. But καλύπτω there, as in James v. 20; Rom. iv. 7; Ps. xxxii, 1; Clem. Ep. ad Cor. i. 49, is probably used for 'covering,' not in the sense of 'concealment,' but of expiation.

The other sense, however, is preferable: (2) 'bears all things,' i. e. 'endures,' or, 'is proof against, 'all reproaches and hardships,' which is the sense of the word in the only other passages where it occurs in the N. T. (1 Cor. ix. 12; 1 Thess. iii. 15). The metaphor is taken from a ship or roof which does not leak (Æsch. Suppl. 134; Thuc. ii. 94; Plat. Rep. 621; Crit. 111, D.), or troops warding off an assault (Thuc. iv. 34; Diod. Sic. xi. 32), or ice, bearing weight (Diod. Sic. iii, 33). Cyprian apparently read στέργει (by the same confusion of MSS. that occurs in Soph. Œd. Tyr. 11), so as to make the enumeration of στέργει, πιστεύει, ἱλπίζει agree with the subsequent mention of Love, Faith, and Hope.

πάντα πιστεύει, πάντα έλπίζει, πάντα ὑπομένει. All these words relate, in the first instance, to the feelings of Love in respect to man. 'She believes all that is told her, without mistrust, she hopes all good of every one, she endures all vexations. But the words, mioric, ihnic, inoμονή, having acquired a religious sense by their frequent use in relation to God, here rise above their context; and so the earthly sphere within which his view of Love has hitherto been confined, breaks away, and in the next verse he ascends a loftier height to tell us of its future fortunes, υπομένει especially leading him to it, by the higher sense which it has here, as in Rom, v. 4, and which thus distinguishes it from στέγει

 ἡ ἀγάπηουδέποτε πίπτει. 'This is the last and crowning glory of Love, that it is imperishable.'

winte, 'loses' its strength;' so Rom. ix. δ: σύχ σἶον δὲ ὅτι ἐκπέτπως» ὁ λόγος τοῦ θεσῷ, ndi LXX. Job xv. 33; Isa. xxviii. 1, 4, where it is applied to the fading of flowers.

Here the description of Love closes. But St. Paul now reε ξε μέρους γὰρ γινώσκομεν καὶ ἐκ μέρους προφητεύομεν· "όταν δὲ ἐλθη το τέλειον, "το ἐκ μέρους καταργηθήσεται. "ότε ῆμην νήπιος, ἐλάλουν ὡς νηπιος, ἐφρόνουν ὡς νήπιος, ἐλογιζόμην ὡς νήπιος τοτέ γέγονα ἀνήρ, κατήργηκα τὰ τοῦ

* rore ro. b de sermos éladlous, etc. ° See 8è.

s vanish away. For we know in part and we prophesy in lopart: but when that which is perfect is come, what I which is in part shall 'vanish away. When I was a 'babe, I spake as a 'babe, I understood as a 'babe, I thought as a babe: "since I 'am become aman, I have' made the things of turns to the especial object for which he had introduced it, and proceeds to contrast the permanence of Love with the perishableness of the gifts on which they so prided themselves.

'Prophecy,' 'tongues,' and 'knowledge,' are mentioned, as being the three already contrasted with Love, in verses 1 and 2. 'Knowledge' is taken in the sense of the spiritual gift in xii. 8; and the limitations of it, although applying analogously to all human knowledge, must be understood accordingly.

9. te pipere. The stress is on these words: 'Only peritial glimpses of the truth are revealed in prophecy; only peritial glimpses of the truth are received in the intuitions of knowledge.' The passage is important, as showing a consciousness of the imperfiction even of revealed knowledge. Compare 1 John 12: 2: 'It doth not yet appear what we shall be.'

10. δταν ἐἐ ἐλθŋ τὸ τέλτιον. We should more naturally say, 'When we go to that which is perfect.' He, in expectation of the return of his Lord, says, 'When that which is perfect is come to us.'

11. He here once more returns to himself, as the representative of man in general; and the illustration which follows is probably sug- 'As a gested by the word child' (rimes).

gested by the word (r/mws).

r/khow, 'perfect', 'full.'
grown, r/khos and r/mvsc being naturally opposed to each other as in ii. 6, iii, 1. In the word r/mvsc ('infint', rather than 'child') he follows out his etymological scent of the word ('speechless,' as infons in Latin), and vises it in this vassage to and uses it in this passage to express the imperfection of the loftiest sounds of earth, compared with what shall be hereafter. The several words used have a perceptible, though remote, reference to the three gifts just before mentioned. 'The gift of tongues shall be as the feeble articulations of an infant' (for λαλώ, as applied to those gifts, see xiii. 1, xiv. 2-6, 23): 'the gift of prophecy and discernment of spirits shall be as an infant's half-formed thoughts (pooretr has the double sense of 'thoughts,' and of 'wisdom:' compare the analogous use of σοφία and κυθερνήσεις in xii. 8, 28, in relation to prophecy): the gift of knowledge shall be as the infant's half-formed reasonings' (compare viii. 2: 'If any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know'). νηπίου. 12 βλέπομεν γὰρ ἄρτι δι ἐσόπτρου ἐν αἰνίγματι, τότε δὲ πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον ἀρτι γυνώσκω ἐκ μέρους, τότε ἐξὲτης γώσομα καθῶς καὶ ἐπεγνώσθην ἢ Σνυνὶ δὲ μένει πίστις ἐλπίς ἀγάπη, τὰ τρία ταῦτα: μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη.

12 a babe to vanish away'. For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face: now I know in part, but then 1s shall I know even as also I am known. And now abideth Faith Hope Love these three; but the greatest of these is Love.

őτε in classical Greek would be ἐπειδή.

12. δὶ ἰσύπτρου may be: (1)
'through a window'
'Through a glass.'
or whatever other substance was used for admitting light into ancient houses), in which case compare the Rabbinical saying, 'All the prophets saw through a dark glass, Moses saw through a bright glass.' (Wetstein, Schöttgen ad loc.)

But (2) more probably 'through the means of a mirror,' as J James i. 23; and for the sense, compare 2 Cor. iii. 18. Ancient mirrors were usually (not of glass, but) of polished metal. The expression, 'through (ēwi) a a mirror,' may arise from the illusion that what is seen in the mirror seems to be belind it, and so seen through it.

ἐν αἰνίγματι, 'in a dark similitude,' 'in a mystery' (in the modern sense of that word).

πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον. Τhe whole sentence has an allusion to the vision of God by Moses, as in 2 Cor. iii. 18. Comp. 2 Cor. v. 7, ο δια τέδους; and Numb. xii. 8: στόμα κατά στόμα λαλήσω αὐτῷ, ἐν είδα, καὶ οὐ δι αἰνεγμάτων, καὶ τὴν δίζαν κορίου είδε.

iκ μίρους, κ. τ. λ. 'now my knowledge is partial, then it will be as full as the Divine knowledge.' For the same consciousness of this contrast, see viii. 3; Gal. iv. 9; 2 Cor. iii. 5; Phil. 11. Philo de Cherub. § 32, pp. 159, 160: νῦν ὅτε ζῶμεν γνωριζόμεθα μᾶλλον ἢ γνωρίζομεν.

13. Having duelt on the transitory nature of all other gifts, he concludes by recapitulating what gifts alone are permanent, and by declaring that even of these Love is the greatest.

sun' dè is (not 'at this present time,' distinguished from the future, which would be expressed as in verse 12 by άρτ, but) 'as it is,' as matters stand, amidst the perishable nature of all besides.' (Comp. ν̄ν̄ν̄ ἐ ἐγραψα, v. 11; των ἀὲ χρωτος ἐγήγιρτα, x. 20.)

μένει . . . τὰ τρία ταῦτα, 'there remain unchanged these three great gifts, and these three only.' He has already said that Love cannot fail; and it would seem as if he here recollected the two other virtues which he usually classes with Love, and wished to indicate that they also were immortal. Comp. 1 Thess. i. 3, ' your work of faith and labour of love, and patience of hope: ' 1 Thess, v. 8, 'the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation; and Col. i. 4, 5, 'your faith in Christ Jesus and the love which ye have to all the saints, for the hope that is laid up for you in heaven.' They are specially mentioned as being those qualities which most evidently raise man to a higher world.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XII. 31-XIII. 13.

Such is the variety of gifts set before you; all necessary, none to be despised. But if there be any at which you aim with more than usual ardour, take those which are really the best; and even if you attain these, remember that there is a loftier height, a serener heaven beyond, in comparison with which all, even the best, are as nothing. LOVE alone can prevent the noblest utterances of the gift of tongues from sinking into a jarring discord ; LOVE alone can give reality to the revelations of prophecy, the intuition of knowledge, the energy of faith; LOVE alone can give value even to the most heroic outward acts of selfdenial and beneficence. Look at her as she stands before you. portrayed in her full proportions; look at her kind unruffled countenance, so unlike your factions and rivalries; look at her freedom from the envy with which you regard each other's gifts ; look at her freedom from the display, the false pretensions, the rulgar insolence which disgrace your public meetings; look at her refusal to press her own rights, to take offence, or to bear malice: how unlike your selfish and litigious spirit; look at her sumpathy with all that is good: her endurance, her trustful and honeful character, embracing as it does all that is greatest in her two accompanying graces, FAITH and HOPE. She continues, and so will they with her. For look, lastly, at her imperishable freshness; what a contrast to the transitory character of all other gifts. The gift of tongues shall cease of itself when the occasion for it is gone. The gifts of prophecy and of knowledge, being in their own nature imperfect and partial, shall pass away when this earthly system shall pass away before the coming of that which is perfect. Then, and not before, shall the inarticulate utterances and the half-formed conceptions of our present infantine state be exchanged for the full-grown faculties of the man; then, and not before, shall the dimly-seen images of the earthly glass be exchanged for that perfect vision of Divine things which was enjoyed by Moses when he stood with unveiled face on the mount, and received in his countenance the reflected glory of God Himself. But till that time is come, we can conceive of the future only through these three great gifts, which exist now, and will continue hereafter ; namely, FAITH and HOPE, which live as the handmaids of the greatest of all, LOVE.

THE APOSTOLICAL DOCTRINE OF LOVE.

THE foregoing passage stands alone in the writings of St. Paul, both in its subject, and in its style. This Epistle finds Climax its climax here, as that to the Romans in the conclusion of the of the 8th chapter, or that to the Hebrews, in the Epistle. 11th. Whatever evil tendencies he had noticed before in the Corinthian Church met their true correction in this one gift, To them, whatever it might be to others,-to them, with their factions, their intellectual excitements, their false pretensions, it was all-important. Without this bond of Love he felt that the Christian society of Greece would surely fall to pieces, just as its civil society in former times had appeared to philosophers and statesmen to be destined to dissolution, without the corresponding virtue of $\phi_{\ell}\alpha'a or mutual harmony. Therefore, although in a digression, he rises with the subject into the passionate fervour which in him is only produced by a directly practical object. Unlike the mere rhetorical panegyrics on particular virtues, which are to be found in Philo and similar writers, every word of the description tells with double force, because it is aimed against a real enemy. It is as though, wearied with the long discussions against the sins of the Corinthian Church, he had at last found the spell by which they could be overcome, and uttered sentence after sentence with the triumphant cry of 'Eureka.'

The particular motive for the introduction of the passage in this place was, as we have seen, the wish to impress upon his readers the subordination of gifts of mere display, such as the gift of tongues, to gifts of practical utility, such as prophecy. And analogously the same truth still needs to be impressed: 'to all but one in ten thousand,' it has been well said, 'Christian speculation is barren of great fruits; to all but one in ten thousand, Christian benevolence is fruitful of great thoughts,' Such is the directly practical result of the chapter. But the very style shows that it rises far above any immediate or local occasion. On each side of this chapter the tumult of argument and remonstrance still rages: but within it, all is calm; the sentences move in almost dryntmical melody; the imagery unfolds itself in almost dramatic propriety; the language arranges itself with almost rhetorical accuracy. We can imagine how the Apostle's amanuensis must have paused, to look up in his master's face at the sudden change in the style of his dictation, and seen his countenance lighted up as it had been the face of an angel, as this vision of divine perfection passed before him. What then, let us ask, is the nature and origin of that new element of goodness, of which this is the carliest detailed description?

In the first place, the word dyann is, in this sense, altogether neculiar to the New Testament. It is a remarkable fact that the word, as a substantive, is entirely unto the known to classical Greek. The only passage where it is quoted in Stephens's Thesaurus as occurring, is in Plutarch's Symposium; and there it has been subsequently corrected by Reiske from αγάπης ων to the participle άγαπήσων. The verb άγαπῶν, indeed, is used in classical Greek, but in the lower sense of acquiescence, esteem, or caressing. It is in the LXX, we first find it employed, to designate what we call 'love;' and it is there introduced (probably from its likeness in sound to the Hebrew words 1) to represent אָהַב and ענב (ahab and agab), both words expressive of passionate affection, drawn from the idea of panting, aspiring after a desired object. The substantive άγάπη is used almost entirely for sexual love, namely, in Jer. ii. 2: 2 Sam. xiii. 15, and throughout the Canticles. It only occurs besides, in a more general sense, in Eccles. ix. 1, 6. In all these instances the word is probably suggested by the Hebrew feminine form אָהֶבָה (ahabah). In the New Testament, on the other hand, when used simply, and unexplained, it is equivalent to benevolence based on religious motives. The Old Testament (in the word ahab) exhibited the virtues both of conjugal affection and of friendship 'passing the love of women,' as in the case of David; it exhibited also, throughout the Psalms, the same passionate devotion transferred from man to God; it exhibited, lastly, the same feeling emanating from God Himself towards His peculiar people, the spouse of His choice, the daughter of Zion. The Greek world exhibited in a high degree the virtue of personal friendship, which was, in-

So amongst others βάρις is used as the translation of birah, a palace; γη, for gai, a ravine, and goi, people; βύμος for bamah, a high place;

ειθάρα for citharos, a harp. See Appendix to 'Sinai and Palestine,' deed, so highly esteemed, as to give its name (φιλία) to affection generally. Domestic and conjugal affection, strictly speaking, there was not. The word which most nearly approaches to the modern notion of love (Epus) expressed either a merely sensual admiration of physical beauty, or, in the philosophical language of Plato, an intellectual admiration of ideal beauty. The writers who at Alexandria united the last efforts of Grecian philosophy with the last efforts of Jewish religion, went a step in one sense beyond both the Old Testament and also the Greek literature, though in another sense below them both. Benevolence to man, as man, expressed in the word 'philanthropy' (φιλανθρωπία), occupies a very prominent position in the writings of Philo. But whilst this quality breaks through the narrow limits in which the passionate yearning of the Hebrew dispensation was confined, it loses its intensity. It becomes an abstraction to be panegyrised, not a powerful motive to be acted upon.

In contradistinction to all these, and yet the crown and completion of all, is the Love, or ἀγάπη, of the New 1ts mean. Testament. Whilst it retains all the fervour of the ing.

Hebrew aspiration and desire, and of the personal affection of the Greek, it ranges through as wide a sphere as the comprehensive benevolence of Alexandria. Whilst it retains the religious element that raised the affections of the Hebrew Psalmist to the presence of God, it agrees with the classical and Alexandrian feelings in making its chief object the welfare of man. It is not Religion evaporated into Benevolene, but Benevolence taken up into Religion. It is the practical exemplification of the two great characteristics of Christianity, the union of God with man, the union of religion with morality; Love to man for the sake of Love to God; Love to God showing itself in Love to man.

It is, perhaps, vain to ask by what immediate means this new idea was introduced to the Apostle's mind; it may be that this very passage is the expression of his delight at first In erigin, fully grasping the mighty truth which henceforth was In erigin, never to pass from him. But the impression left by the words rather is, that he assumes it as something already known; new, indeed, in its application to the wants of the Corinthian Church, but recognised as a fundamental part of the Christian revelation. It is perhaps not too much to say that this is one of the ideas derived expressly from what he calls "the revelations of the Lord.' It is, in all probability, from the great example of self-sacrificing love shown in the life and death of Jesus Christ. that the Apostle, and through him the Christian world, has received the truth, that Love to man for the sake of God is the one great end of human existence. 'A new commandment He gave unto us that we should love one another, as He loved us. Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for another.' Until Christ had lived and died, the virtue was almost impossible. The fact of its having come into existence, the urgency with which the Apostle dwells upon it, is itself a proof that he had lived and died as none had ever lived and died before. This is confirmed by observing that the word and idea which thus first appear in the writings of St. Paul receive their full meaning and development in those of St. John. To the minds of both these great Apostles, amidst all their other diversities, 'Love' represented the chief fact and the chief doctrine of Christianity. We can hardly doubt that, in the case of St. John, it was drawn from the example or teaching of Christ Himself. At any rate, the concurrence of the two Apostles in this doctrine is a strong testimony to its derivation from a common source superior to them both.

Finally, it is instructive to contrast the Apostolical view of Love with the later representations of it:—

First, the course of language, here as elsewhere, is a striking proof of the inferiority of the popular conception of the virtue to this its original portraiture. This is exemplified in the two senses which the word 'Charity' (derived from the Latin' version of $\dot{\alpha}\gamma \dot{\alpha}\pi\gamma$) has acquired, at least in the English language.

Ūsually it is employed for 'almsgiving,' as in the phrases an 'act of charity', an 'object of charity', a 'charitable institution.' Yet this is the very sense with which the Apostle especially contrasts his own employment of the word. When be asys, 'though I give my goods to feed the poor, and have not charity, it profitch me nothing,' it is as though he had foreseen the corruption of his own language, and had said, 'though I have in its fullest extent "Clurity" in the sense in which then it is thould properly be used, it proint in the sense in which alone it should properly be used, it profiteth me nothing.' And this primitive contrast between the inward spirit and the outward expression of Love is the more remarkable, because it is specially Eastern religions that have tended to make the act of almsgiving stand for the virtue of which it is but one form. Of the five articles of the Mussulman creed, almsgiving is the only moral truth. In the Jewish religion, at the time of the Christian era, the word corresponding to 'duty' or 'righteousness' had been confined, in like manner, to outward acts of beneficence.1 In the Greek Church, although the word for 'Love' (ἀγάπη) has been preserved from its Western degradation, the word for 'Mercy' (ἐλεημοσύνη) has been corrupted into the visible acts of mercy-so much so that in the Western languages its original meaning has disanneared; and we know it now only in 'eleemosynary' institutions, or in the more familiar form, 'alms,' in which the outward contraction is a fitting type of the contraction of the inward spirit. Against all these corruptions, as well as against the belief, often prevalent in the middle ages, of the necessary duty of indiscriminate bounty, the Anostle's doctrine is a salutary protest.

¹ See note on xiii. 1.

There is another sense in which the English word 'Charity' is sometimes used,—namely, 'toleration' or 'forbearance,' as when we speak of a 'charitable construction,' in 'charity with our neighbours.' But this sense, though founded on the words which describe Charity as 'thinking no evil,' and 'not easily provoked,' inadequately expresses its full signification. The mere passive virtue of toleration, though it is a direct result of Christian Love, is yet but a very small part of it. As there may be almsgiving without Love, so there may be toleration without Love. Here, again, our conceptions of Charity soon 'come to an end,' but this new 'commandment' of Christ and His Apostle 'is exceeding broad.'

Lastly, this Chapter agrees with St. John's representations in setting forth the paramount importance of Christian Love as the highest truth and duty of the Christian dispensation. In the great controversies which have agitated has doctrines of Christendom, this supremency of Love, both as revelation of the Divine essence, and as the duty of man, has hardly been recognised. Whilst churches and nations have been runt asunder for the sake of proclaiming some statement respecting the nature of subordinate gifts, such as faith and knowledge, or of subordinate means of grace, such as the searament or the modes of Christian worship, few have heeded, still fewer have maintained for life and death, the supremney of what the Apostles declare to be the greatest of all gifts, the most unfailing of all the ways of approach to God.

¹ See note on 2 Cor. ix. 9.

Yet the well-known story of the last words of St. John, that in the command of mutual love was contained the substance of the Gospel, does not go beyond the declaration of St. Paul, that of all the gifts of God, Charity is the most excellent, the most immortal; that even Faith and Hope are inferior to Love. To a certain extent this truth has been acknowledged in later times by the veneration shown to persons who have specially exhibited this virtue, whether in its passive form, as Ken. Fencion, Fletcher of Madeley, or in its active form, as Xavier and Elizabeth of Hungary. These, rather than Dominic or Calvin, Luther or Loyola, are the characters which the world especially calls by the name of 'Christian.' This Chapter, too, has, even from unwilling witnesses, always commanded assent. 'Nothing,' says John Wesley, 'is more common than to find even those who deny the authority of the Holy Scriptures, yet affirming, "This is my religion: that which is described in the thirteenth Chapter of the Corinthians." Nav. even a Jew, a Spanish physician, then settled at Savannah, used to say, with great earnestness, "that Paul of Tarsus was one of the finest writers I have ever read. I wish the thirteenth Chapter of his first letter to the Corinthians were wrote in letters of gold; and I wish every Jew were to carry it with him wherever he went." He judged (and herein he certainly judged right) that this single chapter contained the whole of true religion.'1

'Deus non est fides,' says Bengel, 'Deus non est spcs, sed Deus est Amor.'

Wesley, Sermons, vol. iii. p. 40.

THE GIFT OF TONGUES AND THE GIFT OF PROPHESYING.

XIV. 1-40.

At this point of the Apostle's argument it becomes necessary to form some notion of the nature of these gifts and their relation to each other.

I. The gift of 'prophesying,' or of the 'prophets.' The word 'Prophet' (προφήτης) was derived in the first instance from the interpreters who spoke forth or 'l'Roexpounded the unintelligible oracles of the Pythoness of Delphi, or the rustling of the leaves of Dodona. In a metaphorical sense it was used of poets, as interpreters of the Gods or Muses. It was then adopted by the LXX, as the best equivalent of the nabi or 'prophet' of the Old Testament. According to the common Jewish tradition, prophecy expired with Malachi: and there is no recorded instance of it between his time and the Christian era. It is true that the name is applied to Zacharias and Anna, and also to the Baptist and to Christ.1 But the frequency of the gift was regarded as the special sign of a new dispensation, and as such its universal diffusion is described at the day of Pentecost. 'Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy . . . and on my servants and on my hand-maidens I will nour out . . . of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy.'2 In the subsequent narrative of the Acts, prophets and prophetesses are described in all Christian congregationsat Jerusalem, at Antioch, at Casarea.3 In all the Enistles, the gift of prophecy occupies a conspicuous place. The Apocalypse is called 'a prophecy,' and it often mentions 'the spirit of prophecy,' and 'the prophets' in the Christian Church.5 In all these cases in the New Testament as in the Old, and it may be added in the Koran, the prominent idea is, not that of prediction, but of delivering inspired messages of warning, exhortation, ¹ Matt. xiv. 5, xxi. 11, 46; Mark xi. 32; Luke i. 67, 76, ii. 36, vii. 26, 28, 30, xiii. 33; John iv. 10, ix.

Aets xiii. 1; xv. 32; xxi. 0.
 Rev. i. 3, xxii. 7, 10, 18.
 Ibid. xix. 10; xi. 3, 6, 10, 18; xvi. 6; xviii. 20, 24; xxii. 6, 0.

² Acts ii. 17, 18.

and instruction: 'building up, exhorting, and comforting;'
'convincing, judging, and making manifest the secrets of the heart.' The ancient classical and Hebrew sense prevails everywhere. Epimenides and Mahomet on the one hand, Blijah and Paul on the other, are called 'prophets,' not because they fortold the future, but because they enlightened the present.'

II. 'The gift of tongues' is a much more difficult subject. The most important passages relating to it are (1) Those contained in this Chapter, and the allusions to it Tongres. in xii. 10, 28, as 'divers kinds of tongues' (yévn γλωσσών), and xiii. 1: 'Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels.' (2) Mark xvi. 17: 'They shall speak with new tongues' (γλώσσαις λαλήσουσι καιναίς). (3) The descriptions of the gift at the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 3 -21; at the conversion of Cornelius, Acts x. 46; at the conversion of the twelve disciples of John the Baptist, Acts xix. 6. (4) The more doubtful allusions, Luke xxi. 15: 'I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay.' Eph. v. 18: ' Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess (compare Acts ii. 13); but be filled with the Spirit; speaking "in" yourselves (λαλούντες έαυτοίς) in usalms and hymns and spiritual songs. singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. 1 Thess, v. 19: 'Quench not the Spirit; despise not prophesyings.' 1 Peter iv. 11: " Each one as he " has received " a " gift. if any "one" speak (λαλεί), let him speak as the oracles of God.'

The only allusion to this gift as still existing after the Apostolic times, is in Irensus': 'We hear many brethren in the Church, having prophetical gifts, and by the Spirit speaking in all kinds of languages.' Many speculations occur in the later Fathers on the subject; but their historical testimony to the nature of the gifts may all be summed up in one sentence of Chrysostum, in his comment on this chapter.' This whole place is very obscure; but the obscurity is produced by our ignorance of the facts described, which are such as then used to occur, but now no longer take place.'

From these data we may attain the following conclusions :-

¹ 1 Cor. xiv. 3. ² Ibid. 24, 25.

³ So also formerly in English; as 4 A in Taylor's 'Liberty of Prophesying.'

Adv. Har. vi. 0.

The gift in question is described as something entirely new in the Apostolical age. 'They shall speak with new tongues.'1 The effect on the spectators at the day of 1. Its no-Pentecost is of universal astonishment.² It is described as the special mark following upon conversion 3 (whether immediately before baptism 4, or immediately after 5). It is, moreover, spoken of as in an especial manner a gift ' of the Spirit,' that is, the new manifestation of God in the hearts of Christians. Hence its appearance at the day of Pentecost : 'They were all filled with the Holv Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance.'6 Hence the 'speaking with tongues' was the sign that Cornelius had 'received the Holy Spirit.'7 Hence, when Paul placed his hands on the disciples at Ephesus, 'the Holy Spirit came upon them, and they spake with tongues.' 8 Hence the very name of 'the Spirit' and 'spiritual gifts' seems to have been appropriated to this gift, at Corinth and elsewhere. Compare the argument in xii. 1—13, and the particular expressions in xiv, 1, 12, 14, 37; and perhaps 1 Thess. v. 19; and Eph. v. 18.

It was closely connected with the gift of prophesying. This appears not only from these Chapters where the two 2. Its conare always compared, as being, though different, yet nexion with homogeneous (see xii. 10, 28; xiii. 1; xiv. 1-6, prophesy-22-25), but from the notices in the Acts. In Acts

ii. 17-21, Peter, in his justification of himself and the other Apostles, describes it under no other name than 'prophesying;' and in Acts xix. 6, the converts are described 'speaking with tongues and prophesying.' To the same effect is the connexion in 1 Thess. v. 19, where 'quench not the Spirit' is followed by 'despise not prophesyings,'

It was distinguished from prophesying by consisting, not of direct warning, exhortation, or prediction, but of 3. Devothanksgiving, praise, prayer, singing, and other expressions of devotion: 'pray with a tongue;' 'my spirit prays; 'I sing in the spirit; 'thou givest thanks in the Spirit; '9 'We hear them speaking the wonderful works of God,'10 'They heard them speaking with tongues, and mag-

¹ Mark xvi. 17.

² Acts ii. 7, 12. Mark xvi. 17.

Acts x. 46.
 Ibid. xix. 6.

⁶ Acts ii. 4. 7 Ibid. x. 44, 46, 47. * Ibid. xix. 6.

^{9 1} Cor. xiv. 14-16. 10 Acts ii. 11.

nifying God.' Speaking . . in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody . . . to the Lord, giving thanks always.' 2

It would appear that these expressions of devotion were out-4. Exercs pourings of the heart and feelings, rather than of the sien of the understanding; so that the actual words and meaning were almost always unintelligible to the bystanders, sometimes to the speakers themselves. 'He that speaketh with a tongue speaketh not to men, but to God; for no one heareth; and in the Spirit he speaketh mysteries; . . . he that speaketh with a tongue edifieth kimself' [and not the Church].3 'If I come to you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you?'4 'Let him that speaketh with a tongue pray that he may interpret,'s 'If I pray with a tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.'6 'If thou givest thanks in the Spirit, how shall he that filleth the place of the unlearned say Amen to thy giving of thanks; for he knoweth not what thou sayest.'7 'I had rather speak five words with my understanding that I may instruct others also, than ten thousand words with a tongue,'s 'Making melody in your hearts.' To the same effect are the passages which describe the impression produced on bystanders: 'If all speak with tongues, and the unlearned or unbelievers come in, will they not say that ye are mad?'10 'Others mocking said, They are full of new wine,'11 Compare also Eph. v. 19, where the injunction 'to be filled with the Spirit' and to 'speak in themselves.' is preceded by the prohibition, 'be not drunk with wine.'

Thus far there is no difficulty in combining the several accounts. It was a transcer cestary, which, in moments of great religious ferovur, especially at the moment of conversion, scized the early believers; and this fervour vented itself in expressions of thanksgiving, in fragments of pashrody or hymuody and prayer, which to the speaker himself conveyed an irresistible sense of communion with God, and to the bystander an impression of some extraordinary manifestation of power, but not necessarily any instruction or teaching, and sometimes even having the appearance of wild excitement, like that of madness

```
<sup>1</sup> Acts x. 46.

<sup>2</sup> Eph. v. 19.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Cor. xiv. 2, 4.
```

⁴ Ibi l. 6. 5 Ibid. 13. 6 Ibid. 14.

 ^{7 1} Cor. xiv. 16.
 8 Ibid. 19.
 8 Eph. v. 19.
 10 Cor. xiv. 23.

¹¹ Acta ii. 13, 15.

or intoxication. It was the most emphatic sign to each individual believer that a power mightier than his own was come into the world; and in those who, like the Apostle Paul, possessed this gift in a high degree, 'speaking with tongues more than they all,' 1 it would, when combined with the other more remarkable gifts which he possessed, form a fitting mood for the reception of 'God's secrets' (uvarnous)2, and of 'unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for man to utter,' 'being caught into the third heaven,' and into 'Paradise.'3 And thus the nearest written example of this gift is that exhibited in the abrupt style and the strange visions of the Anocalypse, in which, almost in the words of St. Paul, the Prophet is described as being 'in the Spirit on the Lord's day,' and 'hearing a voice as of a trumpet,'4 and seeing 'a door open in heaven,' and 'a throne set in heaven,' and 'the New Jerusalem,' 'the river of life,' and 'the tree of life,' 6

But a difficulty arises when we ask, what was the special form which these outnourings of devotion and these prophetic trances assumed? This must be sought in . The Tongues. the names by which they were called: (1) ' Speaking with tongues' (λαλεῦν γλώσσαις); 'speaking with a tongue' (λαλών γλώσση). (2) 'The tongues' (ai γλώσσαι); 'a tongue' (γλώσσαν) 10; 'kinds of tongues' (γένη γλωσσών). 11 (3) 'Speaking with other tongues' (λαλεῖν ἐτέραις γλώσσαις)¹². 'speaking with new tongues' (γλώσσαις λαλήσουσιν καιναίς),13

The use of the word 'tongue' (γλώσσα) need not necessarily imply a distinct language of a nation, which in the New Testament is usually expressed by διάλεκτος. 14 We may therefore conclude that the word γλώσσα was applied to this spiritual gift, partly from the fact that the word in classical Greek was sometimes applied to strange uncommon expressions. as in Aristotle 15, partly from the circumstance that in the use of this gift 'the tongue' was literally the organ employed, the mind, as it were, remaining passive, whilst the tongue gave

10 1 Cor. xiv. 26.

11 Ibid. xii. 28. 12 Acts ii. 4.

13 Mark xvi. 17.

¹ 1 Cor. xiv. 18,

Ibid. ii. 7, iv. 1, xiv. 2, xv. 51.
 2 Cor. xii. 4—6.

⁴ Rev. i. 10

⁵ Ibid. iv. 1, 2. ⁶ Ibid. xxi. 1, xxii. 1, 2. ⁷ 1 Cor. xiv. 5, 6, 18, 23, 39; Acts x. 46, xix. 6,

^{8 1} Cor. xiv. 2, 4, 13, 14, 19, 27.

⁹ Ibid. 22,

^{2,} xxvi. 14. The exceptions are in the expressions, 'nations and peoples and tongues,' Rev. v. 0, vii. 0, x. 11, xi. 0, xiii. 7, xiv. 6, xvii. 15.

¹⁶ Acts i. 19, ii. 6, 8, xxi. 40, xxii. 15 Rhet. iii. 3, 4; Poet. xxi. G.

utterance to words of which the speaker was hardly conscious. That these meanings were both intended to be conveyed, is confirmed by the manner in which kindred expressions are used. When, in xiii, 1, the Apostle says, 'Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels' (ται̂s γλώσσαις τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαλώ και τών άγγελων), the last word shows that he was not thinking of languages or dialects, but of every conceivable form of speech or style. And when, in xiv. 9, he says, 'So, ye, unless ye utter by the tonque (διὰ τῆς γλώσσης) a clear sound, he uses the word in reference to the phrase so often repeated in the immediate context, 'speaking with a tongue' (λαλών γλώσση). Probably, however, this peculiarity of style or speech was, if not always, yet occasionally heightened by the introduction of foreign words or sentences into the utterances thus made. The expressions 'kinds of tongues,'1 'new tongues,'2 other tongues,' though they need not of necessity imply anything more than a variety or a novelty of modes of expression. yet become more appropriate if something of a new language, or of different languages, were united with these new or various modes. This is the impression conveyed by the comparison of the 'speaker with tongues' to a 'barbarian' (i. e. a foreigner). and of the sign of tongues generally to the sign of foreign languages- other tongues and other lips' (έτερογλώσσοιε καὶ γείλεσω έτέρων)5-spoken of in Isaiah xxviii. 11. And such, however it may be explained in detail, must be the meaning of the first recorded appearance of the gift on the day of Pentecost. The stress laid on the variety of nations there assembled, and the expressions 6 'every man heard them in his own language' (τη ίδία διαλέκτω), 'how hear we every man in our own language, wherein we were born?' 'we hear them speak in our tonques' (ἐν ταῖς ἡμετέραις γλώσσαις), can hardly be explained on any other supposition than that the writer meant to describe that, at least to the hearers, the sounds spoken seemed to be those of distinct languages and real dialects. If this account is to be taken literally, it would imply that the fervent expressions of thanksgiving which on that occasion, as on others, constituted the essential part of the gift, were so far couched in foreign dialects as to be intelligible to the natives of the several countries. The emphatic record of 4 1 Cor. xiv. 11.

^{1 1} Cor. xii. 10, 28.

² Mark xvi. 17.

Acts ii. 4.

Ibid. 21, 22,

⁶ Acts ii. 6, 8, 11.

this peculiar characteristic of the gift, viewed in connexion with the general spirit and object of the Acts, seems designed to point out the gift of various tongues as the natural result and sign of the first public manifestation of a religion specially designed to break through the barriers which divide man from man and nation from nation. Such a significance, however suitable to the occasion of the first revelation of a Universal Church, would not be equally appropriate in the more ordinary manifestations of the gift. True, the effect described as occuring on the day of Pentecost might grow out of it. But, even here, as Xavier is said to have understood and made himself understood by the Indians, without knowing their language, and as, even in common life, persons in a highly wrought state of feeling are enabled to understand each other, though not speaking the same language, so this gift, which, above all others, lifted the speaker out of himself, might have the same effect. And the peculiar form of language ordinarily used as the vehicle of communication at that time, would contribute to the same result. Hellenistic Greek, compounded as it was of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, and instinct with that peculiar life and energy which we see it assume in the various styles of the New Testament, epecially in St. Paul and in the Apocalypse, was almost in itself a 'speaking' in 'divers kinds of tongues.' It has often been remarked, that the spread of this dialect by the conquests of Alexander was a providential preparation for the spread of the Gospel; and there is nothing more strange in the development of this peculiar language into the gift of tongues, than in the development of the natural powers of strength and intellect into the gifts of 'ministry,' of 'wisdom,' and of 'knowledge.' All the various elements of Aramaic and Hellenic speech, latent in the usual language of the time, would be quickened under the power of this gift into a new life, sometimes intelligible, sometimes unintelligible to those who heard it, but always expressive of the vitality and energy of the Spirit by which it was animated.

Still it must be observed, that even if foreign words were always part of its exercises (of which there is no proof), there is no instance and no probability of its having been ever used as ameans of instructing foreign nations, or of superseding the necessity of learning foreign languages. Probably in no age of the world has such a gift been less needed. The chief sphere of the Apostles must have been within the Roman Empire, and within that sphere Greek or Latin, but especially Greek, must have been everywhere understood. Even on the day of Pentecost. the speech of Peter, by which the first great conversion was effected, seems to have been in Greek, which probably all the nations assembled would sufficiently understand; and the speaking of foreign dialects is nowhere alluded to by him as any part of the event which he is vindicating and describing. The Epistles, in like manner, were all written in Greek, though many of them are addressed to the very nations whose presence is described in the Acts on that occasion; the people of Judæa, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, and the dwellers at Rome. When the Lycaonians addressed Paul and Barnabas in the speech of Lycaonia 1, there is no mention of Paul and Barnabas answering them in that language. A very ancient tradition describes Peter as employing Mark for an interpreter.2 Irenæus, who alone of the early Fathers alludes to the gift of tongues, and that in a manner which seems to imply diversity of language 3, was himself obliged to learn the Gaulish language. And, lastly, the whole chapter now in question is inconsistent with such a supposition. The Church of Corinth is described as full of speakers with tongues, and vet evidently no work of conversion was going on, nor any allusion made to such a work as a possible object for the gift. Yet had such an object been within even its distant scope, the argument almost imperatively demanded that the Apostle should have said. 'Why do you waste so great a gift on those who cannot profit by it, when you might go forth beyond the limits of the Empire to preach with it to the Scythian and Indian tribes?'

The subject must not be left without reference to similar likes in manifestations which may serve, either by way of continuous from trast or resemblance, to illustrate its main peculiar-legation; ities. In the Pagan world the Apostle's would, themselves remind us of the unconscious uterances which accompanied the delivery of the ancient oracles, when the Pythoness with her ejaculations stood to the interpreters of the oracle in a relation similar to that which existed between the continuous continuous and the continuous co speakers with tongues and the prophets. In the Jewish dispensation we may compare the burst of song and trance, which accompanied the first great display of the Acts xiv. 11.

 Eus. II. E. iii, 39.

Adv. Hær. vi. 6.
 1 Cor. xii. 2.

prophetical spirit in the time of Samuel—'a company of prophets coming down from the high place with a pastlery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them,' and prophesying; and 'the Spirit of the Lord' descending upon those who witnessed the spectacle, however unprepared for it before, so that they too caught the inspiration 'and prophesied also,' and were 'turned into other men,' and passed days and nights in a state of estacy and seclusion.' The trance of Saul, compared with the Psalms of David, is a true likeness of the 'tongues' compared with the 'prophesyings' of Corinth.

But it is in subsequent periods that the nearest outward likenesses to the gift of 'tongues' can be found. The wide difference between the character, intellectual, moral, and spiritual, of the early Christian Church, and that of the sects in which such later manifestations have appeared, places a deep gulf between the Apostolical gift and these doubtful copies. Still, as the preaching, the teaching, the government, the gifts of knowledge, of wisdom, of ministry, which appear in the Apostolical age, are illustrated by the analogous institutions and facultics of less sacred times, so the excitement and freedom of the early Church may be illustrated no less from the expressions of later enthusiasm. Such phenomena, however inferior to the manifestations of the Apostolical times, have their origin in the same mysterious phase of human life and human nature, which, with so much besides of the most opposite character, was included in the wide range of the spiritual influences of Apostolical Christianity.

The earliest of these manifestations was the alleged eestatic state of the Montanists at the close of the second century.

"There is at present a sister amongst us," says Tertullian, who has obtained the gift of revelations, which ahe from Mon-receives in the congregation or solenn sanctuary by tusies—centary in the Spirit, who has converse with angels, sometimes even with the Lord, and sees and hears sacred truths (socromestic), and discerns the hearts of some, and ministers remedies to those who want them. Also, according as the Scriptures are read, or the Palma sung, or exhortations (allocutions) uttered, or petitions presented, so from these several sources materials are furnished for her visions. We had happened to be discussing something about the soul, when this sister was in the Spirit. After the conclusion of the service, and the dismissal of the congregation, she, after her usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of the recorded usual manner of the relating her visions (for they are carefully recorded usual manner of the relating her visions (for the

^{1 1} Sam. x. 5, 6, 10; xix. 20-24.

that they may be examined), amongst other remarks, said, "the soul was shown to me in a bodily form, the spirit appeared, but not of an empty or shapeless quality, but as something which gave hope of being held, tender and bright, and of an aerial hue, and altogether of human form."

The paroxysms which attended the preaching of Wesley furnish an instance in later times. Another, more nearly to the point, was the utterance of strange sounds among from the the persecuted Protestants of the South of France, Prophess of the beginning of the last century, commonly Ceremines; called the 'Prophets of Cevennes.' Descriptions of this movement are to be found in the 'Histoire des Pasteurs,' by Peyrat; the 'Troubles de Cevennes,' by Gibelin; and the 'Eginse de Désert,' by C. Oquerci. Their appearance in England excited the ridicule of Lord Shafterbury in his 'Characteristics,' and called forth, in answer to him, an 'Impartial Account of the Prophets,' published by an eyewitness.' These accounts are chiefly crearkable, especially the last-named, as bearing testimony to the good character and general sobriety of the persons professing to be inspired.

But the most important of these manifestations, as the one claiming the most direct connexion with the Apostolical gifts, was the so-called 'gift of tongues' in the followers of Mr. Irving, about 1831—1833. Of the exercise of this gift accounts are here subjoined from two eye-witnesses: the first a believer in its Divine origin at the time he wrote; the second a believer and actor in the transactions which he describes, but at the time that he wrote, rejecting their Divine, though still maintaining their supernatural (though diabolical) origin.

(1.) 'As an instance of the extraordinary change in the powers of the human voice when under inspiration, I may here mention the case of an individual whose natural voice was inharmonious, and who besides had no ear for keeping time. Yet even the voice of this person, when singing in the Spirit, could pour forth a rich strain of melody, of which each note was muscla, and uttered with a sweetness and power of expression that was truly astonishing, and, what is still more singular, with a gradually increasing velocity into a rapidity, yet distinctness of utterance, which is inconceivable by those who have nover witnessed the like; and yet, with all this apparently breathless haste, there was not in reality the slightest ugitation of body or of mind. In other instances the voice is deep and powerfully impressive. I cannot describe it better than by saying that it approaches nearly to what might be considered a perfect state of the voice, passing far beyond the energies of its natural strength, and at times so load an one only to fill the whole bouse, but to be heard at a considerable distance; and though often accompanied by an apparently great mental energy and muncular exertion of the whole body, yet in truth there was not the slightest disturbance in either; on the contrary, there was present a transquillity and composure both of body and mind, the very opposite to any, even the least, degree of excitement.

A letter to a Friend.' London; Morphew, 1800.

'Every attempt at describing these manifestations, so as to convey an accurate knowledge of them to others, is sure to fail, since, to have any adequate perception of their power, they must be both seen and felt. Yet, were it otherwise, my conscience would scarcely allow me the liberty of entering into so minute a detail; for the consciousness of the presence of God in these manifestations is fraught with such a holy solemnity of thought and feeling, as leave neither leisure nor inclination for curious observation. In a person alive to the presence of the Holy Ghost, and overwhelmed by His manifestations beside and around him, and deeply conscious that upon his heart naked and exposed rests the eye of God, one thought alone fills the soul, one way of utterance is heard, "God be merciful to me a sinner." Nor can the eve be diverted from the only sight that is then precious to it, far more precious than life itself; "The Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." 1

(2.) 'After one or two of the brethren had read and prayed, Mr. T. was made to speak two or three words very distinctly, and with an energy and depth of tone which seemed to me extraordinary, and it fell upon me as a supernatural utternoe which I ascribed to the power of God; the words were in a tongue I did not understand. In a few minutes Miss E. C. broke out in an utternace in English which, as to matter and manner, and the influence it had upon me, I at once bowed to as the utternace of the Spirit of God. Those who have heard the powerful and commanding utternace need no description of the contract of the co

A. Brief Account of a Visit to Scotland. Published by J. Nisbet, some of the Brethren in the West of London, 1831, pp. 28, 20.

feeling of awe and reverence which this produced, I was myself seized upon by the power, and in much struggling against it was made to cry out, and myself to give out a confession of my own sin in the matter for which we were rebuked.' 'There was in me, at the time of the utterance, very great excitement; and vet I was distinctly conscious of a power acting upon me beyond the more power of excitement. So distinct was this power from the excitement, that in all my trouble and doubt about it, I never could attribute the whole to excitement.1 I read the fourth chapter of Malachi; as I read the power came upon me, and I was made to read in the power. My voice was raised far beyond its natural pitch. with constrained repetitions of parts, and with the same inward unlifting, which at the presence of the power I had always before experienced.' 2 'Whilst sitting at home a mighty power came upon me, but for a considerable time no impulse to utterance; presently, a sentence in French was vividly set before my mind, and under an impulse to utterance, was spoken. Then, in a little time, sentences in Latin were in like manner uttered; and, with short intervals, sentences in many other languages, judging from the sound and the different exercise of the enunciating organs. My wife, who was with me, declared some of them to be Italian and Spanish; the first she can read and translate, the second she knows but little of. In this case she was not able to interpret nor retain the words as they were uttered. All the time of these utterances I was greatly tried in mind. After the first sentence an impulse to utterance continued on me, and most painfully I restrained it, my conviction being that, until something was set before me to utter, I ought not to yield my tongue to utterance. Yet I was troubled by the doubt, what could the impulse mean, if I were not to yield to it? Under the trial, I did vield my tongue for a few moments; but the utterance that broke from me seemed so discordant that I concluded the impulse, without words given, was a temptation, and I restrained it, except as words were given me, and then I yielded. Sometimes single words were given me, and sometimes sentences, though I could neither recognize the words nor sentences as any language I knew, except those which were French or Latin.3 . . . My persuasion concerning the unknown tongue, as it is called (in which I myself was very little exercised), is, that it is no language whatever, but a mere collection of words and sentences; and in the lengthened discourses is,

Narrative of Facts characterising the Supernatural Manifestations, in Members of Mr. Irving's Congregation and other Individuals, in England and Scotland, and formerly in the writer himself, by Robert Baxter: 2nd edition, Nisbet, London, 1833, pp. 5-7.

Narrative of Facts, &c. p. 12.
 Ibid. pp. 133, 134.

most of it, a jargon of sounds; though I can conceive, when the power is very great, that it will assume much of the form of a connected oration.

It must again be repeated that those instances are brought forward, not as examples of the Apostolical gift, but The Apoas illustrations of it. But, however inferior they stle's enmay have been to the appearances of which they deavour to restrain were imitations or resemblances, they yet serve to the use of show the possibility of the same combination of the gift of voice, and eestacy, and unknown or foreign words, as has been described in the case of the Apostolic gift; they show also how, even when accompanied by extravagance and fanaticism, such a manifestation could still be, in a high degree, impressive and affecting. It was the glory of the Apostolical age that, instead of dwelling exclusively on this gift, or giving it a prominent place, as has been the case in the sects of later days, the allusions to it are rare and scanty, and (in the Chapter now before us) even disparaging. The Corinthian Christians. indeed, regarded it as one of the highest manifestations of spiritual influence; but this was the very tendency which the Apostle sought to repress. The object of this Section of the Epistle, as of the whole discussion on spiritual gifts of which it forms a part, is to restrain, moderate, and reduce to its proper subordination the fervour, the eccentricity, so to speak, occasioned by these gifts, and to maintain beyond and above them the eternal superiority of the moral and religious elements which Christianity had sanctioned or introduced.

In this respect, as in many others, the mission of the Apostle was analogous to that of the ancient prophets. There Analogous was, indeed, in the early Christian Church no fear to the analogous was, indeed, in the Lawis party of an undue develop—served which the Frophets and Psalmists, from Samuel and Psalmists, from Samuel and Psalmists, from Samuel and Psalmists, from Samuel and Psalmists, the David downwards, had so constantly lifted up their voices to assert the supreme importance of justice, mercy, and truth; of obedience above ascrifice; of a broken and contrite spirit above burnt offerings of bulls and goats. It was from an opposite quarter that these great spiritual vertices were endangered in the beginning of the Christian Church; but the danger was hardly less formidable. The attractions of miraculous power, of conscious impulses of a Divine presence, of a speech and an eestatic state which struck all beholders with astonishment, were the temptations which, amongst the primitive Gentile Christians, threatened to withdraw the Church from the truth, the simplicity, and the soberness of Christ and of Paul, as the stately ceremonial of the Jewish worship had, in ancient times, had the like effect in withdrawing the nation of Israel from the example of Abraham and the teaching of Moses. That the gifts were not less necessary to sustain the first faith of the Apostolical Christians, than the Levitical rites were to sustain that of the Jewish people, does but render the illustration more exact. Isaiah and Amos protested against the corruptions of the ancient Jewish priesthood. The Apostle himself, in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, protested against circumcision and the rites of the Mosaic Law. So in this chapter he protests against all those tendencies of the human mind which delight in displays of Divine power, more than in displays of Divine wisdom or goodness,-which place the evidence of God's Spirit more in sudden and wonderful frames of feeling and devotion than in acts of usefulness and instruction,-which make religion selfish and individual rather than social. Gregory the Great warned Augustine of Canterbury not to rejoice that spirits were subject to him by miraculous power, but that his name was written in the Book of Life through the conversions which he had effected. The attempts of Paley to rest Christianity solely upon its external evidence have, in our own times, been rejected by a higher and more comprehensive philosophy. The great body of the Christian Church has in all ages, given little heed to the extraordinary displays of power, real or pretended, by particular sects or individuals. In all these cases the warning of the Apostle in this Chapter has been at hand, to support the more rational and the more dignified course (if so it may without offence be called), which minds less enlightened, and consciences less alive to the paramount greatness of moral excellence, may have been induced to despise. The Apostle's declaration, that 'he himself spake with tongues' 'more than they all,' when combined with his other qualities, is a guarantee that the Anostolical gift of tongues was not imposture or fanaticism. But, on the other hand, his constant language respecting it is no less a guarantee that gifts such as these were the last that he would have brought forward in vindication or support of the Gospel which he preached. The excitable temperament of Eastern as compared with Western nations may serve to explain to us, how conditions of mind, like that implied in the gift of tongues, should have accompanied without disturbing a faith so sober, so lofty, so dispassionate, as that of the Apostle. But it also makes that soberness the more remarkable in the Apostle born and bred in this very Oriental atmosphere, where, as is still shown by the exercises of the Mussulman dervishes, nothing is too wild to be incorporated into religious worship; where, as is still shown by the ready acceptance of the legends of Mahomet and the Mussulman saints, nothing is too extravagant to be received as a miracle. He acknowledged the fact, he claimed the possession, of this extraordinary power; and yet he was endowed with the wisdom and the courage to treat it as always subordinate, as often even useless and needless.

Narrative of Facts, &c. pp. 134, 135.

THE SUPERIORITY OF PROPHESTING TO SPEAKING WITH TONGUES.

ΧΙΥ. ¹Διώκετε τὴν ἀγάπην, ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ πνευματικά, μᾶλλον δὲ ἴνα προφητεύητε. ²ὁ γὰρ λαλῶν γλώσση οὐκ ἀνθρώποις λαλεῖ, ἀλλὰ ゚θεῷ· οὐδεἰς γὰρ ἀκούει, πνεύματι

* τῶ Θεῶ.

1 Follow after *Love, *but seek zealously the' spiritual gifts, 2 but rather that ye may prophesy. For he that speaketh in a tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no *rone

xiv. 1. The Apostle, having concluded his description of Love, for a moment pauses before he returns to the special subject from which this description had been a digression, and breathes one more fervent commendation of it to the Continuians: Fellow, used in Romans ix. 30, 31, xii. 15, xiv. 19; 1 Thessalonian to 15, xiv. 19; 1 Thessalonia ζηλοῦτε ἐễ τὰ πνευματικά, 'you are right in earnestly desiring the gifts of the Spirit.' For ζηλοῦτε, see note on xii. 31. τὰ πνευματικά is 'the gifts of the Spirit' generally, but with a special reference to the gift of tongues.

μάλλον ἐξ ένα προφητώντς.
'but more than anything else desire the gift of prophecy.' Γνα is here passing into the Romaic sense, in which it is used as a substitute for the infinitive.
Compare for this use, verse 12;
and Matthew vii. 12; Mark vi.
8, 25.

2. Now follow the reasons for his preference of prophesying to speaking with tongues, as derived from the greater usefulness of prophesying. It is a particular inference from the general truth, which he has just given in his describition of Love.

The first contrast is between the isolation of the speaker with tongues by his communion with God alone, and the usefulness of the prophet to others by his acting as a teacher.

ουδείς ἀκούει, i. e. 'hears so as to understand,' as in verse 16, our ofcer. He does not mean literally that no sounds were heard. Compare for the same ambiguity the account of St. Paul's conversion, Acts ix. 7. where his companions are described as 'hearing the voice' (ἀκούοντες τῆς φωνῆς); but in xxii. 9, as 'not hearing it' (την φωνήν ούς ήκουσαν). Comp. also Mark iv. 33: 'He spake the word unto them . . . as they were able to hear ' (ἀκούειν). Gen. xi. 7: 'Let us confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech.' xlii. 23: 'They knew not that Jo-seph understood.' Isaiah xxxvi. 11: 'We understand the Syrian language' (all acover in LXX.).

δέ λαλεί μυστήρια. ⁸ο δέ προφητεύων ανθρώποις λαλεί οίκοδομήν και παράκλησιν και παραμυθίαν. 4ό λαλών γλώσση έαυτὸν οἰκοδομεῖ, ὁ δὲ προφητεύων ἐκκλησίαν οἰκοδομεί. 5θέλω δὲ πάντας ὑμᾶς λαλεῖν γλώσσαις, μᾶλλον δὲ ἴνα προφητεύητε· μείζων εδὲ ὁ προφητεύων ἡ ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσαις, έκτὸς εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύη, ἴνα ἡ ἐκκλησία οἰκοδο-

* who for $6.

3" heareth, "but in the spirit he speaketh mysteries: but he that prophesieth speaketh unto men edification and exhortation 4 and roonsolation. He that speaketh in a tongue edifieth 5 himself, but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. would that ve all spake with tongues, but rather that ve prophesied: 'but greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church μυστήρια. Here, as elsewhere, 'God's secrets;' here, however, not, as elsewhere, in the sense of secrets revealed, but in the sense (nearly approaching to the modern meaning of the word 'mystery') of secrets concealed. The only other instance is Rev. xvii. 5: 'Mystery, Babylon the Great,' &c.

3. οἰκοδομήν καὶ παράκλησιν καὶ παραμυθίαν. These three words convey the object of Christian prophesving :-

οικοδομήν, 'building up by successive stages of enlightenment and advancement in goodness.' Compare especially Eph. iv. 12, 13, παράκλησις, 'exhortation' or 'consolation' (see note on 2 Cor. i. 3), as in the word maράκλητος, 'comforter' which may mean either 'strengthener' or 'consoler.' How closely connected was this gift with prophesying, may be seen in the fact that the name of 'Barnabas,' 'the son of phophecy,' is rendered in Acts iv. 36 vioc maοακλήσεως παραμυθία shares with παράκλησις the sense of 'consolation,' but with a more tender shade of meaning. The form wapaμύθιον occurs, as here, in conjunction with παράκλησις, in Phil. ii. 1: 'If any consolation, if any comfort of love; ' and παραμυθούμενοι with παρακαλούνrec, in 1 Thess. ii. 11. Bengel: 'Exhortatio tollit tarditatem;

consolatio tristitiam. 4. The second contrast is between the speaker with tongues. as building up only his own soul; and the prophet, as building up the souls of the Christian congregation. This mention of the edification of the speaker's self is not inconsistent with verses 13, 14, which imply that he did not understand what he said. The consciousness of ecstacy and communion with God would have an elevating effect, independently of any impression produced on the understanding. See note on verse 14.

For "ra, see note on verse 1. έκτὸς εἰ μή. Here, as in xv. 2; 1 Tim. v. 19, μη is pleonastic. διερμηνεύη, i. e. the speaker himself. See verse 13.

μὴν λάβη. ⁶νῦν ⁶ δέ, ἀδελφοί, ἐὰν ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς γλώσσαις λαλών, τί ύμας ώφελήσω, έαν μη ύμιν λαλήσω ή έν άποκαλύψει ή ἐν γνώσει ἡ ἐν προφητεία ἡ ἐν διδαχή; ὅμως τὰ άψυγα φωνήν διδόντα, είτε αὐλὸς είτε κιθάρα, ἐὰν διαστολην τοῦ φθόγγου μη δῷ, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τὸ αὐλούμενον η το κιθαριζόμενον; 8και γαρ έαν άδηλον φωνήν σάλπιγξ δω, τίς παρασκευάσεται εἰς πόλεμον: ⁹ούτως καὶ ὑμεῖς διὰ » דסוֹג φθόγγοις.

6 may receive edifying. *But now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation or by knowledge or by pro-7 phesying or by "teaching? " Even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or horp, except they give a distinction 'of sound', how shall it be known what is piped or harped? s For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall pre-9 pare himself "for the battle? So likewise ye, except ye utter

6. vũv čé, 'but as it now stands; ' i. e. ' if the tongues are there and no interpreter.' He gives these four gifts or utterances, as exhausting all the modes of teaching. (1) αποκάλυψις, 'unveiling of the unseen world, as in 'The Apocalypse. (2) yvwore, 'insight into Divine truth,' as in the 'wisdom' of ii. 6.

(3) προφητεία, 'message of exhortation or consolation,' as in

(4) διδαγή, 'regular teaching,' like the continuous teaching of our Lord's discourses and parables; as in Acts ii. 42. 7. He illustrates his argument by a general reference to sounds. όμως τα άψυχα. This drawn out in full would be, sai rà awuxa, καίπερ άψυχα όντα, όμως, 'lifeless instruments, though lifeless, yet,' &c. Compare Gal. iii. 15; ύμως ανθρώπου κεκυρωμένην διαθήκην ούδεις άθετεί, and for a like condensation see Rom. ii. 1.

The flute or pipe (αὐλὸς) and harp (κιθάρα) are inentioned as the only two kinds of instrumental music known in Greece.

φθόγγος is used only here and in Rom. x. 18. As distinguished from φωνή it expresses musical sounds. φθόγγου (not τοῦ φθόγyou) is the real reading of B. Lachmann adopted row in ignorance.

γνωσθήσεται τὸ αὐλούμενον; 'How shall the particular note of the pipe be recognised?'

8. He adds another instance of a different kind.

πόλεμοr, not 'war' (as usual), but (as in Rov. xvi. 14) 'battle. 9. He now applies what he has said, as in the analogous passages of xii. 27-31, and xv. 35-41.

διά τῆς γλώσσης, 'through the tongue,' i. e. as compared with the various instruments he has just mentioned, but also probably with a special reference to the gift of 'speaking with a tongue' (see p. 247).

τής γλώσσης ἐὰν μὴ εἴσημον λόγον δῶτς, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τό λαλούμουν, ἔστσθε γλι ρέ εἰς ἀρα λαλούτες. ¹ὐ ποταῦτα, εἰ τύχοι, γότη φωνῶν *εἰστὰ νὰ κόσμω, καὶ οὐδὰν ἄφωνον. 'ἰ ἐὰν οῦν μὴ εἰδῶ τὴν δύναμω τῆς φωνής, ἔσομαι τῷ λαλοῦντς βάρβαρος, καὶ ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοὶ βάρβαρος. 'ὐ οὐτως καὶ ὑμικίς, ἐπεὶ ὑηλωταί ἐστε πνευμάτων, πρὸς τὴν οἰκοδομήν τῆς ἐκκλησίας Ογτείτε ὑτα περισσέψητε. 'ἰδὸ ὁ λαλῶν γλώσση

Σστιν. * οὐδὸν αὐτῶν. * Διόπεο.

by the tongue "a word easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? For ye shall speak into the air. 10 There are, it may be, so many kinds of "sounds in the world, I and "anothing "sis without "sound: therefore if I know not the meaning of the "sound, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh a barbarian I runto me. Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealoos of "spirits, seek that ye may "abound to the edifying of the to church. Wherefore "the that speaketh in a tongue let him" pray ευσημον, 'intelligible.'

10. He now pushes his range of comparisons further, so as to include the various languages of men.

φωτή, though used in verse 8 for the trumpet, is here extended to human language as

8 for the trumpet, is here extended to human language, as in the LXX. (Genesis xi. 1, 7; Deuteronomy xxviii. 49; Isaiah liv. 17), and often in classical writers. ### ir vyot, a common expression ti τυχοι, a common expression to express doubt about numbers (see Dionys. Hal. iv. 19, μυρίων ἢ δισμυρίων εἰ τύχοι, and other examples in Wetstein). See also xv. 37.

ἀφωνον, 'without a distinct sound.'

 δύναμιν, 'meaning,' force.'

βάρδαρος, a 'foreigner' (i. e. one who does not speak the Greek language). 'Barbarus hic ego sum, quia non intelligor ulli,' Ovid, Trist. v. 10.

έν έμοί, 'in my judgment.'

He now applies the whole argument to the Corinthians.

ζηλωταί. See note on verse 1.

For the construction compare ζηλωτής Θεοῦ, Acts xxii. 3.

πνευμάτων, 'spirits,' used for *spiritual gifts, as δυνάμεις for 'workers of miracles,' xii. 29, (compare also xii. 10, xiv. 32), and here, as in verse 1, used specially, though not exclusively, for the 'tongues.'

πρὸς τὴν οἰκοδομὴν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, 'to the building up of the Church,' is put first for the sake of the emphasis laid upon it.

for referencing. See note on I.

13. προσενερίσθω for deppyreig, 'pray that he may interpret.' This implies that the speaker himself had not necessarily an understanding of what he was saying. In order to explain it to others, he had to pray for a separate gift, that of 'interpretation.' Comp. xii 30: 'do all speak with tongues?' do all interpret?' which implies προσευχέσθω ΐνα διερμηνεύη. 14 έὰν [γὰρ] προσεύχωμαι γλώσση, τὸ πνεῦμά μου προσεύχεται, ὁ δὲ νοῦς μου ἄκαρπός έστιν. ¹⁵τί οὖν ἐστίν; προσεύξομαι τῷ πνεύματι, προσεύξομαι δέ καὶ τῶ νοί ψαλῶ τῶ πνεύματι, ψαλῶ καὶ τῶ νοί. 16 έπεὶ ἐὰν εὐλογῆς κανεύματι, ὁ ἀναπληρών τὸν τόπον τοῦ · danê ê) sal vot.

ο εὐλονήσεις τῶ.

14 that he may interpret. For if I pray in a tongue, my spirit 15 prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful. What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, on I will 16 sing with the understanding also. Else rif thou bless' with that the two gifts were not of necessity united in the same persons. 14. He illustrates the uselessness of the gift to others by showing the uselessness of it in the case of prayer. The repetition of the word 'pray' (mpoσεύχεσθαι) implies that in verse 13 as well as 14 it is used for the 'inspired prayer with tongues,' as though the sense were, 'So important is it for this gift to be turned to practical use, that the special object, to which the speaking or praying with tongues should be directed, is the acquisition of the gift of interτο πνευμα, 'the spirit,' is used for the moral and spiritual affections united with the Spirit of Christ, or the Spirit which is the life of the Spiritual gifts.

pretation.'

o your is 'the mind or intellectual element,' as in Phil. iv.-7, Luke xxiv. 45. The effect here described, the use of words which touch the feelings without conveying any distinct notions to the understanding, is illustrated by the state of the disciples of Irving (see pp. 263-265). Such too is the impression produced on the uneducated, not only, as Estius well remarks, by public prayers, of which the general object is understood, though the particular sense is unknown, but by the words of Scripture, which often strike the heart more from the general spirit they breathe, than from any special meaning of the words themselves.

ακαρπος, ' without result.' τί οὖν ἐστίν; 'what then is the consequence to be deduced from all this? ' (Comp. verse 26; Acts xxi. 22; Rom. iii. 9, vi. 15.)

προσεύξομαι is the reading in B. and Latin versions, προσεύξωμαι A. D. E. F. G. 'If I am to pray with my spirit, I will pray also with my under-standing.' From this he passes to another manifestation of the tongues, that of singing. Comp. Eph. v. 19: 'Speaking to your-selves in psalms and hymns.' James v. 13: 'Is any among you sad? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms." (See p. 245.)

16. As the wrong use of the gift comes again before him, he passes back from the first person to the second. The mention of 'singing' suggests the especial purpose to which singing was applied; namely, thanksgiving, ιδιώτου πως έρει το άμην έπι τη ση ευχαριστία; έπειδη το

the spirit, the that occupieth the room of the unlearned how shall he say the Amen at thy giving of thanks? since what and the special inconvenience which would arise from the thanksgiving being offered in an unintelligible form, as though the sense were 'Sing with the understanding; for, unless you do, the thanksgiving will be useless.'

The 'thanksgiving' or 'blessing' of which he speaks, seems to be that which accompanied the Lord's Supper, and whence it derived its name of the 'Eucharist. In this connexion the words εὐλογείν and εὐγαριστείν were used convertibly, as appears in all the accounts of the institution (see on xi. 24). In answer to this thanksgiving the congregation uttered their 'Ament' 'After the prayers,' says Justin (Apol. c. 65, 67), 'bread is offered, and wine and water, and the president offers up according to his power prayers and · The thanksgivings at once. Amen. and the people shout the Amen (rò àui)v as here). The president offers praise and glory to the Father of all, through the name of His Son and of the Holy Spirit, and at length returns thanks to God for having vouchsafed us to partake of these things. When he has finished the prayers and thanksgivings, all the people present shout, saying "Amen," which is the Hebrew for "So be it."

The 'Amen' thus used was borrowed from the worship of the synagogue, and hence probably the article is prefixed as to a well known form. It was there regarded as the necessary ratification of the prayer or blessing. 'He who says Amen is greater than he that blesses' (Berashoth viii, 8), 'Whoever says Amen, to him the gates of paradise are open,' according to Isaiah xxvi. 2, whence they read 'Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the Amen, may enter in (Wetstein ad loc.). An 'Amen' if not well considered, was called an 'Orphan Amen' (Lightfoot ad loc.). 'Whoever says an Orphan Amen, his children shall be orphans; whoever answers Amen hastily or shortly, his days shall be shortened; whoever answers Amen distinctly and at length, his days shall be lengthened' (Berashoth, 47, 1; Schöttgen ad loc.). Compare the use of the word as uttered by the vast assembly of pilgrims at Mecca, to express their assent to the great sermon at the Kaaba (Burton's Pilgrimage, iii. p. 314).

So in the early Christian liturgies, it was regarded as a marked point in the service; and with this agrees the great so-lounity with which Justia speaks climity with the thankesgiving; 'the president having given thanks, and the whole people having shouted their approbation.' And in later times, the Amen was only repeated once by the congress thanksgiving, and with a shout like a peal of thunder, a shout like a peal of thunder.

δ ἀναπληρών τὸν τόπον τοῦ ἐξιώτου. 'He who, in consequence of his not understanding the tongues, is to the speaker λέγεις ούν οίδευ ¹⁷ σύ μὲν γὰρ καλῶς εύχαριστεῖς, ἀλλ' ό ἐτερος οἰν οἰκοδομεῖται ¹⁸ εὐχαριστα τῷ θεῷ ¹ αλλ' οῦ ὑμῶν μᾶλλον ¹γλώσση λαλῶ ¹⁸ ἀλλὰ ἐν ἐκκλησία θελω πέντε λόγους τῷ νοῦ μου λαλήσται, ἴνα καὶ ἀλλους κατηχήσω, ἡ μυρίους λόγους ἐν γλώσση.

20 'Αδελφοί, μὴ παιδία γίνεσθε ταῖς φρεσίν, ἀλλὰ τῆ

· Add μου, · γλώσσαις λαλών, · διὰ τοῦ νοός μου.

17 thou sayest be knoweth not'; for thou "indeed givest thanks a well, but the other is not edified. I thank a God, I speak with 19 a 'tongue' more than ye all; yet in the church I 'would rather speak five words with my understanding, that I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in a tongue.

20 Brethren, become not little children in your minds, howbeit in with tongues what an unlearned person is with regard to a learned. This also must be the sense of lidering in ver. 23, 24. The blessing was not valid, unless it was, as it were, ratified by the 'Amen' of the whole congregation. In the only two other hadren. passages where libering terment, it was not the light that the control of the work o

The word ιδιώτης was adopted by the Rabbis merely spelling it in Hebrew letters (see Lightfoot ad loc.).

ὁ ἀναπληρῶν τὸν τόπου, 'He who fills the condition or situation;' also a Hebraism naturally used in speaking of the forms of worship, moetly borrowed from the Synagogue. Buxtorf, Lex. Talmud, p. 2001. For this sense of τόπος see Ecclus. xii. 12.

17. καλώς. 'You do well to give thanks; it is meet and right so to do.' (Comp. 'Ye call me Lord and Master, and ye say well,' καλώς λέγετε, John xiii.

18. He returns to his own case.

For the Apostle's power of speaking with tongues, compare the description of his visions and revelations in 2 Cor. xii. 1, 2.

 άλλὰ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ, 'but whatever I may do in private, in an assembly I had rather,' &c.

άλλους κατηχήσω, 'instruct thoroughly.' 20. He concludes with an appeal to their common sense like that in xi. 14, 'I speak as to wise men' (φρονίμοις).

ταῖς φρεσίν. The word only occurs here in the N. Test. κακία νηπιάζετε, ταις δὲ φρεσὶν τέλειοι γίνεσθε. 21 ἐν τῷ νόμῳ γέγραπται, ὅτι ἐν ἐτερογλώσσοις καὶ ἐν χείλεσω ἑτέρω λαλήσω τῷ λαῷ τούτῳ, καὶ οὐδ οὔτως εἰσακούσονται μου, malice be ye 'babes, but in 'your minds' become 'perfect men.

· ξτέροις,

21 In the law it is written, 'that 'with men of other tongues and 'with lips of others' will I speak unto this people, and yet for τέλειοι, 'full grown.' For the same contrast of childishness and manliness, compare ii. 6, 'We speak wisdom among the full grown ' (έν τελείοις): iii. 1, ' I could not speak to you as spiritual, but as infants' (νηπίοις): xiii. 10, 11, 'When that which is full grown (τὸ τέλειο») is come. then that which is in part shall be done away. When I was an infant (νήπιος), I spake and thought as an infant; but when I became a man (ἀνήρ), I put away infantine things (τὰ τοῦ νηπίου).

rηπάζετε seems introduced to strengthen παεία. 'Be, if you will, not childlike only, but infantine in wickedness.' The verb occurs nowhere else in the New Testament.

21. He follows up this appeal to their own judgment by an anneal to the Old Testament. έν τω νόμω γέγραπται. 'It is written in the Law.' Here, as in John x. 34, xii. 34, xv. 25, 'the Law' is used for the Old Testament generally, instead of being, as usual, confined to the Penta-The whole passage is teuch. from Isaiah xxviii. 9-12: Whom shall he teach knowlodge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk. and drawn from the breasts. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little : for with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ve may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear.' The general sense seems to be that, as they mocked the prophet for teaching them as if he was teaching children, he answers that God shall teach them indeed with words that they could not understand, through the invasion of the Assyrian foreigners. The Apostle must have read and quoted the passage as describing that God's speaking to the Israelites through the lips and language of a foreign people would be in judgment. and not in mercy, and would have no effect. Hardly a word in this quotation coincides with the LXX.: δια φαυλισμόν γειλέων, δια γλώσσας έτέρας, ότι λαλήσουσε τῷ λαῷ τούτῳ, λέγοντες αὐτοῖς, Τοῦτο τὸ ἀνάπαυμα τῷ πεινώντι καὶ τοῦτο τὸ σύντριμμα, καὶ ούς ήθέλησαν άκούειν.

irapoyhówooc is peculiar to this passage in the New Testament. It is used, however (A.D. 150), by Aquila in his translation of this very passage in Isa. xxviii. 11, and of Ps. cxiv. I, (strange language), and it illustrates the meaning of 'other tongues' (*tránus / yhówauch), in λέγει κύριος. ²²ώστε αἱ γλώσσαι εἰς σημεῖόν εἰσιν οὐ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἀπίστοις, ἡ δὲ προφητεία οὐ τοῖς ἀπίστοις ἀλλὰ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν. ²²ἐαν οὖν ἔλθη' ἡ ἔκκλησία δλη ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ καὶ πάντες λαλώσιν γλώσσαις,

* συνέλθη, and so Lachm. Ed. 1.

^b γλώσσαις λαλῶσιν,

22 all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord. Wherefore "the tongues are for a sign not to "the believers' but to "the unbelievers', but prophesying not for "the unbelievers' but for 23 "the believers". If therefore the whole church be come a into one place and all speak with tongues, and there come in Acts ii. 4. The word is used for 'foreign languages' in Polyb. xxiv. 9, § 5 (Wetstein).

It must be observed that, although the construction of the contraction of the construction of the traction of the construction of the traction of the the control of the tackause on which he lays so much stress, as proving the fruitlessness of foreign tongues, "and not even so shall they shear," in the criginal passage relate, not to the foreign language, but to the interval words which the Apostle has left out, and which seem to refer to the obscure language of the prophets former teaching.

The passage may have been suggested to his memory by its mention of children and of childish teaching, of which he had himself just spoken in verse 20.

22. From this quotation, or rather from the special words which it contains ('tongues', and 'they shall not hear'), be drawn a conclusion sgainst the gipt of speaking with tongues. 'If this be so, "the tongues' are a sign of God's presence, not to those who refuse to the contract of th those who are converted, and is thus a sign of mercy.'

23, 24. He confirms this by the actual fact, and presents the two opposite pictures of what would be the effect on persons who had not either of the gifts in question, according as the whole congregation had one or the other. If the congregation spoke with tongues, the effect would be mere astonishment, and an impression that they were all seized with frenzy; but if they prophesied, the effect would be conviction that there was really a Divine presence among them, enabling them to discern the secrets of the heart.

In each case, to make his argument stronger, he imagines the whole society present, and every member of it exercising his gift. If they all spoke with interested, because this would imply that there were none to interpret. If they all prophesied, this would increase the wonder and the effect, because the man would feel that, not one eye only, but a thousand eyes were fixed on his immost soul. times over, and he expressions 'the whole Church' and 'the same place. εἰσέλθωσιν δὲ ἰδιῶται ἢ ἄπιστοι, οὐκ ἐροῦσιν ὅτι μαίνεσθε; ²¹ ἐὰν δὲ πάντες προφητεύωσιν, εἰσέλθη δέ τις ἄπιστος ἢ ἰδιώτης, ἐλέγχεται ὑπὸ πάντων, ἀνακρίνεται ὑπὸ πάντων, ²³ τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς καρδίας αὐτοῦ φανερὰ γίνεται, καὶ

· Add Kal οδτω.

those that are unlearned or unbelievers, will they not say 24 that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in 'an unbeliever' or one unlearned, he is convinced 'by all, he 25 is judged 'by all, at the secrets of his heart 'become ἐἐώτης, is a 'person without the gift of tongues, or of prophecy;' 'a layman,' in the sense of one without the knowledge of any special branch of knowledge. See note on verse 16.

\[
\text{άπιστος}, a 'heathen,' as in vi. 6, vii. 12—15; not in the stronger sense in which he has just used the word in verse 22, of 'a heathen who refuses to be converted.'
\]

The two words together include all who could possibly be affected, 'Christians without the gifts,' and 'heathens.'

For the impression of madness produced on those who saw the gift of tongues, compare Acts ii. 13: 'These men are full of new wine.'

This would be the passage where, if the gift of tongues had been given for the purpose of converting foreign languages, the Apostle would have pointed it out; the more so, as both 'unbelievers' and 'foreign tongues' are alluded to in verses 22, 23, and 24. See Introduction to this chapter, pp. 247, 248.

24. The description which follows describes the intended effect of all Christian preaching. Although both the 'unlearned' and the 'unbeliever' are mentioned, it is evident that the latter is chiefly in the Apostle's mind, and hence ἄπιστος is in this second clause put before lδιώτης.

iλίγχαται ὑπὸ πάντων. 'He is rendered conscious of his sins by all.' One after another of the prophets shall take up the strain, and each shall disclose to him some fault which he knew not before.' For this sense of ἰλέγχω see John χνį. 8.

draupireras und πάνταν. 'ILe is examined and judged by all.'
'One after another shall ask questions which shall reveal to him his inmost self, and sit as judge on his immost thoughts.'
For draupires see its constant use in this Epistle, ii. 14, 15, iv. 3, 4, ix. 3, x. 25, 27.

καὶ οῦτως πεσών ἐπὶ πρόσωπον προσκυνήσει τῷ Θεῷ, 'And as a οὖτως πεσὼν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον προσκυνήσει τῷ θεῷ, ἀπαγγέλλων ὅτι "ὄντως ὁ θεὸς ἐν ὑμῶν ἐστίν.

• В Өебз ботыз.

manifest, and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that "of a truth God is in you'.

consequence he will fall prostrate before God. Compare the effect of Samuel's prophesying on Saul, 'He lay down all that day and night,' 1 Sam. xix. 24. ἀπαγγάλλων ὅτε ὅντως ὁ Ͽτὸς

t ^{*}ν_μτν lσrtν. 'Carrying away the tidings that the God, whom he has thus worshipped, is truly among you.' 'Deum vere esse in vobis et verum Deum esse qui est in vobis.' (Bengel.)

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, XIV. 1-25.

Let Love be your great aim: but admire and cherish at the same time the gifts of the Spirit, chiefly the gift of prophesying. The gift of tonques only informs a man's self; the gift of prophecy informs others. The gift of tongues must be inferior to prophecy, unless it is accompanied with the aift of interpretation, or with the usual aifts of teaching. As musical instruments are useless, unless their notes are distinguishable; as the different sounds of the human voice are useless, unless they are understood by those who hear them; so these gifts are useless, unless they are rendered intelligible. He, therefore, who has the gift of speaking with a tongue, should pray that he may have the gift of interpretation. This should be the very object of his prayer when he prays with a tonque; else such a prayer, though elevating to his feelings, is useless to his understanding. Both in prayer and praise the feelings and the understanding should go together. If the Eucharistic thanksgiving be uttered in a tongue, he who does not understand the tongue, and who is thus in the condition of an ignorant man, cannot give his ratification of the thanksgiving in the solemn 'Amen' of the congregation; the thanksqiving may be good, but it is of no use. as I am for my possession of this gift in an extraordinary measure, I yet had rather speak five words to instruct others, than any number of words in a tonque. My dear brothers. consider the matter by your own common sense; be children, be infants, if you will, in wickedness: but in mind be not children, but full-grown men. You remember the passage in the Old Testament which speaks of tother tonques, and of the people not hearing. So it is still. The 'tonques' are a sign, not to those who will believe, but to those who will not believe; whereas prophecy is a sign to those who will believe. Conceive the whole congregation collected, and every member speaking with tongues; the impression on a heathen, or on a man without this gift, will be that pow are mad. But conceive the same congregation, with every member prophesying, and the effect will be that a stranger will feel that by every member of that congregation he is commenced of sin, and his thoughts judged, and his heart laid open; and he will acknowledge by act and word the presence of God amongsty you.

THE OFFICE OF THE UNDERSTANDING IN CHRISTIAN WORSHIP.

THE importance of the general principle established by the Apostle in this Section, as declaring the superiority of a religion of moral action, to a religion of mere reverence or contemplation, has already been noticed. This principle is here applied to Christian worship.

There has always been a tendency to envelop the worship of God in mystery and darkness. To a certain extent, this is inevitable and desirable. The communion Mystery of Worship. with the Infinite and Invisible can never be reduced to the same precise laws as those which regulate our ordinary acts. The awful reverence which, in the Old Testament, represented Him as dwelling in darkness unapproachable, and the seraphs as veiling their faces before Him, can never be safely discarded. The feelings with which the most refined and exalted spirits of humanity adore the Maker of all things, the Friend of their own individual souls, can never be reduced to the level of the common worldly worshippers of every-day life. So much will probably be granted by all, and a deep truth will be recognised in the ancient ceremonial forms by which, in the Jewish and Pagan rituals of ancient times, and some Christian rituals of modern times, this feeling was encouraged. But the utter lifelessness into which these forms have degenerated, when the understanding has been shut out from any participation in them, shows that this tendency may be carried to such an excess as to destroy the very feeling which it was meant to foster.

It is in this Chapter that the counter-principle is most emphatically stated. The precept, 'Be not children in understanding; howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men,' is to be found in substance understanding be men,' is to be found in substance Christian this passage it is directly applied to that very province to relizions worship in which the intellect is often supposed to have no part or place.

Two practical directions the Apostle gives, by which the un-1. The mode derstanding was to be restored to its proper position of worship to be intelto be intelligible.

itself, but at times overlooked or neglected. The first is, that the worship shall be conducted in a form intelligible to the people. To pray or praise in the spirit, but without the concurrence of the understanding; to utter thanksgivings, to which the congregation cannot give a conscious assent; to utter sounds, however edifying to the individual, without interpreting them to the congregation; is, in the Apostle's view, essentially inconsistent with the true nature of Christian worship. It was thus not without reason that this Chapter became the stronghold of those attacks which were made in the sixteenth century on the practice of conducting the service in a dead language. But neither the prohibition of unintelligible sounds, nor of an unintelligible language, is so important as the maintenance of the positive principle, that worship must carry along with it, so far as possible, the whole nature of man. It is possible that the language used may have ceased to be habitually spoken, and yet be sufficiently understood; or, on the other hand, that the words used may belong to a living language, and yet that the service shall be such as the congregation cannot follow. On the one hand, extempore prayers, or dumb show, as in modern sects,-ancient prayers, Latin prayers, music, art, an elaborate ritual, amongst older Churches,-may each fall under the Apostle's censure, so far as they deprive the worshipper of a free access to the actual sense and meaning of the acts in which he is engaged. Or, on the other hand they may each in their turn promote the Anostle's object, so far as they tend to bring that sense and meaning home to the memory, the imagination, the understanding, the reason, the conscience of the worshipper, educated or uneducated, civilized or uncivilized, as the case may be. As 'there are so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification,' so also, 'there are so many kinds of worship in the world, and none of them is without signification,' to Greek or Roman, German or Englishman, barbarian or Scythian. To discover the true 'voice' in which to reach the mind and heart of the worshipper, the true 'interpretation' by which the gift of prayer and praise, always more or less difficult to be understood by the people, can be rendered intelligible, should be the one great object of every form of worship. In proportion as this is not sought, or as darkness and mystery are directly encouraged, in that proportion superstition and profaneness will creep in, because the 'understanding' will remain 'unfruitful,' and the different parts of the congregation will be 'as barbarians to each other.'

Secondly, and as a consequence of this, is to be noticed the great stress laid by the Apostle on practical in- 2 Instrucstruction as a part of worship. He had rather speak tion a part 'five words with his understanding that he might of worship. teach others,' than 'ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.' That 'the Church may receive edifying,' and that his hearers 'may prophesy to edification, to exhortation and comfort,' is his chief desire. The object of prophesying is specially described as 'convincing,' 'judging,' and 'making manifest the secrets of the heart,' and its effects are produced directly on the mind and conscience of the hearer. The description indeed resembles strongly the results of the teaching of Socrates, whose life, as it represents the most stimulating power ever brought to bear on the human understanding, so also in many respects forcibly illustrates the first spread of the Gospel. 'To him the precept "know thyself," was the holiest of all texts. To preach, to exhort, even to confute particular errors appeared to him useless, so long as the mind lay wrapped up in its habitual mist or illusion of wisdom; such mist must be dissipated before any new light could enter. . . . The newly created consciousness of ignorance was alike unexpected, painful, and humiliating-a season of doubt and discomfort, yet combined with an internal working and yearning after truth never before experienced.'1

Grote, Hist of Greece, VIII. pp. 603, 608.

These emphatic declarations are a sanction, not merely of the importance of what is strictly called preaching, and of the objects which all preaching should have in view, but of education itself as a part of Christian worship. What was supplied in the Apostolical age by the special gift of prophesying, must now be supplied by all the natural gifts which enable a man to be a wise teacher and counsellor of those around him. The principle has been recognised in the worship of most Churches. from very early times. The 'sermon,' and the 'catechism' (of which the name is derived from the word used by the Apostle in this very Chapter, "να καὶ άλλους κατηγήσω"), occupying as they do a prominent place in the services of almost all the Western Churches of Christendom, vindicate by long precedent this important element. It is true that these institutions have often taken a colour from the ritual in which they have been incorporated, rather than given that ritual a colour of their own. They themselves have often become forms, instead of making the rest of the service less formal; have been concerned with abstract propositions, rather than with practical improvement; have tended to make the taught dependent on the teacher, instead of 'building him up' to think and act for himself. In proportion as this has been the case, the Apostle's comparison of the relative value of the gift of tongues and the gift of prophesying is no less important than it was at Corinth. A discourse, a lesson, a series of catechetical questions and answers, though always useful as a witness to the Apostolical principle of edification, may be as completely without effect and without response in the congregation, as the gift of tongues which in the bystanders produced only indifference or astonishment. On the other hand, if these parts of the Christian service are conducted with the power and the insight which the Apostle describes as their true characteristic, the conscience of the hearer responding to the voice of the teacher, the Apostle assures us that God is there in a 'Real Presence'-these are his very words (οντως έστι)-which may indeed exist in other portions of Christian worship, but which is no where else so distinctly asserted as in this

²⁰ τί οδυ ἐστίν, ἀδελφοί; ὅταν συνέρχησθε, ἔκαστος* ψαλμόν ἔχει, διδαχὴν ἔχει, ἀποκάλυψιν ἔχει, γλώσσαν ἔχει, ἐφιμηνείαν ἔχει τάντα πρὸς οἰκοδομήν ⑤γωέσθα ²¹ ἔτις γλώσση τις λαλεῖ, κατὰ δύο ἢ τὸ πλεῖστον τρεῖς, καὶ ἀνὰ

Add όμῶν,
 γλῶσσαν ἔχει, ἀπ.κάλυψω ἔχει.
 γενέσθω.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, 'each one 'hath a psalm, hath a 'teaching, 'hath a revelation, hath a tongue', hath an interpretation: let all things be done 21 unto edifying. If any 'one speak in a tongue, let it be by two or at the most three, and by course, and let one in-ri o'r ieriv; 'What, then, is the practical result of all this?' Compare verse 15. 'The fact is that, whenever you meet for worship, each of you has some gift which he wishes to exercise. One has a song of praise (ú-hµú·) (see note on 15); another has a discourse (hô-ayh), (see note on 6); another has a revelation of the unseen world (ś-śrockhyúr), tonother tongue (y/hūơrari); another has an interpretation of tongues' (ś-uprwiar).

The comparison of the two assemblies, one consisting of speakers with tongues, the other of prophets, suggests to the Apostle a general conclusion to the whole discussion on the gifts; namely, the necessity of preserving order.

This was the state of things which had to be corrected. The first general rule which he gives is, πάντα πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν γυνέσθω. 'Let all these gifts be arranged for the building up and perfecting of the whole.' Compare Eph. iv. 11, 12, 13.

27. He exemplifies this, first, in the case of the tongues (27, 28); next, in the case of the prophets (29-36).

είτε should have been followed by sire, in verse 29; but the construction of the sentence is lost in passing from one thought to the other. The direction for the speakers with tongues is, that they shall not speak in groups of more than two, or at the most three; and that of these, only one shall speak at a time. This implies that there had been a danger lest the whole assembly should be engrossed by them, as in verse 23, and also lest all should speak at once. There was to be one interpreter. to prevent the difficulty noticed in verses 13-17, of the assembly not understanding what was said. If there was no one present with the gift of interpretation, then the speaker with tongues was to repress his utterance, and content himself with inward communion with God. ἐν ἐκκλησία may, however, indicate that he might speak in private, though not in public. The nominative case to σιγάτω μέρος, καὶ εἶτ δεερμηνενέται "ἐδαν δεὶ κὴ ἢ 'ἐρμηνεντής στιγάτω τὸ ἐκιληστής ἐκιληστός καιληστός ἐκιληστός ἐκιληστό διερμηνευτής,

28 terpret: but if there be "not an interpreter, let him keep silence in the church, and let him speak to himself and to God. 20 Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the 'others opjudge: if anything be rerealed to another 'sitting by, let 31 the first 'be silent. For 'one by one ye 'can all prophesy', 32 that all may learn and all may be comforted: and the asspirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets; for is (not ὁ ἐρμηνευτής, but) ὁ λαλῶν γλῶσση. Compare for this construction Luke xv. 15, possibly Acts vi. 6.

άνὰ μέρος, 'in turn.' This may either be, that in each group each shall speak in turn, or that each group shall speak in turn.

29. He next directs the conduct of the prophets. They may come, apparently, in any numbers;
but only two or three are to speak, and the rest are to interpret, reptained by the prophecies.
"prophers, is the subject of the whole sentence, implying that those who had the gift of discernment (disrguesy) (see note on xii.
10) were included under the class of prophets.

30. 1f, whilst one of the prophets is speaking, another has a revelation to impart, he is to stand up and utter it, and the first speaker is to sit down, and be silent. It was of more importance to catch the first burst of a prophecy, than to listen to the completion of one already begun.

καθημένφ, 'sitting and not speaking.' This implies that the prophets stood whilst they spoke.

31-33. He justifies this command by showing that there was time and room for all to exercise their gift.

δύνασθε, 'you have it in your power.'

The stress here, as in verse 24, is on πάντες, 'all.' 'You can all prophecy, and then every member of the assembly in turn will receive his own proper instruction and exhortation.'

32. 'And this is not difficult; the spirits of the several prophets are subject to the prophets in whom they reside.' For the same personification, so to speak, of the spiritual gifts, see 'verse 12, '(pharai wreapiraw; xii. 10, 'anapirac wreapiraw; xii. 10, 'anapirac wreapiraw; xii. 10, 'anapirac wreapiraw; xii. 10, 'anapirac wreapiraw. The absence of the article implies that pulses by the wills of the prophets was an essential part of the prophets aparits are subject to prophets.' This distinguishes these

γάρ ἐστιν ἀκαταστασίας ὁ θεός, ἀλλὰ ἐἰρήνης. ὁς ἐν πάσαις ταὶς ἐκκλησίαις τῶν ἀγίων, ³⁸ αἰ γυναίκες ἐ ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις σκήστασω» οὐ γὰρ ἐπιτρέπεται ἀὐταίς λαλὲίν, ἀλλὰ ἐνποτασσέσθωσαν, καθώς καὶ ὁ νέμος λέγει. ³⁸ ἐδ ἐτ τι μαθέῦ Θέλουσαν, ἐν οἶκιμτοὺς ἰδίους ἄνδρας ἐπερωτάτωσαν · αἰσχρὸν γάρ ἐστιν γυναικὶ λαλείν ἐν ἐκκλησία. ³⁸ ἢ ἀψ ὑμῶν ὁ λόγος

* Add $\delta \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$, b ἐπιτέτραπται, c ὁποτάσσεσθαι, d γυναιξ b c ἐκκλησί c λαλεῖν, 34 God is not the author of confusion but of peace. As in all the churches of the saints, let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let as them 'be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they 'desire to learn any thing, let them ask their 'own husbands at home: for it is a shame for 'a woman' to speak so in the church. What! 'went the word of God out from you?

impulses from those of the heathen pythonesses and sibyls.

33. 'The reason of this subjection is, that God, from whom these gifts proceed, is a God not of instability and uncertainty, but of peace.

ώς έν πάσαις ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῶν aviωr, though in the older texts ioined to the preceding, has, since the time of Cajetan, and rightly, been joined to the following, the connexion being the same as in xi. 16. Lachmann, in his second edition, has further deviated from the common punctuation, by attaching the drive to ai yuvaikee, which is rendered possible, though not necessary, by the omission of ὑμῶν in A. B. If so, the sense will be, 'As in all the assemblies, let the wives of the saints keep silence in the assemblies.'

84, 35. One particular instance of confusion growing out of the neglect of order in the control of the gifts, was the speaking of women in the assemblies.

This custom, like that of appearing unveiled (xi. 3—16), he condemns on the ground that he forbade it in all the assemblies of Christians. The speaking of women was also expressly forbidden in the synagogues. (See Wetstein and Lightfoot, ad loc.)

'The law.' Gen. iii. 16. Compare the same argument in 1 Tim.

He anticipates the objection, that possibly the women might wish to ask questions in the assembly, by pointing out that their husbands were their natural guides.

τοὺς ἰδίους, 'their own husbands.' See on vii. 2.

These two verses (34, 35) are in D. E. F. G. placed at the end of the chapter.

36. He concludes with a general warning of obedience to his authority. Throughout the Epistle there has been an indication of the assumption which the Corinthians made, of taking an independent course, spart τοῦ θεοῦ ἐξῆλθεν ἡ εἰς ὑμᾶς μόνους κατήντησες; ^{σι}εἴ τις δοκεῖ προφήτης εἶναι ἡπιευματικός, ἐπιγυνωσκέτω, ἄγράφω ὑμῶς, στι κιροῦι ἐττιν ἐντολός; ^{σι}εἰ δε τις ἀγνοεῖς, ἀγνοεῖται, ^{συ}ὧστε, ἀβελφοί [μου], ζηλοῦτε τὸ προφητεύευ, καὶ τὸ λαλεῖν ὑμὴ καλιντεί ἐἐὶ γλώσσαις; ⁴⁰ πάντα ⁴δὲ εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ τάξεν γινέσθω.

δτι τοῦ κυρίου εἰσὶν ἐντολαί.
 γλώσσαις μὴ κωλύετε.

δ ἀγνοείτω,
 Om. δέ,

37 or came it unto you only? If any rone think himself to be a prophet or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that 3s I write unto you are ha commandment of the Lord. But 39 if any rone know not this, he is not known". Wherefore,

Amy brethren, 'seek zealously' to prophesy, and forbid not to 40 speak with tongues: but' Alet all things be done with seemliness and in order.

. Or God knows not him.

from all other Churches, and from the claims of St. Paul himself; and therefore he here reminds them that they were not the first or only Church in the world. Compare on i. 2, iv. 8, ix. 1.

6 λόγος roï Stoi, 'the word of God',' in especial reference to the gifts of speaking and prophesying. Compare Heb. iv. 12. There is perhaps an allusion to Isa. ii. 3: 'Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.'

κατήντησεν, 'found its way to you.' See x. 11.

37. εί τος δεετί. 'If any one claims to be a prophet, or especially endued with spiritual gifts.' πτευματικός seems here, as inverse 1, to be almost synonymous with λαλῶν γλώσερ. For the form, 'If any seem,' compare viii. 2: 'If any one seems to know anything,' and Gal. ii. 6: 'If hose who seem to be som: what' (εί δοκοῦντες).

ἐπιγινωσκέτω: 'Let him prove his inspiration by recognising, that the words which I write, are no less than commandments of the Lord. There are many various readings; trocket, trocket, trocket, exploy. Scot rot repion. exploy trocky is in A. B. The analogy of vii. 10

A. B. The analogy of vii. 10 and the word suplow naturally imply a precept of Christ, that is, either some words now lost to us, or else the general authority of Christ's teaching.

38. ayvetra, A. D. F. G. 'he isjnorath by God: God isjnorath of him.' ayvetra, B. C. E., 'tel him be ignorath.' If the former reading is preferred, then compare viii. 2, 3, xiii. 12; if the latter, it is a contemptuous expression of indifference as to the opinion of such a one, however great his pretensions.

39, 40. This is the summary of the whole. Verse 39 sums up xiv. 1—25, verse 40 sums up xiv. 26—38.

For ζηλούτε, see on xii. 31. For εὐσχημόνως, see on xiii. 5.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XIV. 26-40.

Your general state is this: At your assemblies every one comes with some gift which he wishes to exercise. The rule for your quidance must be the building up of the whole society. The speakers with tongues are not to engross the whole assembly, or to speak all at once; two, or at most three, are to come, and of these each is to speak singly, and none without an interpreter. If prophets come in large numbers, two or three only are to speak, and the rest are to be judges of what they say. Each prophet is to have his opportunity of speaking, that every member of the congregation may receive his proper instruction and consolation. It is essential to the office of a prophet to have the spirit within him under control: for God loves not confusion, but peace. For the same reason the women are not to break through their natural subjection by speaking in the assemblies. They are not even to ask questions, except from their husbands, who are their natural quides.

To these directions you ought not to oppose yourselves on any plea of fancied pre-eminence or exclusiveness. If any one prides himself on his spiritual or prophetical gift, let him prone it by recognizing in these words of mine a Divine command; if he cannot recognise it, he is not recognised by God. The conclusion, therefore, is to aim chiefly at prophecy without discouraging the gift of tongues; and the great rule is to do everything with order and decency.

APOSTOLICAL WORSHIP.

Ir may be important to sum up all that this Epistle, combined with other notices, has presented to us on the subject of Christian worship. (I.) The Christian of any assemblies of the first period of the apostolical age, seed of the company of the company of the company of the unlike those of later times, appear not to have been necessarily controlled by any fixed order of presiding ministers. We hear, indeed, of 'presbyters,' or 'elders' in the Churches of Asia Minor1, and of Jerusalem.2 And in the Church of Thessalonica, mention is made of 'rulers' (προισταμένους ύμῶν)3: and, in the Churches of Galatia, of 'teachers' (τω κατηγούντι). But no allusion is to be found to the connexion of these ministers or officers, if so they are to be called, with the worship of the Apostolic Church, and the omission of any such is an almost decisive proof that no such connexion was then deemed necessary. Had the Christian society at Corinth been what it was at the time when Clement addressed his Epistle to it. or what that at Ephesus is implied to have been in the Ignatian Epistles, it is almost inevitable that some reference should have been made by the Apostle to the presiding government which was to control the ebullitions of sectarian or fanatical enthusiasm; that he should have snoken of the presbyters, whose functions were infringed upon by the prophets and speakers with tongues, or whose authority would naturally moderate and restrain their excesses. Nothing of the kind is found. The gifts are to be regulated by mutual accommodation, by general considerations of order and usefulness; and the only rights, against the violation of which any safeguards are imposed, are those of the congregation, lest 'he that fills the place of the unlearned' (i. e. as we have already seen, 'he that has not the gift of speaking with tongues') should be debarred from ratifying by his solemn Amen the thanksgiving of the speaker. The gifts are not, indeed, sunposed to be equally distributed, but every one is pronounced capable of having some gift, and it is implied as a possibility that 'all' may have the gift of prophesying or of speaking with tongues.

II. The (II.) Through the gifts thus distributed, the worship worship was carried on. Four points are specially carried on mentioned:

(2) What has been said of prayer may be said also of ' Praise' or ' Song,' ψαλμός. We may infer from 2. Song. Eph. v. 19, where it is coupled with 'hymns and

⁽¹⁾ Prayer. This, from the manner in which it 1. Prayer. is spoken of in connexion with the tongues, must have been a free outpouring of individual devotion, and one in which women were accustomed to join, as well as men.5

¹ Acts xiv. 23.

² Ibid. xi. 30; xv. 6, 22, 23. 3 1 Thess. v. 12.

⁴ Gal. vi. 6. 5 xiv. 13, 14, 15; xi. 5. 6 xiv. 15, 26,

odes' (υμνοις καὶ ἀδαῖς), that it must have been of the nature of metre or rhythm, and is thus the first recognition of Christian poetry. The Apocalypse is the nearest exemplification of it in the New Testament.

- (3) Closely connected with this is Thanksgiving. The 'song of the understanding' is especially needed in the giving of thanks.\(^1\) In this passage we have the giving carliest intimation of a liturgical form. Although the context even here implies that it must have been a free effusion, yet it is probable that the Apostle is speaking of the Eucharistic thanksgiving for the produce of the earth; such as was from a very early period incorporated in the great Eucharistic hymn used, with a few modifications, through all the liturgical forms of the later Christian Church. And from this passage we learn that the 'Amen,' or ratification of the whole congregation, afterwards regarded with peculiar solemnity in this part of the service, was deemed essential to the due utterance of the thanksevium.
- (4) 'Prophesying,' or 'teaching,' is regarded (not by the Corinthians, but) by the Apostle, as one of the most a. Propheimportant objects of their assemblies. The impulse s'riage to exercise this gift appears to have been sostrong as to render it difficult to be kept under control.\(^2\) Women, it would seem from the Apostle's allusion to the practice in xi. 5, and prohibition of it in xiv. 34, 35, had felt themselves entitled to speak. The Apostle rests his problibition on the general ground of the subordination of women to their natural instructors, their husbands.
- (III.) The Apostolical mode of administering the Eucharist has already been delineated at the close of III. The Chap. xi. It is enough here to recapitulate its main Eucharist, features. It was part of the chief daily meal, and, as such, sucally in the evening; the bread and wine were brought by the contributors to the meal, and placed on a table; of this meal each one partook himself; the bread, in one load or many, was placed on the table; each loaf or cake was then broken into parts; the wine was given at the conclusion of the meal; a hymn of thanksgiving was offered by one of the congregation to which the rest responded with the solemn word, 'Amen.'

These points are all that we can clearly discern in the worship of Apostolic times, with the addition, perhaps, of the fact mentioned in Acts xx. 7, and confirmed by 1 Cor. xvi. 2, that the first day of the week was specially devoted to their meetings.

The total dissimilarity between the outward aspects of this Effects of worship and of any which now exists, is the first this state impression which this summary leaves on the mind. of the But this impression is relieved by various important early Church. considerations. First, when we consider the state of the Apostolic Church as described in the Acts and in this Epistle, it is evident that in outward circumstances it never could be a pattern for future times. The fervour of I. No forms of the individuals who constituted the communities, the eternal smallness of the communities themselves, the variety obligation. and power of the gifts, the expectation of the near approach of the end of the world, must have prevented the perpetuation of the Apostolic forms. But if Christianity be, as almost every precept of its Founder and of its chief Apostle presumes it to be, a religion of the Spirit, and not of the letter, then this very peculiarity is one of the most characteristic privileges. No existing form of worship can lay claim to universal and eternal obligation, as directly traceable to Apostolic times. The impossibility of perpetuating the primitive forms is the best guarantee for future freedom and progress. Few as are the rules of worship prescribed in the Koran, yet the inconvenience which they present, when transplanted into other than Oriental regions, shows the importance of the omission of such in the New Testament.

But, secondly, there are in the forms themselves, and in the II. Princi-spirit in which the Apostle handles them, principles laid injoint in Francisco and the Apostle handles them, principles down all times. Some of these have been already indicated. In this last concluding Section, the whole of this advice is summed up in two simple rules:—

'Let all things be done unto edifying,' and 'let all things be done decently and in order.'

'Let all things be done unto edifying.'

⁶ Edifying ⁷ (olsocopis) has, as aiready noticed in xiv. 3, the Little peculiar sense both of building up from first princitings be ples to their practical application, and of fitting each done unto member of the society into the proper place which edifying the growth and rise of the whole building require.

It is 'development,' not only in the sense of unfolding new truth, but of unfolding all the resources contained in the existing institution or body. Hence the stress laid on the excellence of 'prophesying,' as the special gift by which men were led to know themselves (as in xiv. 24, 25, 'the secrets of their hearts being made manifest'), and by which (as through the prophets of the older dispensations) higher and more spiritual views of life were gradually revealed. Hence the repeated injunctions that all the gifts should have their proper honour; that those gifts should be most honoured by which not a few, but all, should benefit; 2 that all who had the gift of prophecy should have the opportunity of exercising that gift; 3 that all might have an equal chance of instruction and comfort for their own special cases.

' Let all things be done decently and in order.' 4

' Decently ' (εὐσχημόνως); that is, so as not to interrupt the gravity and dignity of the assemblies. 'In 2 'Deorder '(κατὰ τάξιν); that is, not by hazard or im- cently and pulse, but by design and arrangement. The idea in order." is not so much of any beauty or succession of parts in the worship, as of that calm and simple majesty which in the ancient world, whether Pagan or Jewish, seems to have characterised all solemn assemblies, civil or ecclesiastical, as distinct from the frantic or enthusiastic ceremonies which accompanied illicit or extravagant communities. The Roman Senate, the Athenian Areopagus, were examples of the former, as the wild Bacchanalian or Phrygian orgies were of the latter. Hence the Apostle has condemned the discontinuance of the veil,5 the speaking of women,6 the indiscriminate banqueting,7 the interruption of the prophets by each other.6 'The spirits of prophets are subject to prophets,' is a principle of universal application, and condemns every impulse of religious zeal or feeling which is not strictly under the control of those who display it. A world of fanaticism is exploded by this simple axiom; and to those who have witnessed the religious frenzy which attaches itself to the various forms of Eastern worship, this advice of the Apostle, himself of Eastern origin, will appear the more remarkable. The wild gambols yearly celebrated at

¹ xii. 20-30. 2 xiv. 1-23.

³ xiv. 29-31.

⁴ xiv. 40.

⁵ ix. 1-16. 6 xiv. 34.

⁷ xi. 16-34 * xiv. 30-32.

Easter by the adherents of the Greek Church round the chapel of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, show what Eastern Christianity may become; they are living proofs of the need and the wisdom of the Apostolical precept.

To examine how far these two regulations have actually affected the subsequent worship and ritual of Christianity, to measure each Christian liturgy and form of worship by one or other of these two rules, would be an instructive task. But it is sufficient here to notice that on these two points the Apotte throws the whole weight of his authority; these two, and these only, are the Rubries of the Primitive Church.

' Sinai and Palestine,' Ed. iv. 465-471.

Chap. XV. 1-58.

THERE does not appear to be any connexion between this and the preceding Chapters. Both the importance and the peculiar nature of the subject here discussed, would naturally occasion its reservation for the last place of the Epistle. The other questions had touched only the outskirts of the piers of Christian faith: this seemed to reach its very found- the Resuration. It is evident from the expression in the rection, 12th verse (' How say some among you?'), that the Apostle is combating some teachers in the Corinthian Church, who denied as it would seem, not the Resurrection of Christ, but the Resurrection of the dead generally.

Of this tendency in the Jewish section of the Church, occasioned apparently by the Oriental, or, as it was after- not Orie wards called, Gnostic abhorrence of matter, we have cutal or a specimen in the teaching of Hymenæus and Philetus, who said that 'the Resurrection was already past;' evidently meaning thereby, that there was no resurrection, except in the moral conversion of man. But of any opposition to this tendency there is no trace in the Apostle's aroument; and the particular aspect of Judaism exhibited by Hymenœus and Philetus belongs to a later period. It seems, therefore, more natural to identify the Corinthian teachers with the Epicurean deniers of the Resurrection, such but Epias the Sadducees in Judgea 2, and in the very Church curean and of Achaia to which this Epistle 3 was addressed, the Greek. Athenian cavillers, who 'mocked when they heard of the resurrection of the dead.'4 With this agree not only the general circumstances of time and place, but also the particular allusions to them; not as corrupting, but as contradicting, the received teaching of the Apostle; as resting their objections to it, not on any refined notion of matter, but on its philosophical difficulties: 5 combining pretensions to knowledge with laxity of morals, 6 It is a remarkable instance of the great latitude which prevailed in the Corinthian Church, that these impugners of the Resurrection remained within the Christian society; Not exand that their position was not deemed, either by cluded from the themselves or the Apostle, as necessarily incom- Church.

^{1 2} Tim. ii. 17, 18. ² Matt. xxii. 23,

⁴ Acta xvii. 18, 32, 5 xv. 35.

³ See notes on i. 1.

⁶ xv. 33, 34.

patible with the outward profession of Christianity. Still, to the Apostle's mind, the Resurrection of the dead was a matter of no secondary importance. If we may take the account in the The Apo.

The Apo.

Acts as a just illustration of the language of his stiles view Epistles, we find him declaring that it was the chief of the Re- truth which he preached, and for which he suffered; "arrection. and in the Epistle themselves, although nowher's fully set forth as in this Chapter, it is always assumed as the great end of the believer's hope. It is the one doctrine which Saul the Pharisee transfers to Paul the Apostle. In the Acts he represents himself to be the Pharisaic victim of a Sadduces persecution. It is the link between his past and present life. It is the same promise to which, before his conversion, with the rest of the twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, he had hoped to come.3 The same, but yet how different! He now no longer dwelt on the elaborate exhibition of the future life, as decked out with all the figures of Rabbinical rhetoric. There was now a nearer and dearer object in the unseen world, which threw into the shade all meaner imaginations concerning it, all lower arguments in behalf of its existence. That object was Christ. He was a believer writing to believers; and therefore the one fact which he adduces to convince and to warn his readers, is the fact of the Resurrection of Christ. And this may account for his toleration of those whom he is here opposing. Though differing from him in the hope of their own resurrection, he felt that, in their belief in Christ and Christ's Resurrection, they were united with him. In this great agreement he overlooked even their great difference—their common love and faith in Christ brought him nearer to them, though doubting the Resurrection of the dead, than to the Jewish Pharisees, who, though believing it, had no sympathy with his love of Christ,

Acta xxiii. 6, xxiv. 15, 25, xxvi. 8.

² See Rom. vi. 8, viii. 11; 2 Cor. v. 10; 1 Thess. iv. 14. Acts xxvi. 7.

XV. 1 Γνωρίζω δὲ ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί, τὸ εὐαγγγέλιον ὁ εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῶν, ὁ καὶ παρελάβετε, ἐν ῷ καὶ ἐστήκατε, 2 δι' οῦ καὶ σώζεσθε, τίνι λόγω εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῶν, εἰ κατέχετε, ἐκτὸς

1 "Now, brethren, I "would have you know" the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye "received, and wherein ye 2 stand, by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory with what "word I preached the "Gospel unto you, unless

XV. 1. Γνωρίζω. In all the passes where this is used in the earlier Epsisted (1 Cor. xii. 8; 2 Cor. viii. 1; Gal. i. 11), it has the signification of 'remind,' call to your attention.' In the later Episates (Eph. vi. 21; Col. iv. 7; 2 Pet. i. 16), and in all the passages voice (including Romans vivoice (including Romans vivoice

'The Gospel' (τὸ εὐαγγέλιον)
'The Gospel' to the historical facts of the death and the

of the death and the resurrection of Christ, as stated in the ensuing verses. In Gal. i. 11, and probably in Romans i. 16, x. 16, xi. 28, it is used for the announcement of the universality of the Goopel, in which sense he speaks of it occasionally as "my disopel verses" (as only 10 metrics) and the control of the word is always implied, and is here predominant.

The repetition of κai is partly to make a stronger assertion—' which in fact you received' (see Thucyd. vi. 64), partly to express the successive stages of the climax: 'It is not only the glad tidings which you received from me (παρκλάβτκ, as in verse 8, corresponding to πορέδωκα), as an historical fact; but it is also that on which you take your immovable stand (see Rem. v. 2; 2 Cor. i. 24); and not only so, but also the means by which you are to be saved at the last. For this sense of σώζεσθε compare Acts ii. 47; 1 Cor. i. 18; 2 Cor. ii. 15.

In English it would be expressed by the repetition of the antecedent: 'that Gospel which you received, that Gospel on which you stand, that Gospel through which you are saved.'

τίνι λόγω εθηγγελισάμην υμίν, εί κατέχετε. In these words there is a mixture of two constructions. The first part, Tive . . . ευηγγελισάμην, is intended to modify the harshness of the expression γνωρίζω τὸ εὐαγγέλιον: 'I remind you of the Gospel, i. e. of the way in which I preached it.' The phrase τίνι λόγω is the same kind of redundancy as in the expressions λόγος σοφίας, λόγος γνώσεως (xii. 8), ὁ λόγος τοῦ στανpov (i. 18), and merely calls attention to the manner, as distinct from the subject, of his preaching, i. e. to the fact that he had first of all preached to them the Death and Resurrection of Christ.

el sarévere depends partly on εὶ μὴ εἰκὴ ἐπιστεύσατε. ³παρεδωκα γὰρ ὑμῶν ἐν πρώτοις δ καὶ παρέλαβον, ὅτι χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν

3 ye believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our copy. Acadiusy, 'this was the way I preached to you, if you remember it,' partly on ωδιέσθε, 'you are saved if you hold it said affording another instance of the Apostle's manner of throwing back an important word out of its natural place to the end of the sentence. See on viii. 11. ἐπὸς εἰ μὴ εἰκῆ ἐπιστεύσσιε,

'and you do hold it fast, if your conversion is to have its proper fruits.' ἐπιστεύσατε, 'received the faith at your conversion.' Comp. Rom.

xiii. 11.
 ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ is a pleonasm, as in xiv. 5. For this sense of εἰκῆ, see Rom. xiii. 4, and especially

Gal. iii. 4, iv. 11.

3. You remember how I preached the Gospel, for it was thus; in the first place to declare, dec. y dip connects is πρώτος with risk keys, but also perhaps expresses the connexion of the whole sentence, 'You remember all this, for this was my course.' For the sense of rapiduse and παρθαβίον, compare their similar use in xi. 23.

"That Christ died for our 'Died for account of his 'Goor sins,' le begins the own of the count of his 'Goor sins,' le not with the born or infancy of Christ, but with His death. This may result merely from the fact that the Resurrection is the point to which he calls attention, and that therefore he does not go further back in the history than the event out of which, so to say, the Resurrection originated. But the language rather leads us to infer that the statement of the death occurs first, because it was actually the first point in the Apostle's mode of teaching, thus confirming his declaration in i. 18, 23, ii. 2, that the Crucifixion was the great subject of his first preaching at Corinth. And this also agrees with the general strain of the Epistles, in which the Death and Resurrection are the main points insisted upon, as in Rom. iv. 25; Eph. i. 7-23; Col. i. 14-23; 1 Tim. iii. 16.

'For our sina,' i. e. not merely in our behalf,' which would have been *στ̄ρ *jμνν, as in Rom. v. 8; nor 'in our place,' which would have been *στ̄ρ *jμνν, as an offering in consequence of our sina,' 'to deliver us from our sina.' For the general sense of *στ̄ρ in this consxion, see on 2 Cor. v. 15. (Compare for the meaning *δa *στ *στραστέγματα, in Rom. iv. 25, and *στραστέγματα, in Rom. iv. 25, and 1. 4, and 1. Pet. iii. 18; also Heb. x. 6, 8. 18, 25, 25, iii. 11.)

'According to the Scriptures.'
That great stress was 'according laid on the conformity to the Scriptor Lord's death to tures.'
the ancient Scriptures, appears from the frequent refercrees to them, especially in the writings of St. Luke. Thus xxiv. 25—27: 'O fools, and alow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken... and beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto ήμῶν κατὰ τὰς γραφάς, ⁴καὶ ὅτι ἐτάφη, καὶ ὅτι ἐγήγερται τῆ ἡμέρα τῆ τρίτη⁶ κατὰ τὰς γραφάς, ⁶καὶ ὅτι ἄφθη · τŷ τρίτη ἡμέρα.

4 sins according to the scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He "has been raised' the third day according to 5 the scriptures, and that He was seen "by Kephas, then "by the

them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself.' Also xxiv. 44-46: 'All things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me. Then opened he their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures:' and xxii. 37: 'This that is written must yet be accomplished in me: for the things concerning me have an end.' Acts viii. 35: 'Then Philip began at the same Scripture.' It is evident from the general tenor of these passages, that the 'Scriptures' alluded to are chiefly the prophets; and from the two last-quoted that the prophecy chiefly meant is Isa. liii. 5-10. Compare the quotation in 1 Pet. ii. 24.

In the next clause the second introduction of the words, 'according to the Scriptures,' refers equally to the Burial and the Resurrection, and perhaps explains the connexion of the Burial (not as in the present creeds with the Death, but) with the Resurrection. The passages referred to are such as Ps. ii. 7; Isa. lv. 3 (in Acts xiii. 33-35); and (in allusion to the third day) Hosea vi. 2; but specially Ps. xvi. 10: 'Thou shalt not leave my soul in hell, neither shalt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption,' as in Acts ii. 25-31, xiii. 35-37, where the same contrast is drawn between the grave and the deliverance from it. The mention of the Burial in this very brief summary of facts agrees with the emphatic account of it in every one of the four Gospels, there, as here, in connexion with the Resurrection. So I Pets iii. 18, 19.

The force of the perfect $i\gamma'_{i}$ - γ_{i} - $\gamma_$

4. The details of the Resurrection which follow, are probably introduced, not as actually forming parts of that which the Apostle taught 'first of all' (is τωρίσες), but in confirmation of it, for the special object which he now had in view; and accordingly in the next sentence the construction is no longer dependent on παρέδωκα or παρίλαβον.

 ἄφθη is the word used for these appearances in Appearances St. Paul (here and in after the verses 6, 7, and 8, and 1 Resurvetion: 100 in the control Tim. ii. 16), in St. tion:

Luke (xxiv. 34, 6s/69, Zipav.), and in the Acts (ii. 8, iv. 17, xii.
18], xxvi. 16], and is the phrase usually employed elsewhere for supernatural appearances at Gipse, Moses and Elijah (Matx. 14), xiii.
3; Mark ix. 4; Luke ix. 31), or of God (Acts vii. 2, 26, 30, 35). In the other Geospiel (Matv.
xvi. 9, 12, 14; John xxi. 1, 14)

Κηφᾶ, εἶτα τοῖς δώδεκα. ⁶ἔπειτα ὧφθη ἐπάνω πεντακοσίοις ἀδελφοῖς ἐφάπαξ, ἐξ ὧν οἱ πλείονες" μένουσιν ἔως ἄρτι, τινὲς

* πλείους.

6 twelve. After that He was seen "by above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain unto this present, the appearances after the Resurrection are expressed by ἐφάνη, ἐφανέρωσεν, and ἐφανερώθη.

The appearance to Peter is to Peter; where directly mento Peter; better it in the Google, but is implied in the exclamation of the Apostles on the return of the disciples from Emmans, 'the Lord is risen indeed, and that appeared to Simon' (Luke XXX VA). It is the second of the control o

The appearance to 'the Twelve' to the Twelve' treelve: travelve: the Apostles, on the evening of the day of the Resurrection, recorded in Luke xings and the designate the college of Apostles, like 'dumwin', or 'decenvin', in Latin. Judas certainly was absent if not Thomas.

6. Thus far the appearances would seem to be given in order of time, and so probably throughout, as indicated in the expression, 'last of all' (Γεγμανο'), in verse 6, although the classical precision of πρῶντο, ἐἐντιρνο, ἐἐνα, ε. τ.λ. is lost in the mere alternation of ἔνειτα and εἶνα.

The only appearance of the Gospel narratives which fire hundred; to the disciples in Galilee, Matt. xxviii. 16, 17, 18, where from the expression 'but some doubted,' it has been sometimes argued that there must have been others present besides the eleven Apostles, who alone are expressly mentioned. The number of those believers to whom our Lord is here said to have appeared far exceeds the sum total of believers (120) mentioned in Acts i. 15, as assembled in Jerusalem after the Ascension. If it were the meeting in Galilee, the larger number might perhaps be accounted for by the effect of our Lord's teaching as still preserved in the scene of His original ministrations. If, as is perhaps implied by the order in which it occurs, it were some meeting at Jerusalem not mentioned in the Gospels, then we must suppose that the numbers were swelled by Galilean or other disciples, not yet dispersed after the concourse of the Passover.

For έπάνω πεντακούοις, instead ο΄ ἐπάνω ἢς compare προθήναι ἐπάνω ὀφταρίων τριακοσίων, Mark xiv. 5, and Ex. xxx. 14, xxxix. 3. (LXX) ἀπὸ ἐικοσατοῦς καὶ ἐπάνω. Chrysostom says that some in his time took ἐπάνω to be, 'in the sky,' or 'on a hill.' ἐάπά faw to externe 'once.'

i. e. 'on one occasion, but on one occasion only; 'or 'at once,' i. e. 'to the whole number, not at different times, but at the same time.' The first will agree best with the usual meaning of the word, the second with the context.

δὲ ἀκοιμήθησαν. ⁷ἔπειτα ὤφθη Ἰακώβφ, εἶτα τοῖς ἀποστόlan bbA *

7 but some are fallen asleep. After that, He was seen "by James, of πλείονες, 'the majority. μένουσι, 'continue alive.' For a similar use of the word uivw. comp. John xxi. 22, 23. The survivors are mentioned as so many living witnesses of the event which had taken place between twenty and thirty years ago. By speaking of those who had died in the interval, he may perhaps imply that, if there were no Resurrection (comp. 1 Thess. iv. 15), there would then be, as it were, a special injustice done to those, few as they might be, who had been tantalised by the glimpse of another world in the vision of their risen Lord, without the hope of sharing in it themselves. To them would apply almost literally the words, 'Then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ have perished (verse 18). For ἐκοιμήθησαν, compare vii. 39, xi, 30,

7. The appearance to James is elsewhere only mento James: tioned in the 'Gosnel of the Hebrews': 'But the Lord, when he had given the linen garment to the servant of the high priest [this apparently alludes in some manner to the story in Mark xiv. 51], went to James and appeared to him. For James had sworn that he would not eat bread from that hour in which he had drunk the cup of the Lord, until he should see Him risen (resurgentem) from the dead. "Bring," said the Lord, "a table and bread;" he brought a table and bread, and He blessed it, and broke it, and gave it to James the Just, and said to him, "My brother, eat thy bread because the Son of man is risen from the dead" (Hieron. Catal. Scriptor. in Jacob.).

The vow of James in this passage is founded apparently on our Lord's speech in Matt. xxvi. 29. ('I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom '); and agrees with the ascetic traits ascribed to James (Eus. H. E. ii. 23). The whole story coincides with the assertion (John vii. 5) that 'His brethren believed not in Him.' On the other hand, it would be difficult to reconcile the immediateness of the appearance, as implied in this narrative, with the order in which it is here related, not amongst the first, but amongst the last of the appearances; an arrangement which agrees better with the tradition in Eusebius. that the appearance to James was a year after the resurrection. The same argument also tells against a recent, and not improbable, conjecture, that if Cleopas, in Luke xxiv. 18, is Alphaus, his companion may have been his son James: and that thus the appearance at Emmaus may have been the one here spoken of.

The only special appearances here recorded are those to the two chief Jewish Apostles, Peter and James, who are also singled out from the rest in Gal. i. 18, 19, ii. 9, 11, 12, and, by implication, in 1 Cor. ix. 5, and in this case, each is introduced as ushering in an λοις πᾶσιν. ⁸ἔσχατον δὲ πάντων ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι ὤφθη κὰμοί. ⁹ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι ὁ ἐλάχιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων, ôς οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς καλεῖσθαι ἀπόστολος, διότι ἐδίωξα τὴν ἐκ-

s then 'by all the apostles. 'But last of all—'as by one born sout of due time,—He was seen 'by me also'. For I am the least of the apostles, that am not 'fit to be called an appearance to the Apostles collectively.

The appearance to 'all the Apostles' may be identified with that in John the Apostles; 26; in Matt. xxviii. 16; or in Acts i. 4; the last is most probable. The word $\pi \tilde{a} \sigma \iota \nu$ is added:

(1) To indicate an appearance to the Aposales, not singly but collectively, like ¿ɨxɨna! in verse 6; or (2) To mank the contrast of the appearance to James. 'First to James, then not only to James but to all,' in which case it would be an argument in favour of the identity of James of Jerusalem with James the son of Alhhæns.

The first is most in accordance with the position of the words, which, in case the second interpretation were right, would in classical Greek be rois #asiv or τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀποστόλοις. But the order of the sentence, especially as regards the last word, is so frequently disturbed in this Epistle (see note on viii, 11), that on the whole the latter interpretation may be preferred as best agreeing with the sense. The variation of phrases in St. Paul is so frequent that no stress can be laid on the distinction between τοῖς δώδεκα in ver. 5, and role amourohous here. τῷ ἐκτρώματι is probably 'the rφ εκτρώματι 18 probably 'the untimely offspring,' as in Job iii. 6, 16; Eccles. vi. 2. (LXX.); the Apostle calling himself so, partly in allusion to the abruptness of his conversion, partly to his inferiority to the other Apostles as explained in the next verse, 'the least of the apostles, who am not meet to be called an apostle.' The corresponding word abortivus, in Latin, was metaphorically applied, as here, to such senators as were appointed irregularly (Suet. Oct. c. 35, 2). The word itself is of Macedonian Greek, and corresponds to the Attic ἄμ6λωμα. The article is prefixed, as referring to the general faot of abortions. Theophylact says that some in his time took it to be 'the last child' (υστερον γέννημα); a meaning which would suit the contrast equally, but can hardly be accented without more authority.

cepted without more authority. ἄφθη κάμοί. The word here applied to the appearance of our Lord to St. and to Paul, is the same as that St. Paul used in the indirect allusions to it in the Acts

(ix. 17, xxvi. 16), and agrees with St. Paul's own expression in ix. 1: 'Have I not seen (eise léopaca; I's the Lord Jesus? I no both the passages he must refer chiefly, if not exclusively, to the vision on the road to Damascus (Actis ix. 1). the account in the Acts understates what the Apoutle says of himself. Nothing is there given, except the dazzling light and the voice. Whether, however, it is κλησίαν τοῦ θεοῦ· 10 χάριτι δὲ θεοῦ εἰμὶ ὅ εἰμι, καὶ ἡ
10 anostle, because I persecuted the Church of God: but by the

that the Apostle conceives the whole scene as making up the impression here described, or whether he speaks of some distinct appearance not expressed in the narrative in the Acts, it is evident that both here and in ix. 1, he considers himself to be a witness of the Resurrection, as truly as the other Apostles. That the manner of the appearance, however, was different, is implied both by the words in this passage, 'to one born out of due time,' and also by the only other direct allusion which his Epistles contain to the fact, in Gal. i. 16, 'God was pleased to reveal His Son in me' (ἀποκαλύψαι έν έμοί), which implies an inward, rather than an outward revelation.

9. The greatness of the vision awakens in him the thought of his own unworthiness, and therefore, instead of proceeding at once to the result of his mission, he dwells for a moment on the humiliating circumstances which distinguished it from the call of the other Apostles. 'I say "to one born out of due time," and "last of all," for I (έγω γάρ), whatever may be the case with them, am the least of the Apostles. The ground of this keen selfreproach was the fact, naturally recalled to him by the circumstances of his conversion, that he had 'persecuted the Church of God.' The expression 'persecute ' (διώκω), or ' persecute the Church of God,' seems to be appropriated in an especial manner to St. Paul. It is used by himself of this act, in Gal. i. 13, 23: 1 Tim. i. 13; and in the Acts ix.

4, 5, xxvi. 11; the last passage (lôbicor fue cai de rie lôw πôλει) indicating the peculiar appropriateness of the word in his case, from its original sense of 'pursaing.' The expression 'the sake of greater solemnity, perhaps also to mark more strongly his sense (as in Gal. i. 13), that the Christian society which he persecuted had superseded the ancient Church in the name of which he presecuted.

έκανός, 'fit,' see 2 Cor. iii. 5. A like digression, occasioned by the mention of his mission, is found in Eph. iii, 8, where the expression 'the least of the apostles' is carried out into the still stronger expression 'less than the least of all the saints' (έλαχιστοτέρω πάντων των άγίων). Another is 1 Tim. i. 12-16. where, as here, there is the allusion to his persecution of the Church,- who before was a blasphemer and persecutor (&ώκτης) and injurious:' with still more vehement expressions of self-abasement- sinners, of whom I am chief.' In all these three passages the contrast between his present and his past life is naturally connected with the goodness of God by which the change was effected. In this passage the thought is coloured by the historical character of the Epistle. He here expresses his sense, not only of what he had been, but of what he actually felt himself now to be. 'By the grace of God I am what I am.' And the force of this is explained by what follows. 'And χάρις αὐτοῦ ἡ εἰς έμὲ οὐ κενή ἐγενήθη, ἀλλὰ περισσότερον αὐτῶν πάντων ἐκοπίασα, οὐκ ἐγὼ δέ, ἀλλὰ ἡ χάρις τοῦ

grace of God I am what I am: and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God on His grace was not in vain: vea. I toiled more abundantly than they all.' It is a correction of his strong expressions; a protest against the possible misconstruction of his words by those to whom he had previously alluded in the same indirect manner, in ix. 1-5, when there was a question of his right to the Apostleship,-'though I am the least of the Apostles, though I am not fit to bear the name which I bear, though it is but by the goodness of God that I am anything, yet still I am what I am; it is not for nothing that God's goodness was so wonderfully shown towards me. Although my right to the name of an Apostle may be doubted, even by myself, yet my exertion has been greater than that of any of the Apostles.' Compare the whole passage of 2 Cor. xii. 7-12. κενή, 'vain,' i. e. 'without fruits,' as in 14 and 58. His exertions are at once the effect and the repayment of God's favour.

iκοπίασα, 'I toiled,' as in Matt. vi. 28; Luke v. 5; Acts xx. 35; Rom. xvi. 6. For both words see Phil. ii. 16, οὐκ εἰς πενὸν ἐκοπίασα.

This thought of self-exaltation is but momentary, and he returns to the feeling of dependence and humiliation from which he had started—"Yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me." For this complete merging The exact sense is, 'The 'The gracious countenance and grace of free goodness of God, God.' manifesting itself in His gifts;' and hence, as in the analogous word ayann (Love), the meaning fluctuates between the abstract attribute of God, and its concrete exemplifications in the qualities or faculties of the human heart and mind. Such are the shades of meaning which it bears, as thrice repeated here; ' By the undeserved goodness of God;'-'the goodness of God which extended itself to me (h sic έμέ, not έν έμοί)' - ' the goodness of God which toiled with me (σὺν ἐμοί).' In this last expression the goodness of God is personified, as elsewhere Sin, Death, Love. (See note on xiii. 4.) 'By my side was another Power, sharing in my toils and difficulties. It was the Good Hand of God.' Compare 9con συνεργοί, iii. 9; 2 Cor. vi. 1. This sense is brought out more strongly by the omission of h before avv, in B. D1, F. G.

11. He now sums up his whole argument by merging whatever θεοῦ * σὺν * ρωί. 11 εἴτε οὖν * γω εἴτε * κεῖνοι, οὖτως κηρύσσομεν, καὶ οὖτως * επιστεύσατε.

· in our.

11 with me. 'Whether, therefore, it were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed.

differences there might be between-him and the other Apostles in the one fact, which both alike had to announce. 'Whether it were I or they,' implies again the consciousness of a supposed rivalry between his claims and those of others, and helps to explain the short interruption in verse 10,

' ούτως κηρύσσομεν: such continues to be our message; such at your conversion was your belief (ἐπιστεύσατε).'

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XV. 1-11.

I now call to your remembrance, in conclusion, the substance of the glad tidings which I announced to you, and the mode in which I told it; glad tidings indeed of which you hardly need to be reminded, since you not only received it from me, but have made it the foundation of your lives ever since; and not only have made it the foundation of your lives, but are to be saved by it now and hereafter, if only you hold it fast in your recollection, if your conversion was anything more than a mere transitory impulse. Yes, you must remember it; for it was among the very first things which I told to you, as it was among the very first which I learned myself. It was: That Christ died for our sins, fulfilling in His death the prophecies concerning One who was to be wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities, and whose soul was to be an offering for sin. That he was laid in the sepulchre, and that out of that sepulchre He has been raised up and lives to die no more, again fulfilling the words in the Psalms, which declare that His soul should not be left in the grave, and that the Holy One should not see corruption. Itold you also, as a proof of this, that He appeared to Kephas, chief of the Apostles, and then to the Apostles collectively. Next came the great appearance to more than five hundred believers together, the majority of whom are still living to testify to it, though some few have carried their testimony with them to the grave. Then again came a twofold appearance; this time not to Kephas, but to his great colleague, James, and afterwards, as before, to the Apostles collectively. Last of all, when the roll of Apostles seemed to be complete, was the sudden appearunce to me: a just delay, a just humiliation for one whose persecution of the congregation of God's people did indeed sink me below the level of the Apostles, and rendered me unworthy even of the name, and makes me feel that I owe all to the undeserved favour of God. A favour indeed which was not bestowed in vain, which has issued in a life of exertion far exceeding that of all the Apostles, from whose number some would wish to exclude me: but vet, after all, an exertion not the result of my own strength, but of this same Favour toiling with me as my constant companion. It is not, however, on any distinction between muself and the other Apostles, that I would now dwell. I confine muself to the one great fact of which we all alike are the heralds, and which was alike to all of you the foundation of your faith.

THE FIRST CREED, AND THE FIRST EVIDENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

THE foregoing Section is remarkable in two points of view: I. It contains the earliest known specimen of what may be called the Creed of the early Church. In one sense, Early indeed, it differs from what is properly called a Creed Creed, which was the name applied, not to what new converts were taught, but to what they professed on their conversion. Such a profession is naturally to be found only in the Acts of the Apostles; as an impassioned expression of thanksgiving, in Acts iv. 24-30; or more frequently as a simple expression of belief, in Acts viii. 37 (in some MSS.), and in Acts xvi. 31, xix. 15. But the present passage gives us a sample of the exact form of the oral teaching of the Apostle. It cannot be safely inferred that we have here the whole of what he means to describe as the foundation of his preaching; partly because of the expression ' first of all,' partly because, from the nature of the case, he brings forward most prominently what was specially required by the occasion. Still, on the whole, the more formal and solemn introduction of the argument, 'I delivered. I received,' as in xi. 23, and the conciseness of the phrases, 'died,' 'was buried,' and the twice-repeated expression 'according to the Scriptures,' imply that at least in the third and fourth verses we have the original formula of the Apostle's teaching. And this is confirmed by its similarity to parts of the Creeds of the first three centuries, especially to that which, under the name of the Apostle's Creed, has been generally adopted in the Churches of the West.

- Of the details of this primitive formula, enough has been said. But it is important to observe also its general character. Two points chiefly present themselves, as distinguishing it from later productions of a similar nature: (1) It is a strictly historical composition. It is what the Historical. Anostle himself calls it, not so much a Creed as a 'Gospel;' a 'Gospel' both in the etymological sense of that word in English as well as in Greek, as a 'glad message,' and also in the popular and ancient sense in which it is applied to the narratives of our Lord's life. It is the announcement, not of a doctrine, or thought, or idea, but of simple matters of fact; of a joyful message, which its bearer was eager to disclose, and its hearers eager to receive. Dim notions of some great changes coming over the face of the world, vague rumours of some wide movement spreading itself from Palestine, had swept along the western shores of the Mediterranean; and in answer to the inquiries thus suggested, Apostle and Evangelist communicated the 'things that they had seen or heard,' Thus the Apostle's 'Gospel' was contained in the brief summary here presented, and such a summary as this became the origin of the 'Gospels,' and, according to the wants of the readers, was expanded into the detailed narratives which still retain the name of 'glad tidings,' though, strictly speaking, that name belonged only to the original announcement of their contents.
- (2) Amongst the various forms of the creeds of the first four centuries, there are only two (those of Textullian) and of Epiphanius?; from whom, probably, it was derived Grandel in the Nicene Creed) which contain the expressions or the Old here twice repeated, "according to the Scriptures," and in those two probably imitated from this place. The point, though minute, is of importance, as helping to bring before us the different aspect which the same events wore to the Apostonical age and to the next generations. If in so compendious an account of the facts of the Gospel history, the Apostle twice over repeats that they took place in conformity with the ancient prophecies, it is evident that his hearers must have been not only familiar with the Old Testament, but anxious to have their new faith brought into connexion with it. Later ages have delighted in discovering mystical anticipations or argumentative proofs of the New Testament in the Old; but these words carry us back to a time when the events of Christianity required, as it were, not only to be illustrated or confirmed, but to be justified by reference to Judaism. We have in them the sign that, in reading this Epistle, although on the shores of Greece, we are still overshadowed by the hills of Palestine; the older covenant still remains in the eye of the world as the one visible institution of Divine origin; the 'Scriptures' of the Old Testament are still appealed to with undivided reverence, as the stay of the very writings which were destined so soon to take a place, if not above, at least beside them, with a paramount and independent authority.

¹ Adv. Prax. c. 2.

Earliest account of the Resurrection of Christ

II. This passage contains the earliest extant account of the resurrection of Christ. Thirty years at the most, twenty years at the least, had elapsed,-that is to sav, about the same period as has intervened between this year (1857) and the French Revolution of 1830; and, as the Apostle observes, most of those to whom he appeals as witnesses were still living; and he himself, though not strictly an eye-witness of the fact of the Resurrection, yet in so far as he describes the vision at his conversion, must be considered as bearing unequivocal testimony to the belief in it prevailing at that time. Its importance in regard to the details of the appearances shall be noticed elsewhere,1

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD. Chap. XV, 12-34.

In the preceding verses the Apostle had carried himself and his readers back to the time when he first came among them, and when they had eagerly embraced the message which he bore of the Resurrection of Christ. He had recalled to them the enthusiasm with which they had received it; the steadfastness with which they clung to it; the hopes which it held out to them.\(^1\) He had recalled also the very words (\(^{\cup}\) \text{Acyp}\) in which he had announced it; the successive scenes by which it had been attested; the appearances to Peter and James the greatest of the elder Apostles; the appearances to all the Apostles in a body; the appearance to the whole company of believers, with some of whom they might themselves have conversed; the appearance, lastly, to himself, himself a living proof of the reality of the vision; the vision a certain sign of the reality of the Apostleship. On this one point, amidst their other differences of character and calling, himself and the other Apostles, himself and his readers, were all agreed.

¹ See Essay 'On the Relation of the Epistles to the Gospel History,' at the end of this work.

And now what was, or ought to be the result of this agreement? 'If the chief announcement concerning Christ be, that He has been raised from the dead, how is it possible for any of you to maintain that there is no such thing as a resurrection of the dead?' It is a burst of indignant surprise, which is immediately followed by a rapid exhibition of the irreconcilable character of the two statements. The argument would seem to imply that those who denied the general Resurrection, still admitted the Resurrection of Christ; but this is not quite certain, because in his appeal to the Resurrection of Christ he may be addressing himself, not to the false teachers themselves, but to the Corinthians who might be deluded by them; and the great particularity, with which he has enumerated the several witnesses of the Resurrection, may be taken to indicate that there were some who doubted it. But however this may be, he assumes the truth of the fact here, and uses it as the chief answer to his opponents. The connexion which he endeavours to establish between the denial of the general Resurrection, and the denial of Christ's Resurrection, although it may be coloured by his prevailing idea of the identification of Christ and His followers, appears in this instance to rest on the simple argument, that if they denied any such thing as a resurrection, they must deny it in every instance, and therefore in the case of Christ, as well as of the dead generally.

¹ xv. 1. παρελάβετε . . . ἐστίκατε. . . σώζεσθε.

1º εἰ δὲ χριστὸς κηρύσσεται, ὅτι ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγήγερται, πῶς λέγουστυ ˚ ἐν ὑμῶν τινὲς ὅτι ἀνάσταστς νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστυ, οἰδὰ ὁ χριστὸς ἐγήγερται ¹ ἐεὶ ἐδ ἀρασταις νεκρῶν ούκ ἔστυ, οἰδὰ 'χριστὸς ἐγήγερται ¹ ἐεὶ ἐδ χριστὸς οὐκ ἐγήγερται, κειὸν ἄρα ˇ [καὶ] τὸ κηρυγμα ἡμῶν, κειὴ καὶ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν, ¹ εἰρισκόμεθα ἐς καὶ ψειδομάρτυρες τοῦ θεοῦ, ὅτι ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν κατὰ τοῦ θεοῦ ὅτι ἡγεμεν τὸν χριστόν, ὁν οἰκ ἡγεμεν εἰ πρα δρα νεκρὸ οἰκ ἐγέρονται, ¹ ἐεὶ γὰρ νεκρὸ οἰκ ἐγέρονται. ¹ ἐεὶ γὰρ νεκρὸ οἰκ ἐγέρονται.

* Tipes és buis. * Om. nal. * nest de nal.

12 Now if Christ is preached that He is "raised from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the Is dead? But if there is no resurrection of the toded," neither is 14 Christ 'raised: and if Christ be not 'raised, then 'also' our preaching is vain, 'vain also is' your faith, and we 'also are found false witnesses of God, because we 'testified of God that He raised up Christ; whom He raised not up, if so be

16 that the dead are not raised. For if the dead are not

12—14. To the minds of the deniers the phrase σύσσους νερών probably conveyed only the notion of the general resurrection, more especially as the tation is not side of the control tation is not side of the phrase tation is not side of the phrase pure. Still the denial by implication, and if expressed universually (not h discrease; τ ω νερών, still the control exclude in every whape the possibility of a revival from the etróp, etróp: 'unmeaning in my preaching, because the Resurrection was its subject; and your faith, because it rested on this preaching.' The idea of Christ's higher nature, which might exempt Him from the ordinary law of death, does not here enter into consideration.

grave.

15—19. He proceeds to explain these two assertions: the futility of his preaching in 15, 16 (εὐρισκόμεθα . . ἐγήγερται); the futility of their faith in 17, 18 (εἰ ἐι . . ἀπώλοντο).

First. 'Our preaching is unmeaning, because we are then discovered to have borne false testimony of God's acts.' They had been specially chosen to be witnesses (µáqrvprc) of this very fact, Acts x. 41, ii. 32, iii. 15, xiii. 31.

carà voi Seoù is: either (1)

'with regard to God,' with a latent allusion to the sense of 'invoking;' or, (2) 'against God,' i. e. 'imputing to Him what He has not done.' Compare Matthew xxvi. 62, xxvi.
13; Deuteronomy xix. 15, 16
(LXX.); and for the sense 1 John
i. 10.

οὐδὲ χριστὸς ἐγήγερται: ¹⁷εἰ δὲ χριστὸς οὐκ ἐγήγερται, ματαία ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν³ [ἐστίν], ἔτι ἐστὲ ἐν ταις ἀμαρτίαις ὑμῶν, ¹⁸ἄρα καὶ οἱ κοιμηθέντες ἐν χριστῷ ἀπώλοντο. ¹⁰εἰ ἐν * Omit keriu.

17 raised, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not 18 raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins, then 19 they also which are fallen asleep in Christ reprished. If

17, 18. Up to this point his argument has been (not 'if Christ be not risen, there is no resurrection,' but) 'if there be no resurrection, then is Christ not risen.' Now, he advances a step further, and after having in 15, 16 shown that by the denial of the general resurrection his preaching would be rendered unmeaning, he now in 17, 18 shows, secondly, that by the consequent denial of the resurrection of Christ, their faith would be rendered unmeaning ($\mu \alpha \tau \alpha i \alpha = \kappa \epsilon \nu \eta$) in verse 14), for there would be this twofold result:

 That if Christ be not risen, they would not rise from the death of sin. Compare Rom. vi. 1—11.

(2) That if Christ be not risen, those believers who are already dead have perished. This last is put as the climax of the whole argument. One of the most harrowing thoughts, as we see from 1 Thess. iv. 13, to the Apostolical Christians, was the fear lest their departed brethren should by a premature death be debarred from that communion with the Lord which they hoped to enjoy; and in itself nothing could be more disheartening to the Christian's hope, than to find that Christians had lived and died in vain.

By 'those who have fallen asleep in Christ,' the Apostle means 'those who have died in communion with Christ' "the Christian dead (like 'the dead in Christ,' of veçooi of xygerg'. Eav xiv. 13; 1 Thess. iv. 16). And here, as in xv. 51 and 1 Thess. iv. 16). And here, as in xv. 51 and 1 Thess. iv. 16, be distinguished between these and those of whom he had spoken in verse 6, as having in an especial manner fallen sakeep, with Christ in immediate prospect.

Observe the connexion between the spiritual and the literal resurrection, of both of whiteour Lord's resurrection is equally the pledge. Compare Rom. viii. 10, 11: John v. 24—29.

counderse...cruborro, when they died... they periated entirely; corresponding in the future world to tert to raic duperriace in this. "The living will be left in sin, the dead will be left in dealt, which is the consequence of sin, in opposition to workedow. Compare 2 Cor. ii. 15: 'In them that are saved, and in them that perish.'

19. He still dwells on the deep sadness of the conclusion to which the denial of the resurrection would bring them. If in this sentence we are guided by the casiest sense, then the word 'only' (μόνον) must be connected with the της 'Εσρ rawing, and its transposition to the certification of the stransposition to the certification of the stransposition to the certification of the stransposition to the stransposition to the stransposition of the case rely on the position of the case rely on the position of the τῆζωῆ ταντη "ἐν χριστῷ ἡλπικότες ἐσμὲνμόνον,ἐλεεινότεροι πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἐσμέν. "Φυνὶ δὲ χριστὸς ἐγήγερται ἐκ «εκρῶν, ἀπαρχή τῶν κεκοιμημένων» ²ἔπειδὴ γὰρ δί ἀνθρώ που "θάνατος, καὶ δι ἀνθρώπου ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν. ²²ἄσπερ ἡλπικότες ἐσμὲν ἐν Χριστῷ μόνον.

 Add ἐγένετο.
 δ Βάνατος.

in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men 20 most miserable. But now is Christ raised from the dead, 21 °A the first fruits of them that sleep. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

word, and the tense of πλπικότες έσμέν, then the word 'only ' refers to the whole clause, the stress being specially laid on πλπικότες έσμέν, 'If we have nothing but a mere empty hope in Christ which will never be fulfilled.' 'If we have hoped to the end, and done nothing more than hope.' (Comp. Rom. viii. 24, 'Hope that is seen is not hope.') The use of Zwn, as distinct from a state, for a period of existence, is very rare in the New Testament, and occurs only here and in Luke xvi. 25.

iλεεινότεροι, 'more wretched than all who are not Christians.' 'We have fallen from the greatest of hopes, which we have purchased at the greatest of costs.' For the force of the expression see on verse 32.

20. From this gloomy thought he breaks off into the joyful contrast, suggested by the fact that, in spite of these speculations, Christ has risen; and that as in His not rising the Christian's hope of immortality would have perished, so in His resurrection the whole human race rises also.

ruri δέ, 'but as it is,' as the case actually stands. For the idea see Col. i. 18, ἀρχὴ πρωτό-τοκος ἐκ νεκρῶν.

απαργή, 'the first fruits,' or first sheaf, to be followed by the whole harvest, alluding to the first fruits of the passover in Levxxiii. 10, 11, on the second day corn was, for the first time, offered on the altar, as a consecration of the coming harvest. Compare the allusion to the Paschal foast in v. 6. Both probably were suggested by the time of year when the Aposlae wrote.

των κεκοιμημένων is put, instead of των νεκρών, as the natural expression for the Christian dead, of whom the Apostle is chiefly thinking.

21, 22. The reason of this connexion between His resurrection and ours is, that he is the representative of the whole human race (see xii. 12) in this its second creation. (Comp. Rom. v. 12, 18.) There is also the idea, which in the Gospel appears not as much with regard to the Resurrection as the judgment, that man must in some sense be redeemed, raised, judged, by man. Hence the constant expression 'the Son of Man,' applied to Christ. The second part of the argument where 'man' is individualised in Adam and Christ, explains the first part. 'As in the Adam (ἐν τῷ ᾿Λδάμ), so in the Messiah (ἐν τῷ χριστῷ), or Second γὰρ ἐν τῷ ᾿Αδὰμ πάντες ἀποθνήσκουσιν, οὕτως καὶ ἐν τῷ χριστῷ πάντες 【ωοποιηθήσονται, τὰ ἔκαστος δὲ ἐν τῷ ἰδιῷ τάγματι· ἀπαρχὴ χριστός, ἔπετα οἱ ᾿τοῦ χριστοῦ ἐν τῷ παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ, ³⁸ είτα τὸ τέλος, όταν ᾿παραδιδοῖ τὴν βασι-

22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, 23 but every 'one in his own order: Christ the first fruits, 24 afterward they that are Christs's at His coming, then the end, when He 'shall deliver' up the kingdom to God 'and the Man. For the application of the name of 'the Second Adam' to the Messiah, see Schöttgen on verse 47. Here, as in Rom. xi. 32, the Apostle is not thinking of the fate of the wicked, but of the universal love of God and the universal power of Christ.

ζωσποιηθήσονται must, according to the general use of the word, be taken of resurrection to life eternal.

33, 94. What follows is not strictly necessary to the argument; but here, as often (see on it; 25, xi. 3), when he speaks of the glory and exaltation of Christ, he carries it up to the highest point, where it loses itself in the glory of God; as if fearing lest the harmony and continuity of the Drivine order should in any way be interstoned in the continuity of the Drivine order should in any way be interstoned in the property of the property of God, as in the upward flight, at any lower resting-place than the presence of God himself.

In 1 Thees. iv. 18—17, as here, the Apostle implies a first resurrection of the followers of Christ at the moment of his coming; and in Rev. xx. 13, 14, xxi. 3, 4, 22—25, there is the same ge meral description of the overthrow of death, and of the absorption of all power and glory and outward rule, into the immediate presence of God.

The whole resurrection of the human race is represented as one prolonged fact, of which the resurrection of Christ is the first beginning.

rάγματι, i. e. 'troop, as in an army,' see (in Wetstein) Jos. B. J. III. iv. 2; Plutarch. Oth. c. 12; where rάγμα is used as synonymous with λεγεῶν, as though the scene were presented of troop after troop appearing after their victorious general.

oi τοῦ χριστοῦ, i. e. 'believers,' see 1 Thess. iv. 16; Rev. xx. 4.

 τὸ τέλος, 'the end of the world,' see Matt. xxiv. 13.
 ὅταν, 'whenever the time comes for His giving up.'

τήν βασιλείαν, 'His reign' (see Rev. xix. 15). The article is explained by what follows. The especial object of introducing in this place the destruction of power and authority is for the sake of showing that race, will be destroyed in their destruction. When all the sin and erils for the restrain to pushbased of which power and authority exist, shall have been put down, then all power and authority, exist, shall have been that the sin and the sin the Lord' shall be swallowed up in love of the Eather.' λείων τη θεφ' καὶ πατρί, όταν καταργήση πῶσων άρχην καὶ πάσαυ ἐξουτίαν καὶ δύναμμι. "Θεὰ γρὰ απότη βασιλικίαν, ἄχρις οῦ" θῆ πώττας τοὺς ἐχθροὺς "[αὐτοῦ] ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ. "ἐσχατος ἐχθροὸς καταργείται ὁ θάωστος. "πώττα γρὰ μιτιτές το τὸν τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ. "πατα νὰ εἰκηι [ότι] πώτα ὑποτέταιται, δηλου ότι ἐκτὸς τοῦ ὑποτάξαιτος αὐτή τα πάττα. "ὅταν θὰ εἰκηι [καὶ] τα πάττα. "ὅταν δοῦ ἐψοτος ἀντίς [καὶ] τα πάττα. "ὅταν δότα δὰ ὑποτάγης ἀτὸς [καὶ]

б*у*, в От. ад

Father, when He shall have 'made to vanish away' all rule 2an dall anthority and power. For He must reign, till He hath 28 put all 'His enemies under His feet. The last enemy that 27 'is made to vanish away' is death. For 'He 'put all things under His feet.' But when He sath, 'that 'all things are put under Him,' it is manifest that He is excepted who did put all sthings under Him: and when all things shall be' put under 'Him,' καταργήση, He = 'Christ.' πάσαν έξουσίαν, κ.τ.λ. 'All power of every kind, of man, of Death, and lastly of Himself, which intervenes between the supreme government of God and the creatures He has made."

25, 26. ἐcɨ γɨŋ βαπλέευν. The reign of Christ here spoken of may be either between the first resurrection and 'the end,' or more generally from the time of His ascension; in which case compare the description of its beginning in Eph. i. 20–22, where many of the same expressions recur: 'He set Him at His own right hand in the principality, and power, and raight, and power, and raight, and dominion, and put all things under his feet.'

Christ must reign (Banhséur).

till Death, who is personified as being the rival king (Rom. v. 14), is destroyed (Rev. xx. 14). Then, and not till then, will the object of Christ's reign be fully accomplished. The context shows that 'until '(Agne o's) marks the limit beyond which Christ's reign is not to extend.

ε̃εῖ, i. e according to the prophecy in Ps. ex. 1.

9y, He = Christ as in 24.

yáp, a reason for καταργήση.

27. ὅταν τὰ ἐτπη, i. e. in Ps.

viii. 6. What is in the first instance said of man generally, is here, as in Heb. ii. 7; Matt. xxi.

16. applied to the Messiah, as the representative of man. ὑπέταξεν and τοῦ ὑποτάξαντος refer to God.

28. This final subordination of the Son to the Father, is apparently the object of the digression, which closes with it.

'That God may be all in all.' This passage, as expressing what the 'That God Apostle looked to as in all.' the consummation of the world, must be regarded as the consumnation of all his teaching. In almost all later systems of religion and phitosophy, there has heen an element corresponding to this Apostolic aspiration, a belief that God is, or is to be, everywhere, and in all things. The Apostle's words (δ 3cio πάντα tν πάνιν) may almost seem to have given birth to the name literally αὐτὸς ὁ υἱὸς ὑποταγήσεται τῷ ὑποτάξαντι αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα, ἴνα ἢ ὁ θεὸς "πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν. ¹⁹ ἐπεὶ τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτι-

* τα πάντα.

then shall also the Son Himself be "put under' Him that put all 29 things under Him, that God may be all in all. Else what based on them, though now always used in reproach, 'pan-theism.' It is not necessary here to distinguish these words from the grosser, or the more exclusive forms of this belief to which the name of pantheism is usually applied. But the expression shows that such a belief in God's universal and all-pervading presence was not inconsistent with the reverence for the Divine nature and the sense of human responsibility which run through all the writings of St. Paul. Two points seem especially intended :-

First, this is the most striking instance of the mode in which he always endeavours to carry up the feelings of his readers from Christ to God. His intention is not to lower or disparage the Divine union of Christ with the Father, but to point out that there is a height yet beyond, from which all the blessings of redemption no less than of creation flow. It has sometimes been customary to represent God as the object of fear : Christ as the object of love; God as the source of justice, Christ as the source of mercy. The Apostle's object here is, if one may so say, directly the reverse: Christ is spoken of as the representative of authority, of control; God is spoken of as the Infinite rest and repose, after the close of that long struggle for which alone power and authority are needed. The Pagan views of the Divinity never shrunk from multiplying the agencies, the persons, the powers of God; wherever an operation of nature or of man was discernible, there a new deity was imagined. It is this feeling which the Apostle throughout combats. Even if in this present world a distinction must be allowed between God, the Invisible Eternal Father, and Christ, the Lord and Ruler of man, he points our thoughts to a time when this distinction will cease, when the reign of all intermediate objects, even of Christ Himself, shall cease, and God will fill all the universe (πάντα), and be Himself present in the hearts and minds of all (iv wager).

Secondly, the Apostle here brings out, not only the Unity, but the spirituality of the Godhead. All the outward institutions which had held men together, even the massive framework of Roman society, with its vast array of rule and powereven the reign of Christ Himself, holding together as it does the Churches which 'walk in the fear of the Lord '(Acts ix. 31):shall cease in that intimate communion of man with God, which is the last and highest hope we can look forward to: 'I saw no temple in the city: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof,' Rev. xxi. 22, 23.

29. The connexion here is one ζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν; εἰ ὅλως νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται, τι shall they do who are baptized for the dead? If the dead are of the most abrupt to be found in St. Paul's Epistles. Digressions, like that in verses 20-28, are frequent, but they are usually so wound up as to bring the Apostle again to the point from which he digressed. But in this instance he leaves the new topic just at the moment when he has pursued it, as it were, to the remotest point, and goes back to the general argument as suddenly as if nothing had intervened. The two instances most similar are, v. 9vi. 8: 2 Cor. vi. 14-vii. 1. Here. as there, the confusion may possibly have arisen from some actual interruption in the writing or the material of the letter; the main argument proceeding continuously from verse 20 to verse 29, and the whole intervening passage, 21-28, being analogous to what, in a modern composition, would be called a note.

He has said in 19, 'but for the resurrection, we should be the most to be pitied of all men.'
'Then, if the resurrection has not taken place, as a pledge of the general resurrection which is to come, what will be the meaning of the action of those who are baptized for the dead? what is the meaning of our incurring hourly danger?'

τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενου would be more regular if it were τε ποιήσουσε βαπτιζόμενοι οἱ βαπτι; τω the will then be their object in being baptized? like τέ σοιέτει ελαίοντες, Acts xxi. 18. It may however, be put absolutely shere, τί ποιούμεν, in John xi. 47, 'What is the meaning of doing as we do?'

Such is the general sense of the passage. The interpretation of the particular words 'baptized for the dead,' (of βαπιζόμενο ὑπὶρ τῶν κεκοῶν) is very obscure.

Their natural signification. 'those who are baptized in behalf of the Baptism dead,' is strongly confirmed by finding that there were some sects in the first three centuries who had this kind of baptism. Tertullian (adv. Marcion, v. 10: Res. Carn. cap. 48) and Chrysostom (Hom. 40, in 1 Cor. xv.) speak of it as existing amongst the Marcionites, who flourished chiefly A.D. 130-150 : and Epiphanius says, in his chapter on the Corinthians, that there was 'an uncertain tradition handed down, that it was also to be found amongst some heretics in Asia, especially in Galatia, in the times of the Apostles." From Chrysostom we learn that 'after a catechumen was dead they hid a living man under the hed of the deceased; then coming to the dead man they spoke to him, and asked him whether he would receive baptism: and he making no answer, the other replied in his stead, and so they baptized the living for the dead. From Epiphanius we learn that their object in so doing was, 'lest in the resurrection the dead should be punished for want of baptism, and not subjected to the powers that made the world ' (Hær. 28, 6), to which must be added the opinion of Hilary (Ambrosiaster), that it was done 'in the case of unexpected death, in the fear lest the dead should καὶ βαπτίζονται ὑπὲρ * αὐτῶν ; ³⁰τί καὶ ἡμεῖς κινδυνεύομεν * ὑτὸν τὰν νικοῦν:

not raised at all, why are they then baptized for hthem?

either not arise at all, or rise to evil.' In spite of these testimonies to the existence of the practice, every ancient writer (with the exception of the one last quoted) repudiates the notion of any allusion to it in this place: evidently from the fear of seeing any Apostolic sanction bestowed on a custom which seemed to them superstitious. Yet there are considerations which mitigate the strangeness of the passage. St. Paul's mode of speech and action abounds in instances of accommodation to the feelings and opinions of those addressed, without any expression of condemnation on his part. Such is his frequent adoption of reasonings founded on the allegorical interpretation of the Old Testament, as being the arguments acknowledged by his readers. See the allegory of Hagar and Sarah, in Gal. iv. 21-31, 'Tell me ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?' Such. again, is the speech at Athens, Acts xvii. 23, where it is not necessary to suppose that St. Paul actually believed the Unknown God of the Athenians to be the true God, but only that he availed himself of the opportunity of the inscription on their altar to introduce the truth amongst them. Such, again, were his own accommodations to Jewish practices, of vows, observances of feasts, &c., as recorded in Acts xviii. 18, 21, xxi. 26, which we cannot, consistently with Gal. iv. 10, suppose that he really valued. but which he adopted in conformity with the principle laid down in 1 Cor. ix. 22, 'I am made all things to all men.'

And, if it be urged that the practice here mentioned was so superstitious that the Apostle could not have alluded to it without repudiating it; if even Chrysostom, three centuries later, could not speak of it (as he system thinself) without bursts of 'laughter,' we must consider the probable circumstances of the case.

Even if we take it at its worst, it is not more extravagant than the ancient patristic practice of administering the Bucharist to infants, and of placing the Euclarist to infants, and of placing the Euclarist to infants, and of placing the Euclarist Country of the Euclar

But there is a higher point of view, from which it might have been regarded. There was then, as always, the natural longing of the survivors to complete the work which untimely death had broken off; and in that age, when the self-devotion of a Christian's life was concentrated in the one act of baptism, it might have seemed fitting that where the conversion had not been completed, the friends of the dead should step, as it were, into his place, and in his name undertake the dangers and responsibilities of baptism, so that after all the good work would not have been πασαν ώραν; 31 καθ' ήμέραν αποθνήσκω, νη την ύμετέραν cut off by death, but would continue 'confirmed to the end, blameless in the day of Jesus Christ' (i. 8). This endeavour to assume a vicarious responsibility in baptism is the same as afterwards appeared in the institution of sponsors; and the striving to repair the shortcomings of the departed is the same which, in regard to the other sacrament, still prevails through a large part of Christendom, in the institution of masses for the dead. In the Apostolical age. too, these feelings would be rendered more natural by the belief in the near approach of the coming of the Son of man, when the living might expect to prepare the way for the dead whom they personified; and the whole practice would appear most conformable to the Apostle's spirit, if we could suppose, as seems rather implied in the words, that those who were thus baptized for the dead, had not been themselves baptized before, but now for the first time, from a mixed feeling of love for the dead and devotion to Christ, entered upon the hardships of a Christian's life. Such a feeling and practice we can easily imagine to have existed, even amongst those whose faith in the general resurrection had either been obscured or shaken: an inconsistency indeed, but such as is often found in moments of great enthusiasm, or characters exposed to counter-influences; and such as the Apostle might naturally have laid hold of as in the above-mentioned instance in the eneech at Athens, to enforce his own argument.

Why ralso stand we in jeopardy every hour? I protest by

And finally, though the Church of Corinth was subject to the Apostle's authority, yet it appears by numerous passages both to have claimed and to have received from him so much independence, as to make it by no means a matter of course that he should feel called to reform all their practices; and the words themselves convey, not indeed a reproof, but a distinction between his own practice, and that to which he alludes, TWV VEKOWY implies (not the dead generally, but) a particular class of the dead: and huris, in the next clause, implies that the Apostle has been speaking just before of others distinct from himself.

On the whole, therefore, this explanation of the passage may be safely accepted: (1) As a curious relie of primitive superstition, which, after having prevailed for the product of the pr

The other interpretations, which all require an alteration or addition to the words of the text, are: (1) 'What shall they gain who are baptized for the removal of their dead works? (2) 'What shall they gain who are baptized for the hope of the resurrection of the dead? (Chrys.) (3) 'What shall they gain who are baptized into the death of Christ's).

καύχησιν, * ἀδελφοί, ην έχω ἐν χριστῷ 'Ιησοῦ τῷ κυρίῷ ημῶν. 32 εἰ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ἐθηριομάχησα ἐν Έφέσῳ, τί μοὶ your *boasting, *brethren', which I have in Christ Jesus our $2 Lord, I die daily. If after the manner of men I *fought

» Οπ. άδελφοί.

'What shall they gain who are afflicted (compare Luke xii. 50; Mark x. 38) for the hope of the resurrection of the dead? (5) 'What shall they gain who are baptized at the moment of death, with a view to their state when dead?' (alluding to the practice of deathbed baptisms). (6) 'What shall they gain who are baptized into the place of the dead martyrs ?' (7) 'What shall they gain who are baptized into the name of the dead (John and Christ)?' (8) 'What shall they gain who are bantized in order to convert those who are dead in sin?' (9) 'What shall they gain who are baptized only to die?' (10) 'What shall they gain who are haptized over the graves of ήμεῖς, 'the Apostles,' as in iv. 9, but chiefly himself.

(10) 'What shall they gain who are haptized over the graves of the dead?' (i.e. martyrs, &c.) (11) 'What shall they gain who are haptized when dying, as a sign that their dead bodies shall be raised?' (12) 'What shall they gain who are haptized for the good of the Christian dead?' i.e. to hasten the day of the sumber of the elect.

kai may refer merely to the continuation of the argument, but has more force if the 'beptism for the dead 'involved real dangers and cares: "I did daily;' and compare 2 Cor. iv. 10, 'always carrying about the dying of the Lord Jesus in our body.'

νη την υμετέραν καύχησιν.
 This contains two peculiarities:

έν χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, 'in Christ Jesus.' These words are, strictly speaking, taken with ἔχω, but they also refer to the whole sentence. See note on viii. 11.

32. κατά ἄνθρωπον, ' with only human hopes,' partly as in ix. 8, so that the whole stress of the sentence is laid upon it; i. e. ' without the hope of immortality,' — 'as far as man could see.'

έθηριομάχησα, 'I fought with beasts.'

(I.) Against taking this literally, observe (I.) The improbability of such a punishment for Paul as a Roman citizen; or of his escaping, had he been ex-of his exaping, had he been expensed to it. (2) The omission of it in Acts xix. 9—41 (when, if at all, it must have taken place), and in 2 Cor. xi; 24—28, where to remarkable a danger could hardly have been passed over. (3) The fact that the tumult of Acts xix. 29—41, took place (not in the Roman amphilathetre, but) in the Greek theatre, where such

τὸ ὄφελος; εἰ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται, Φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν αὖριον γὰρ ἀποθνήσκομεν. ³³ μὴ πλανᾶσθε. Φθείρουσιν ἦθη with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me? If the dead are not raised, 'let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die.'

exhibitions were not usual. (4) The use of such words metaphorically, from the familiarity of the image of the gladiatorial combats, as in iv. 9, appointed last '-' a spectacle to angels and men' (ἐπιθανατίους, ὅτι θέατρον); 2 Tim. iv, 17: 'and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.' Compare with this the announcement to Herod Agrippa of Caligula's decease, 'the lion is dead.' The phrase occurs in Pompey's speech in Appian (Bell. Civ. p. 273), οΐοις θηρίοις μαχόμεθα, and still more precisely in Ign. Rom. c. 5 : ἀπὸ Εὐρίας μέχρι 'Ρώμης θηριομαχώ διά γῆς καὶ θαλάσσης, alluding to the guard of soldiers whom he proceeds to call 'the leopards.'

(II.) For taking it literally, observe: (1) That the metaphor would be more violent here than in Ign. Rom. c. 5, where it is evidently drawn from the actual prospect of the wild beasts in the amphitheatre. (2) That 'Asiarchs' (who are mentioned in Acts xix. 31, as restraining the tumult of Demetrius) appear in Polycarp's martyrdom (Eus. H. E. iv. 15) to have had the charge of the wild beasts. (3) That, although there are no remains of an amphitheatre at Ephesus, yet traces of a stadium are to be seen; and in the case of Polycarp, wild beasts were used in the stadium at Smyrna. (4) That the young men at Ephesus were famous for their bull-fights, Artemidor. i. 9 (Wetstein). (5) That iv Epiow seems a forced expression, if the allusion is merely to opponents generally.

On the whole, however, the metaphor is most likely. It may, in connexion with Ephesia, have been suggested partly by the above-mentioned buil-fights, partly by the speech of Hencitus, in which he called "the Ephesians" by this very name of the best of the property of the property

Whatever be the danger, it must be the same of which he speaks in Rom. xvi. 4 (7); 2 Cor. i. 8; Acts xx. 19.

The legend of his battle with wild beasts (Niceph. H. E. ii. 25) was probably founded on this passage.

32. d recond out systemers, especially if the second interpretation of cará a⁴θρωτον be right, is best joined with the following. Let us eat, ⁴dc, is taken from Isaiah xxii. 13 (LXX.), but probably meant to allude to the Gentile forms of Epicureanism of which Hornes is the well known representative. (See Wetstein, ad loc.)

33. He checks himself in this half-ironical strain, and solumnly warns them against the heathen contaminations by which they were surrounded; though still drawing his imagery and language from the heathen world. 'Be not deceived' is the common formula of warning against sensual sins, see vi. 9.

φθείρουσιν ήθη χρήσθ' όμιλίαι

*χρήσθ' όμιλίαι κακαί. ¾ ἐκινήψατε δικαίως, καὶ μὴ ἀμαρτάνετε· ἀγνωσίαν γὰρ θεοῦ τινὲς ἔχουσιν. πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν ◊ λαλῶ.

* See note.

b héve.

33 Be not deceived. 'Evil communications corrupt good man-34 ners.' Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God. 'To your shame I speak this.

κακαί. This Iambic verse is quoted Menander's from the Thais of Menander (see Menand.

MRUMADE'S pander (see Menand (14, 59) calls tough Clem. Alex. (Strom. 14, 59) calls it a troyic lambic; and Socrates (H. E. iii. 16) quotes it as proving that St. Paul read Euripides. It shows the Apostel's acquaintance with heaties and item (literature, and to a certain extent, his sanction of it; as in his quotation from Aratus in Acts. Xvii. 28, and Epimenides in Tit.

i. 12. Menander was famous for 'the elegance with which he threw into the form of single vorses or short sentences, the maxims of that practical wisdom in the affairs of common life, which forms so important a feature in tite new consely. Anthologies of such sentonces were compiled by the ancient grammarians from the ancient grammari

1033.)

The maxim is aimed against the seductive effect of language such as that which he has just quoted, and each word is emphatic... 'Character (iβη) may be undermined by talk (δμιλίαι).

Honesty (χρηστά) may be undermined by roguery (κακαί).'

The form μαρστά, which occurs in A.B.D.E.F.G.J.K. and all the MSS, seems to show that it had lost its character as a verse, and become a proverb. The reading χρήση, although retained from the Received Fact by Lachmanu, has no authority, and is probably an alteration to suit the motre.

34. ἐενήψατε δεκαίως. Alluding still to the revely and evil conversations in verses 32, 33, the says: "Wake up from your drunken ergies." For this special sense of favrips, see Gen. Ex. 24; I Sam. xxv. 37; Jodi 1: 5 (L.X.). For this sense of êtenius (= 50rr êtenius eleval), see the annotations on drierres; in Thucyd. 1. 21. voi µỷ hµpprávers seems to have adouble sense, first, as merely explaining èxcuiser, but, secondly, as expressing that this waking was to be a true wakefulness, a knowledge not like the boasted knowledge of the false teachers, but one without sin (compare Eph.iv. 26). Hence the expression dyvewiav γάρ.

⁶ Some, 'i.e. the same as in verse
12. 'I speak to your shame' (as in vi. 5).

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XV. 12-34.

If, then, you all acknowledge that the revival of Christ from the grave is the one great subject of our message concerning Him, how can there be found any of your number so inconsistent as to deny a resurrection from death? If there be no such thing as resurrection from death, then even the revival of Christ has not taken place; and of this the consequence would be, that our message and nour faith would be alike unmeaning: Our message, because we are then convicted, not only of falsehood, but almost of blasphemy, in having ascribed to God, in the revival of Christ, an act which, if there be no resurection, is impossible: Your faith, because, if Christ was never revived from the grave, then the pledge of nour revival from the death of sin is lost: non, who are still aline. are still under the dominion of sin; those who have already died in the hope of sharing His life are lost and perished, With a prospect like this, with a hope in Christ belonging only to this life, and never to be realised, no human lot could be more vitiable than ours. But this is not so: Christ has been revived from the grave, and that not for himself only, but as the first of the long succession of those who have fallen asleep in death. Death prevailed in the world through man; as we read, that in the person of the first man, Adam, the sentence of death was pronounced on all. In like manner, through man also is to be the resurrection from death, inasmuch as in the person of the Second Man, the annointed Messiah, the pledge was given of future life to all. None shall be excluded; all shall rise; all shall be delivered from the power of death. First, is Christ Himself; then, His true followers at the moment of His return. Then will be the end of all things, when our relations to Christ shall be lost in our relations to Him who is supreme above all. But that end shall not be, till Christ has put down every power, however mighty, which now sways the destinies of the world. He shall continue His reign till, in the words of the Psalm, 'all enemies shall be subdued under his feet;' all enemies, and amonast them the last and greatest, Death himself. Yet, however highly Christ is exalted as the Lord who sits on the right hand of God, as the Son of man who is crowned with glory and honour, there is yet a higher sphere beyond; and when His work is over,

He Himself will retire from the victorious contest, and God shall be the One pervading principle of the universe. Such is the full length of the prospect opened to us by the revival of Christ: else, indeed, we should be, as I said before, objects of the deepest commiseration: all our strongest feelings, all our most active labours, would have been without an object. What would then be the meaning of those who, in their affection for their departed friends, are baptized for them, and for them undergo the responsibilities and hardships of a Christian's life? What would be the meaning, in our own case, of our hourly exposure to danger and death? It is no exaggeration. I protest to you, by that which is dearest to me in the world, - my pride in you my converts which I have in Him in whose name I suffer, -I protest to you, that I am daily on the verge of the grave. And, to take the most recent instance, if I had rested only on human hopes when I fought the other day at Ephesus as if with wild beasts in the amphitheatre, what would have been my gain? No: if there be no resurrection, we must speak in the language, not of those high spirits who, even in the heathen world, despised all danger in the hope of immortality, but rather of those Enicurean sensualists, whose very words have been anticipated by the prophet Isaiah: ' Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' Be not deceived by the sensual arguments, which really prompt this denial of the resurrection. Even the heathen proverb warns you that good characters are not proof against the contamination of evil words. Wake from your drunken revelry to a sense of duty; for there are those among you who know nothing of God and His power. To your shame be it spoken.

THE APOSTLE'S HOPE OF IMMORTALITY.

THE preceding argument is the earliest and greatest instance of the Christian argument for a future life. It is to Argument the New Testament what the Phado of Plato and the for a future life and the for a future life in the Phado of Plato and the for a future life in the Phado of Plato and the future life is elsewhere urged, assumed, implied; but here alone we are able to trace the new elements which the Apostle regards as carrying fresh conviction to his Greek converts, and to himself as a Pharisee. The belief itself was familiar to both; but it is here asserted on grounds which, both to Gentile and to Pharisee, were alike unknown before.

The whole argument, though branching out in various forms, resolves itself into one fact; namely, the resurrection on the Re- (or, as the Apostle here calls it, the revival) of Christ. surrection For, first, he appeals to the general belief in this fact as justifying the possibility of a belief in a general resurrection: 'If the dead are not raised, then is Christ not raised.' One instance of a victory over death is enough to prove that it is not intrinsically absurd. And, secondly, he regards it as an instance which proves not only the possibility, but the necessity of such an issue for the human race: 'Christ is the first fruits of the dead.' He, the Messiah, opens a new era in the history of the world; He goes before, and all others necessarily follow. And thirdly, on the belief in Christ and on Christ's resurrection, the Anostle has staked everything. If it is to lead to nothing further than this storm and tumult and strife, in which an Apostle's life is of necessity passed, then the greatest hopes that ever were raised will be disappointed; the greatest energies that ever were exerted will have been employed in vain.

Such is the substance of the argument when divested of its peculiar form and of its digressions. Philosophical arguments there are none, beyond what Cicero had already stated,1 when he argued that, but for the instinct of immortality, no one would be so mad as to spend his life in toils and dangers. Theological arguments there are none, beyond what may be found in Rabbinical treatises,2 which in outward form expressed the belief that the Messiah would come at the end of all things, and that God would then swallow up Death. But there is a life and force here breathed through them all, which makes us feel that, whereas they were before like the dry bones of the prophet, they now 'live, and stand on their feet, an exceeding great army.' The Apostle's argument is in fact, though not in form, the same as that of our Lord to the Sadducees: 'God is not a God of the dead, but of the living.' 'If He called Himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, then those whom He brought into so close a connexionwith Himself must partake of His life.' So here St. Paul argues that so great an event as the resurrection of Christ cannot end in nothing; the faith which has been built upon it, the converts that have been won by it, the hopes that have been raised upon it, the new epoch that has been begun with it, must extend beyond the grave, even to the utmost limits of human imagination. He does not say, 'We are miscrable now, and therefore must be compensated by a reward hereafter; 'but, 'We shall be miscrable now, if our faith is not a substance, but a delusion; and it will be a delusion, unless our life reaches into the next world, as Christ's life has reached. 'He does not say, 'The Messiah its come; and then, in order to fill up His glory and show his power, the dead shall rise;' but, 'The Messiah has come; already in this life is the beginning of another; the succession of resurrections in now opened, which shall not be closed till all be completed.'

 ¹ Tusc. Disp. i. 15.
 See Wetstein on xv. 24, 54.

In this, as in almost all the Apostolical teaching, the whole strength and impulse of the argument is derived from the feryour with which the Apostle embraced the thought of Christ's appearance and work on earth. As logical or rhetorical arguments, his reasonings may be such as were already in existence, or such as may appear to us inconclusive; but as consequences from the acknowledgment of the grandeur (if one may so say) of the event which had transfixed and absorbed his whole imagination and being, they are irresistible. They may fail of themselves in persuading us of a future state, but they cannot fail in persuading us of his intense conviction of the reality of Christ's resurrection; and not of its reality only, but of its supreme importance as a turning-point in the destinies of the human race. And in proportion as this is impressed upon ourselves, in that proportion will our belief in a future state be as unshaken as his; and this Chapter be used, as it always has been used, for the consolation and hope of all mourners,

THE MODE OF THE RESURRECTION.

35' Αλλ' έρει τις Πῶς ἐγείρονται οἱ νεκροί; ποίφ δὲ σώματι έρχονται; 36° άφρων, σύ δ σπείρεις, οὐ ζωοποιείται, ἐὰν μη αποθάνη. 37 καὶ δ σπείρεις, οὐ τὸ σώμα τὸ γενησόμενον σπείρεις, άλλα γυμνον κόκκον, εἰτύχοι, σίτου ή τινος τῶν λοι- $\pi \hat{\omega} \nu^{-38} \hat{\delta} \delta \hat{\epsilon} \theta \hat{\epsilon} \hat{\delta} \hat{\epsilon} \delta \hat{\delta} \hat{\delta} \hat{\omega} \sigma \hat{\omega} \nu \alpha \hat{\upsilon} \tau \hat{\varphi} \sigma \hat{\omega} \mu \alpha \kappa \alpha \theta \hat{\omega} \hat{\varsigma} \dot{\eta} \theta \hat{\epsilon} \lambda \eta \sigma \hat{\epsilon} \nu$, καὶ

25 But some 'one will say, 'How are the dead raised up? and 36 with what body do they come?' 'Fool! that which thou 37 sowest is not quickened, except it die; and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that will be, but bare grain, it may be of wheat, or of some of the other kinds of 33 grain; but God giveth it a body as He willed, and to

35. The Resurrection itself having been thus maintained, the Apostle proceeds to answer questions, which arose from a too literal and material conception of it. This he does by pointing out the greatness of the change necessarily effected by death, and the consequent impossibility of transferring our notions of this life unaltered to that which is to come.

έγείρονται, έρχονται, ' are to be raised, are to come.'

σώματι. Throughout this passage, the corresponding modern notions would be better conveyed not by the word 'body,' but 'organisation,' or 'framework.'

36-38. The first analogy used by the Apostle is that of corn, which is an instance, not merely of existence being preserved in spite of change, but of change being absolutely necessary for its perfection. Comp. John xii. 24. 36. άφρων, 'Fool!' This expression, as elsewhere in the New Testament (see especially Luke xi. 40, xii. 20), indicates a stronger moral condemnation than would be pronounced on a mere scrupulous inquirer, and is in favour, therefore, of taking the harsher view of these objectors

σύ. 'Thou,' is emphatic here, as if saying, 'Learn by thine own experience; '-- ' the very seed which thou thyself sowest; -'even in the case of ordinary human sowing.'

37. εὶ τύχοι, perhaps,' see xiv. 10.

τῶν λοιπῶν, i.e. σπερμάτων. ήθέλησεν, ' as He willed,' refers back to the original act of creation. The present operations of nature are not the result of accident, but of one original Divine

38. ἐκαστῷ τῶν σπερμάτων ϊδιον σωμα. Comp. Gen. i. 11.

The second analogy is suggested by the last words of the preceding one. As each seed has own its peculiar type, so each order of creation has its separate composition: and hence, from the endless variety of organisations in things seen, he argues the possiέκάστῶ τῶν σπερμάτων *ἴδιον σῶμα. ³⁹οὐ πᾶσα σὰρξ ή αὐτὴ σάρξ, ἀλλὰ ἄλλη μὲν δάνθρώπων, ἄλλη δὲ σὰρξ κτηνών, αλλη δὲ [σάρξ] πτηνών, άλλη δὲ ἰχθύων. ⁴⁰καὶ σώματα ἐπουράνια, καὶ σώματα ἐπίγεια· ἀλλὰ ἐτέρα αμὲν ή των επουρανίων δόξα, έτερα δὲ ή των επιγείων. 41 ἄλλη δόξα ήλίου, καὶ άλλη δόξα σελήνης, καὶ άλλη δόξα ἀστέρων· ἀστήρ γὰρ ἀστέρος διαφέρει ἐν δόξη. 42 ούτως καὶ ἡ άνάστασις τών νεκρών. σπείρεται έν φθορά, έγείρεται έν

Add σὰρξ. · Ελλη δὲ ἐνθόων, Ελλη δὲ πτηνών, 4 The hiatus in MS. C. which began in XIII. 8. ends at [μèν ἡ τῶν.

39 reach of the seeds its' own body. All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one an of men, another flesh of beasts, 40 th another affesh of birds, and another of fishes". There are also "heavenly bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the rheavenly is one, and rthat of the terrestrial is another. 41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for star differeth

42 from star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption:

bility of a new organisation yet to be disclosed hereafter. κτηνών, 'quadrupeds;'

properly, 'beasts of burden 40. σώματα έπουράνια. In the first instance he means the angels; with the 'glory' (δόξα) of the light, which is described as attending their appearance (comp. Matt. xxviii. 3; Acts xii. 7). But he passes to the wider sense which includes the stars, according to the modern phrase 'heavenly bodies,' or as in the contrast drawn by Galen (De Usu Part. 17, 6, in Wetstein ad loc.) between τα άνω σώματα (expressly meaning thereby the sun, moon, and stars) and rà γήϊνα σώματα. And the word glory' especially leads him to dwell on this new analogy, as illustrated by the variety of the celestial phenomena themselves.

41. 'I say not star, but stars; for even in them there is a difference.' The object of the clause is (not to indicate a difference between the future conditions of the blessed, but) to give a new instance of the endless subdivision of variety in this world.

42. He now applies these analogies to the resurrection. There is no word which can be precisely selected as the nominative to σπείρεται and έγείρεται. The sense requires σώμα: the construction, ή ἀνάστασις. This indeterminate meaning is best rendered 'There is a sowing,' 'there is a raising.' Throughout this parallel, the image of the verb is taken from the seed; the image of the substantives, from the variety of visible organisations, Compare the whole passage with 2 Cor. v. 1, 2, and Phil. iii. 21: 'Who shall change our vile body (rò σώμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν) into αφθαρσία. 43 σπείρεται εν ατιμία εγείρεται εν δόξη. σπείρεται έν ασθενεία, έγείρεται έν δυνάμει 44 σπείρεται σώμα ψυχικόν, εγείρεται σώμα πνευματικόν. *εί εστιν σώμα ψυχικόν, εστιν καὶ πνευματικόν. 45 οὔτως καὶ γέγραπται Έγέ-νετο ὁ πρῶτος [ἄνθρωπος] 'Αδὰμ εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν, ὁ

• Omit el

» καὶ ξστιν σώμα πνευμ.

of the first, may have 43 it is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory: it is sown in 44 weakness, it is raised in *strength: it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. "Alf there is a natural body, 45 there is ralso a spiritual. And so it is written, 'The first man Adam was made a living soul; 'the last Adam a the likeness of His glorious body (τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ). 44. 'A natural body' (σώμα ψυνικόν) is, as the name implies (not simply a dead corpse, but) 'a body animated by the principle of animal life; according to the threefold division of human nature (1 Thess. v. 23) taken by St. Paul, partly from the Aristotelian phraseology, partly from the new ideas of Christianity.

The 'spiritual body' (σωμα πνευματικόν) is the organisation animated by the Divine life breathed into it from the Spirit of God.'

εί έστιν σώμα ψυχικόν, έστιν καί πνευματικόν. He argues that, if there is a lower stage, there will also be a higher stage.

45. The contrast is suggested and confirmed by the words of Gen. ii. 7 (LXX.), which is quoted literally, with the addition of the words πρώτος and 'Αδάμ. The quotation is made for the sake of the implied contrast, which, to the Apostle's mind, followed from the already existing Rabbinical doctrine, that Christ was the second Adam. 'The last Adam is the Messiah.' (Neve Shalom ix. 9, Schöttgen ad loc.) The contrast between the 'quickening spirit' (πνεύμα ζωοποιούν) of the Second Adam, and the 'living soul' (ψυχή ζωσα) been suggested by the Second Rabbinical distinction Adam. drawn between the words in Gen. ii. 7: Lord breathed into Adam the breath of life ' (πνοήν ζωής), and 'he became a living soul' (ψυχήν (woar); as though the first were a higher life imparted to man from above, and the second a lower animal life which he acquired by his fall. " And God breathed the breath of life." See what man is to do, to whom God gave a holy soul, that He might give him the life of the world to come. But he, by his sins, turned himself to the animal soul of brutes.' Jalkath Raboni, fol. 17, 1. 'It is not written, "He made man a living soul," but " Man became a living soul." Man of himself turned to the life of creatures taken from the carth.

return to that which at first dwelt in us." ' (Schöttgen on 1 Cor. ii. 13, 14.) πνεύμα ζωοποιούν, i. e. 'not merely a soul alive in itself, but a spirit which gives life to and left the life created above, which gave life to its possessor. Rabbi Tarchum said, "Let us έσγατος 'Αδάμ είς πνεθμα ζωοποιοθν. 46 άλλ' οὐ πρώτον τὸ πνευματικόν, άλλὰ τὸ ψυχικόν, έπειτα τὸ πνευματικόν. 47 ὁ πρώτος ἄνθρωπος ἐκ γῆς χοϊκός, ὁ δεύτερος ανθρωπος* έξουρανοῦ. 48 οΐος ὁ χοϊκός, τοιοῦτοι καὶ οἱ χοϊκοί, καὶ οἷος ὁ ἐπουράνιος, τοιοῦτοι καὶ οἱ ἐπουράνιοι · 49 καὶ καθώς έφορέσαμεν την εἰκόνα τοῦ γοϊκοῦ, ^b φορέσωμεν καὶ την εἰκόνα * Add & Képson φορέσομεν.

46 quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which 47 is spiritual. The first man is "from the earth, "earthy: the 48 second man is a from heaven. As is the earthy, such are also "the earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are 49 also "the heavenly. And as we "bore the image of the . Gr. of the dust.

others.' Compare John v. 21.

vi. 63, xi. 25, xiv. 6,

46, 47, άλλ' οὐ πρῶτον τὸ πνευματικόν. 'But the spiritual body is not the first;' in allusion to the first and second Adam, as enlarged upon in verse 47. Earthy (χοϊκός), more properly of dust, i. e. as described in Gen. ii. 7, χοῦν λαβών ἀπὸ τῆς

' From Heaven' (ἐξ οὐρανοῦ). Although this need not imply more than our Lord's Divine origin generally, as in John iii. 13, yet the precision of the contrast seems to point to something more particular, as c. g. His miraculous birth or the heavenly form assumed by Him since His resurrection. Philo (De Alleg. Leg. i. 12, 13; Mund. Opif. c. 46), explains the two accounts of the creation in the first and second chapters of Genesis, as referring to the double creation, first of the heavenly (οὐράνιος) or ideal man, then of the earthly (yijivos) man. From these passages, or from a common source, the expressions may have come to the Apostle. The difference consists: (1) in the interpretation of the 'heavenly man,' not in an ideal sense, but as exemplified in Christ; (2) in the fact, that Philo's interpretation, which makes the heavenly precede the earthly, is based on the two passages Gen. i. 27, ii. 7: whereas the Apostle's interpretation, which makes the earthly precede the heavenly, is based on the two clauses of Gen. ii. 7.

47. ὁ κύριος (A. D3. J. K., omitted in B. C. D1. E. F. G.) is probably an interpolation. It was, as Tertullian asserts (in Marc. ii. 10), substituted by Marcion here for arthowros, as in verse 45 for 'Αδάμ, to support his notion, that the human body of Christ was brought with Him from heaven; and then, having been thus incorporated in the text, it was turned by Chrysostom against the supporters of this very opinion in the fourth century.

48. 'The earthy' (οἱ χοϊκοί), = men in their mortal state; 'the heavenly' (οι ἐπουράνιοι) = Christians after the resurrection.

49. The mere contemplation of Christ ought to transform us into τοῦ ἐπουρανίου. ⁵⁰τοῦτο δέ φημι, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι σὰρξ καὶ αἶμα βασιλείαν θεοῦ κληρονομήσαι οὐ δύνανται, οὐδὲ ἡ φθορὰ την ἀφθαρείαν *κληρονομήσει. ⁵¹ ἶδοὺ μυστήριον ὑμῦν λέγω. πάντες [μὲν] *κοιμηθησόμεθα, οὐ πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα,

* κληρονομεί.

» μέν οὐ κοιμ. πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγ. See note.

so earthy, let us bear' also the image of the heavenly. Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither 'ashall corruption inherit incorrupsition. Behold I 'tell you a mystery. "We shall all sleep,

His likeness not only hereafter but now. See 2 Cor. iii. 18, iv. 11; Rom. viii. 29; Phil. iii. 21; 1 John iii. 2.

φορέσωμεν in A. C. D. E. F. G. J. K. Vulgate and Fathers has so great a preponderance of authority over φορέσομεν in B. that in spite of the hortatory character which has no connexion with the context, it must be preferred. The wish to retain the narrative character of the passage, as well as the likeness of sound between the two words according to the later pronunciation of Greek, may account for the confusion. He blends together (as in Rom. vi. 5) the change of death with the change of conversion- as before our haptism we bore (έφορέσαμεν) the likeness of mortality, so now let us bear the likeness of Christ.'

argument by a solemn conclusion. *But this I say' (rosire λέ σ,μμ) is his mode of calling attention to an emphatic warning, as in vii. 29: Whatever may be the speculations concerning The resurrection, and whatever the answer to the control of th

50, 51. He winds up the whole

Matt. xvi. 17), cannot inherit the kingdom of God' (compare vi. 10); the human body, if it is to rise again, must be entirely changed.

ίζου μυστήριον υμίν λέγω. 'Behold-look my words full in the face - they contain a truth, which we are slow to recognise, but which is true notwithstanding.' μυστήριον is used here as in ii. 7, Eph. iii, 3-5, for what was once hid, but now revealed to and by him. It may be doubted whether the expression refers to the particular description which follows, of the change of those who will be alive at Christ's coming: or to the statement, immediately preceding, of the general change needed for all. In favour of the more particular reference, is the parallel passage in 1 Thess. iv. 15, 'This we say unto you by the word of the Lord.' In favour of the more general reference is the solemn declaration already made-'This I say,' in verse 50, and the fact that in similar expressions elsewhere, the Apostle usually refers rather to his preceding than to his succeeding words.

Of all the various readings of this perplexed passage that of the Received Text as contained ⁵² ἐν ἀτόμφ, ἐν ῥιπŷ ὀφθαλμοῦ, ἐν τŷ ἐσχάτŋ σάλπιγγι· σαλπίσει γάρ, καὶ οἱ νεκροὶ *ἀναστήσονται ἄφθαρτοι, καὶ

* ἐγερθήσονται.

52 but we shall not all be changed', in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall in B. D3. E. J. K. is the best πάντες μέν (B. om. μέν) οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα. πάντες δὲ άλλαγησό- $\mu \epsilon \theta a$, 'We shall all of us, not die, but be changed;' i. c. 'Although it is by no means certain that all of us (i. e. myself and the Corinthians) shall die. vet it is certain that we shall all of us be changed.' The passage is personal to himself and his readers, and is written under the same expectation as that which appears in the parallel passage of 1 Thess. iv. 15-17, and in the expressions of vii. 29, and Phil. iv. 5, that the end of all things would take place within that generation.

somination is not precisely identical with a read-rejector, although often used as equivalent to it; expressing rathough often used as equivalent to it; expressing rathough expression of eath, than the act itself of dying. The words therefore do not assert the positive immunity of the last survivors from the death and the survivors from the death survivors from the death survivors from the death of the last survivors from the death of the survivors from the death of the de

The other readings, wavres (ai wavres, the wavres, the piece piece clause, έν ατόμω, κ.τλ., which annlies to an affirmative statement, like άλλαγησόμεθα, does not apply to a negative statement, like ούκ άλλαγησόμεθα. The defence of the Received Text is given at great length and with great fairness by Estius. Similar variations are to be found in the MSS, of clause 38 of the Athanasian Creed. The Received Text expresses the particular truth present to the Apostle's mind, in reference to himself and his hearers. The two other classes of readings probably ventured on the correction from a wish to express the abstract truth, without any such reference, έν ἀτόμω, κ.τ.λ. 'We, the living, shall be changed, and it will be in an undivided point of time, by a process not like the slow corruption and decay of death, but sudden, rapid, divine,' έν τη έσγατη σάλπιγγι. The stress is not on the gradual solemnity, but on the abruptness of the change; therefore the last trumnet is not the last of the seven with which, according to the Rabbis, the resurrection was accompanied, but the trumpet which shall sound then for the last time, having before sounded on all the great manifestations of judgment. (Ex. xix. 16: Ps. xlvii. 5; Zech. ix. 14; Isa. xxvii. 13.) For the trumpet at the last day see 1 Thess. iv. 16; Matt. xxiv. 31, and the seven trumpets in Rev. viii .- xi.

σαλπίσει, sc. ὁ σαλπικτής. It is ήμεις ἀλλαγησόμεθα. δε ξεί γὰρ τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσασθαι ἀφθαρσίαν καὶ τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσασθαι ἀθανασίαν. δε ὅταν δὲ τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσηται ἀφθαρσίαν καὶ τὸ sound, and the dead shall 'rise' incorruptible, and we shall be 55 changed. For this corruptible must 'be clothed in' incorruption, and this mortal must 'be clothed in' immortality, 54 But when this corruptible shall 'be clothed in' incorruption

(not 'the trumpet shall sound,' but) 'he' (i. e. 'he whose office it is') 'shall sound the trumpet.' Comp. Herod. ii. 47, ἐπὰν Σύση. So in some MSS. of the Vulgate, 'canet enim.' σαλπίστε is barbarous Greek for σαλπίγξει. καί is a Hebraism. 'at the moment of the trumpet's sound, this shall be ' as in the wording of Ps. civ. 29, 30, 32. The two subsequent clauses may be either: (1) united, as both depending on outwion, 'At the moment of the trumpet's sound, the dead shall be raised and the living shall be changed: ' or. (2) the first clause may be united with σαλπίσει, and the second made dependent on it. 'At the moment of the resurrection of the dead which shall take place at the trumpet's sound, the living shall be changed.' This last agrees more naturally with the whole context, which calls attention, not so much to the resurrection of the dead, as to the change of the living adduced in ἡμεῖς, i. e. 'we the living '= ἡμεῖς οἱ περιλειπόμετοι, 1 Thess. iv. 15, in opposition to the dead just mentioned.

illustration of it.

53. δεί γάρ κ.τ.λ. 'We, the living, shall be changed, because our corruptible bodies must become incorruptible, like the dead who are ruised incorruptible, and our mortal bodies must assume the immortality which saves them from the necessity of that death which in this life they will have escaped.'

54. The singular number, and the demonstrative pronoun, rò φθαρτόν τοῦτο, and τὸ θνητόν τοῦτο, both indicate that he is speaking in the first person, and points to his own actual body, This corruptible, this mortal frame, with which I am invested.' Compare at xeiper airas, 'these hands of mine,' Acts xx. 34; this 'body of death,' Rom. vii. 24; 'in this' habitation 'we groan,' 2 Cor. v. 2. For the general image of longing for a new and heavenly clothing (ἐνδύσασθαι), see 2 Cor. v. 2, 3; Phil. iii. 21.

54, 55. The argument closes in a burst of almost poetical feryour (as in the corresponding passage, Rom. viii. 31). Although connected with the subject on which he had just been speaking, viz., the transformation of himself and of those who might be expected themselves to live till the last day, yet it applies more or less directly to the whole preceding Section: 'When this last and final change shall have been effected, when the last vostiges of corruption and death shall have passed away in the last survivors of the human race, then it may truly be said that death has ceased to exist; then shall be fulfilled (for this sense of yevhorras, θυητὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσηται ἀθανασίαν, τότε γενήσεται ὁ λόγος ὁ γεγραμμένος, Κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος εἰς νῦκος. δο Ποῦ σου, and this mortal shall "have been clothed in' immortality, then shall be brought to pass the "word that is written, 'Death is 55 swallowed up in victory.' Where, O death', is thy "victory'?

see Matt. v. 18) the word which has been written long ago' (δ λόγος ὁ γεγραμμένος).

AND CO. STORMAGE AND CO

(I.) Isa. xxv. 8 in its first application refers to the 4 Death deliverance of Israel swallowed up (apparently from Sennacherib), and the remaining part of the passage ('the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces') is, in Rev. xxi. 4, applied, as the former part here, to the destruction of Death. It is rendered by the LXX. κατέπιεν ὁ θάνατος ἰσχύσας, 'Death was strong and swallowed up.' This version, which is against the whole tenor of the context, is not noticed here, and κατεπόθη ὁ Θάνατος εἰς νίκος, 'Death was swallowed up in victory, is an accurate transla-tion of the original words 172 תְּמֶוֹת לָנֵצְח, 'He will destroy death for ever,' except that, (1) יאָפ is taken passively, 'is swallowed up,' for 'He will swallow up.' (2) 1/2 is taken for 'swallow up,' instead of the more general meaning of 'dea variation occasioned by the frequent use of Karamireir in this sense by the LXX.; and in this place it suits better with eis vikos, 'swallowed into victory.' The Rabbis also said, 'In the days of the Messiah, God will swallow up death' (Wetstein ad loc.). (3) תנצח means 'altogether,' and this is the conventional sense borne by the words sic vikec, whenever they are employed by the LXX. to translate it, But St. Paul takes it not in this conventional sense of 'altogether, but literally 'into victory. and thus makes it the link of connexion between this and the passage from Hosea xiii. 44. That he should use the expression at all, is a proof that in this quotation, one of the very few which approximates more to the Hebrew than to the LXX., he still has in his mind not a Hebrew, but a Greek text- probably from some other version or reading than that contained in our present LXX.

The LXX. Version is ποῦ ἡ δίκη σου, βάνατε; ποῦ τὸ κέντρον θάνατε, * τὸ νίκος; ποῦ σου, * θάνατε, * τὸ κέντρον; 56 τὸ δὲ κέντρον τοῦ θανάτου * ή άμαρτία, * ή δὲ δύναμις τῆς τὸ κέντρον:

 ὁ ἄδη.
 τὸ νῶκος.

55 tWhere, O 'death", is thy sting"? *But the sting of death 57 is sin, and the strength of sin the law; but thanks be

σου ἄδη ' where is thy judgment, O death? where is thy goad, O grave?' wow arises from new, 'where?' having been read for אהי, 'I will be;' a change similar to that made also by the LXX. translators in verse 10 of the same chapter. dien, 'judgment,' is founded on the meaning which דְבֵּרִים sometimes bears of 'lawsuits,' as in Ex. xviii. 16, xxiv. 14. κέντρον,=' goad,' as in Prov. xxvi. 3 (LXX.). appears to be founded on an attempt to go back to the root of קטב, viz. קטב, 'to cut,' גערדף פין being in like manner the substantive derived from κεντεῖν.

From this text the The sting Apostle makes several variations: (1) Instead of δίκη, he appears to have read vien, which is altered further into Pikoc, for the sake of bringing it into closer connexion with vicos in the preceding quotation from Isaiah. This gives a different turn to the whole passage. It is still used by him to express generally the overthrow of Death, but that overthrow is now described, not as in the Hebrew and LXX. as a punishment inflicted on Death, but as the annihilation of his power. Hence result further variations. (2) σου is changed from a subordinate to a principal place in the sentence, as if the sense were, 'Where is the victory, the victory on which thou wast wont to pride thyself?' (3) κέντρον, instead of meaning the 'goad,' or 'stroke of God's wrath' on Death, now means the weapon borne by Death. (4) In consequence of this strong personification, bárare is substituted for acn in all the best MSS. A1. B. C. D. E. F. G. and in the Latin Versions (A1. omits the first clause, που σου, θάνατε, τὸ νίκος :). whereas $\display$ only occurs in A2. J. K., evidently to suit the passage in the LXX. This agrees with the usage of St. Paul, who never employs the word acnc, but frequently personifies Death as an active living power (xv. 26; Rom. vii. 24). (5) According to B. C. the order of the two clauses is inverted; 'victory' and 'the sting' changing the places given in the LXX version of Hos. xiii. 14. This variation (which, as in the case of ἄδη, is altered back in A². D. E. F. G. J. K. to suit the LXX.) was probably made to bring together, as nearly as possible, the two words vices which connect the quotations

56. It is difficult to determine whether death is here represented as a monster armed with a sting (like the scorpions of Rev. ix. 10), or, more prebably, as a person bearing a good (Acts ix. 5) to annoy the world. In either case, Sin is the wond, and the Law is the element which gives poison to the sting, or force to the blow. The difficult—to modern readers almost inexpliciable, thought of the

άμαρτίας ὁ νόμος: ¹⁵τφι δὲ θεφί χάρις τφι διόδοτει ἡμῶν το ὑκοςο διὰ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν 'Ίσσοῦ χριστοῦ. ¹⁸ ἀστει ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοί, ἐδραῖοι γίνεσθε ἀμετακίνητοι, περισσεύοντες ἐν τψι έργος τοῦ κυρίου πάντοτε, εἰδότες ὅτι ὁ κόπος ὑμῶν οὐκ ἐττιν κενὸς ἐν κυρίφ.

to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus 38 Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

connexion of Sin with the Law is here expressed for the first is here expressed for the first itime in the Apostle's writings; and is the germ of what is afterwards fully developed in Rom. v. 12-21, vii. 7-24. The natural overflow of the sentence into this thought shows its familiarity to his mind. It is as if he could not mention Sin, without adding that 'the strength of sin is the law.'

For a similar extension of the argument to thoughts not necessarily connected with it, but introduced from their close association with his whole frame of thinking and writing, compare i. 30, iii. 23 xi. 3.

57. At the thought that Death, and with Death the two enemies Sin and the Law, with which he himself had so long struggled, were now overcome, lie breaks forth into an abrupt thankegiving, in which the argument is finally dissolved. Compare Rom. vii. 25.

B. D¹. read νεῖκος for νῖκος, in all three places, and are followed by Jerome on Hos. xiii; Tertull. De Res. Carn. 51, 54; Cyprian ad Quir. iii. who read 'in contentione," or "in contentionem." The change, by likeness of pronunciation, was easy from vikee to ver-Koc, and the substitution of PETROC for bien in the LXX. would then be more natural. But it is more probable that the reading reigo; arose from a misreading of vices, and the sense, especially of verse 57, agrees better with vicec. which is the usual form in later Greek for viky. There is the same confusion of readings between veing and vince in Hos. x. 11; Jer. iii. 5; Amos i. 11 (see Estius). 58. The sudden subsidence of so impassioned a strain of triumph, into so sober a conclusion, is a remarkable instance of the practical character of the New Testament teaching. The expressions έδραΐοι, άμετακίνητοι. ούς έστεν κενός έν κυρίω, all have special reference to the resurrection, and to the doubts concerning it. The last words, ' abounding in the work of the Lord,' 'your labour in the Lord,' may refer to the homely duty which forms the substance of his subsequent remarks in the following chapter.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XV. 35-58.

It may be said, however, that though the revival of the dead is in itself possible and probable, yet there are difficulties attending the manner of it. To all such foolish questions there is a ready answer:

From the analogies of nature.

- (1) The change from seed into corn shows how life may be attained only through the medium of death, and how identity may be preserved, in spite of a total change of form.
- (2) The variety of organisation, both in the animal and material creation, is an instance of the wast extent to which new combinations of organisation can be carried, and shows the possibility of such combinations in the spiritual world, far beyond our present conceptions.

II. From the nature of the case.

- (1) We know the different principle of natural life in the First Man, or parent of the old order of creation, and of spiritual life in Christ, the Second Man, as the parent of the new order of creation. This leads us to expect, not an identijubly accomplished.
- (2) However hard to conceive, however long unknown, yet the truth is certain, that change, and not continuance, is the mode by which we shall pass into the spiritual world. Even those of us who are still alive at the coming of the Lord, though escaping the sleep of death with its dissolution and decay, will not escape a change. It will be sudden and instantaneous, but it will be complete; this mortal frame will avoid the actual stroke of mortality, and be clothed with its immortal vestment. Then will be fulfilled the ancient song of exultation over Death, he will be lost in victory-his victory will be transferred to us -he and his weapon Sin (that weapon which owes its edge to our old enemy the Law) will be destroyed, through our Lord Jesus Christ: and this victory comes to us from God Himself. Therefore remain unmoved by fear or doubt; be active in the work of your Master, looking forward to the completion and reward of your labours as certain.

THE APOSTLE'S VIEW OF A FUTURE STATE.

THIS passage exemplifies the soberness of the Apostle's view of a future life. He enters into no details, he appeals to two arguments only: first, the endless variety of the natural world; secondly, the power of the new life introduced by Christ. These two together fur-

Change, not continuity, to be expected:

nish him with the hope that out of God's infinite goodness and power, as shown in nature and in grace, life will spring out of death, and new forms of being wholly unknown to us here will fit us for the spiritual world hereafter. On one point only he gives a distinct and solemn assurance, namely, that change and not identity of form, was the lot which awaited all; not only those who were already dead, but those who might be still living when the end came. So firmly was the first generation of Christians possessed with the expectation of living to see the Second Coming, that it is here assumed as a matter of course; and their fate, as near and immediate, is used to illustrate the darker and more mysterious subject of the fate of those already departed. That vision of 'the last man,' which now seems so remote as to live only in poetic fiction, was, to the Apostle, an awful reality; and is brought forward to express the certainty that, even here, a change must take place; the greatest that imagination can conceive. The last of the human race will have passed away; but in that moment of final dissolution, the only thought that is present to the Apostle's mind is not death, but life and victory. The time was approaching, as it seemed, when, in the words of a modern author, 'not the individual only, but the species of man would be transferred to the list of extinct forms,' and all the generations of men would be 'gone, lost, hushed in the stillness of a mightier death than had hitherto been thought of,' To us the end of the world. though indefinitely postponed, is a familiar idea; then it was new in itself, and its coming was expected to be immediate. As in the trial of his individual faith and patience,1 it was revealed to him that 'Christ's grace was sufficient for him;' so also in this trial, which appeared to await the whole existing generation of men, it was also declared to him 'in a' revealed 'mystery,' that in that great change 'God would give them the victory' over death and the grave, 'through Jesus Christ.'

The question with which the passage opens, and which in later times has often been asked again with elaborate minuteness, 'How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?' is met with the stern reproof, 'Fool!' nor is what we call 'the resurrection of the body,' properly speaking, touched upon in these verses. The difficulties which have been raised respecting the Resurrection in the Apostle's time or in our own, are occasioned by the fullie endeadour to form a more distinct conception of another life than in our mortal state is possible. The inquiry which be answers is like that of the Sadducees, 'In the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven?' and the spirit of his reply is the same as that of our Lord,' In the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven. . . God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.' All that the Apostle directly asserts is that, whatever body there may be after death, will be wholly different from log anishs the present, and that the infinite variety of nature form.

The probable His more positive belief or hope on this subject must be sought in 2 Cor. v. 1-6. But from the two passages combined, and from such expressions as Rom. viii. 23, 'the redemption of our body;' Rom. viii. 11, 'He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies; ' Phil. iii. 21, ' Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body; ' thus much may be inferred :- that the Christian idea of a future state is not fully expressed by a mere abstract belief in the immortality of the soul, but requires a redemption and restoration of the whole man. According to the ancient creed of Paganism, expressed in the well known lines at the commencement of the Iliad, the souls of departed heroes did indeed survive death; but these souls were not themselves; they were the mere shades or ghosts of what had been; 'themselves' were the bodies left to be devoured by dogs and vultures. The Apostle's teaching, on the other hand, is always that, amidst whatever change, it is the very man himself that is preserved; and, if for the preservation of this identity any outward organisation is required, then, although 'flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven,' God from the infinite treasure house of the new heavens and new earth will furnish that organisation, as He has already furnished it to the several stages of creation in the present order of the world. 'If God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much rather clothe you, O ye of little faith.' 'Ye do err, not knowing . . . the power of God.'

THE CONCLUSION.

CHAP. XVI. 1-24.

THE conclusion of this Epistle, as of that to the Romans, Ephesians, Colossians, and the Second to Timotheus, is taken up with matters more or less personal and secular. Of these the first is the collection amongst the Gentile The Col-Churches for the poorer Christians in Judga. From lection for whatever cause, there was at this period much poverty in Palestine, compared with the other Eastern pro-

the poor Christians of Palestine contained in the Apostolical Epistles to the duties of the rich towards the poor, are those which we find in connexion with the contribution here mentioned, and in the Epistle of St. James (ii. 1-6, v.-1-6), and that to the Hebrews (xiii. 16), both addressed, if not to Judæa, at least to Jewish communities. And with this agrees the great stress laid in the Gosnels on the duty of almsgiving. We learn also from the account of the last struggle for independence in Josephus, how deeply the feelings of the poor were embittered against the rich in Jerusalem, so as to give to the intestine factions of that time something of the character of a social war.

vinces of the Roman Empire. The chief allusions

This was in part occasioned by the greater density of population in Palestine, compared with the thinly inhabited tracts of Greece and Asia Minor; in part by the strongly marked distinction of rich and poor, which had been handed down to the Jews from the earlier periods of their history, where we are familiar with it from the denunciations of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Nehemia. The Christians, besides, were, as a general rule, from the poorer classes (James ii. 5), and would be subject to persecutions and difficulties on account of their religion (Heb. x. 34). From the mention of the poor as a distinct class in the Christian Church, in Acts ix. 36, and in the passages relating to the contribution now in question, it would seem that the community of property at Jerusalem must have either declined or failed of its object; and may have even contributed to occasion the great poverty which we thus find prevailing in the period of twenty or thirty years after its first mention. So pressing was the necessity at the time when St. Paul first parted from the Church of Jerusalem, that an express stipulation was made in behalf of this very point (Gal. ii. 10), 'To remember the poor' was the one link by which the Apostle of the Gentiles was still bound to the Churches of Judga. This pledge was given, probably, before his second journey. But it was not till his third and last journey, that the preparations were made for the great contribution of which he now speaks. From this passage, confirmed indirectly by Gal. ii, 10, vi. 10, it would appear that he had first given orders for the collection in the Churches of Galatia. From 2 Cor. viii, 10, ix, 2, it also appears, that the orders here given to the Corinthians had been received by them a year before the time of the Second Epistle, and therefore some months before this Enistle.

At this time, he had not quite determined whether to take it to Jerusalem himself; possibly he had the intention of going at once to the West, and even afterwards when he had left Ephesus and reached Macedonia (2 Cor. viii. ix.), he was still doubtful, whether the Corinthian collection would be sufficiently large for his purpose. But by the time that he had actually arrived at Corinth, his exhortations in this and in the Second Epistch had raised the desired sun; and in writing from thence to Rome, he announced his intention of taking it at once to Jerusalem (Rom. xv. 25, 28); an intention which he fulfilled during his last visit (Acts xxiv. 17). See further the notes on 2 Cor. viii. and ix.

XVI. 1 Περί δὲ τῆς λογίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἀγίους ὤσπερ διέταξα ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας, οὔτως καὶ ὑμεῖς ποιήσατε, ²κατὰ μίαν *σαββάτου ἔκαστος ὑμῶν παρ ἐαυτῶ τι-

. -- 00/----

1 XVI. Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I 2 rappointed to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let reach one of you lay by him in λογία=συλλόγη in classical Greek (see Wetstein for the word), in the Vulgate

The collection. 'collecta'. The word collecta' is used for the assemblies in which the collections took place, as in Jerome's story (ad Gal. vi.) of the last words of St. John, which were uttered 'per singulas collectas.'

εἰς, 'for the benefit of.'
δάταξα, 'I gave orders when I was there, "rate feckapefase rife Pakariae, i. e. 'the Churches of the several cities or villages of Galatia." This arrangement must have been made in the journey, described in Acts xviii. 23, as is confirmed by the alludice which, in his Episile to the Galatians (ti. 10), he makes to such a common the common than the confirmed of the passion of the common than the confirmed by the passion of the common than the confirmed by the confirmed to the common than the confirmed to the common than the confirmed than the confirme κατὰ μίαν σαββάτον. 'Οπ every first day of the week.' μία απββάτον is a literal translation of the Hewek.' brew phrase, 'one of the sabbath, two of the sabbath,' &c. i. e. one after the sab-

ix. 2; Rom. xv. 26. Magna exemplorum vis.'

bath, two after the sabbath. (See Lightfoot on Matt. xxviii. 1.) So ημέρα μία = ' the first day,' Gen. i. 5. This is the earliest mention of the observance of the first day of the week. The collections were to be made on that day, as most suited to the remembrance of their Christian obligations. And from this verse, or from the practice implied by it, has been derived the custom, still continued in almost all Christian Churches, of offerings for the poor on Sundays, or at least at the times of the Holy Communion. It is to be observed, however, that there is nothing to prove public assemblies, inasmuch as the phrase παρ' ἐαυτῷ (' by himself, at his own house') implies that the collection was to be made individually and in private. This is confirmed by the exhortation, in allusion to the same subject, in 2 Cor. ix. 7: 'Let each man give as he has determined in his heart, not grudgingly or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.' The word 9ησαυρίζων, 'hoarding,' or 'treasuring up,' also implies that the money was to remain in each individual's house till the Apostlo came for it.

δ τι ἃν εὐοδῶται, 'as he may have prospered'=καθώς εὐποθέτω θησαυρίζων ο τι αν εὐοδώται, ἵνα μή, ὅταν ἔλθω, τότε λογίαι γίνωνται. 3 όταν δὲ παραγένωμαι, οῦς * αν δοκιμάσητε. δι' έπιστολών τούτους πέμψω ἀπενεγκείν την χάριν ὑμών είς 'Ιερουσαλήμ' έὰν δὲ δάξιον ή τοῦ κάμὲ πορεύεσθαι, σὺν έμοι πορεύσονται. 5 έλεύσομαι δὲ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ὅταν Μακεδο-

5 224 82 7 Bicor.

store, as rit hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings 3 when I come. And when I am with ryou, whomsoever ye shall approve, them will I send by letters, to bring your 4 gift unto Jerusalem. And if it be meet that I go also, 5 they shall go with me. Now I will come unto you, when I

* Gr. strace.

ρεῖτό τις, Acts xi. 29, and καθὸ έαν έχη, 2 Cor. viii. 12. Properly it signifies 'having a good journey,' as in Rom. i. 10. τότε . . . γίνωνται, ' be going on at the time when I come, and when I ought to be occupied with higher matters.'

3. ους αν δοκιμάσητε. The Corinthians themselves were to choose their agents, probably to prevent the possibility of misappropriation, as others had been chosen for a like purpose by the other Churches. See 2 Cor. viii. 18 - 20.

δι' ἐπιστολών. The plural is used, because there are several persons. The word is probably to be taken with πέμψω. Compare συστατικών έπιστολών, 2 Cor. iii. 1. yaous is used for the contribution here as in 2 Cor. viii. 4. ἐὰν δὲ ἄξιον ἢ, 'if it be worth my journey.' This ex-pression of doubt shows that he did not settle his final plan

(Rom. xv. 28-32) till his arrival at Corinth.

5-9. The second point, to which the mention of the collections naturally brings him, is his journey to Corinth, and here he has to announce that his earlier plan, which he had communicated to them previously, was now altered. This plan had been (as we learn from His plan.

2 Cor. i. 16) to cross over the Ægæan from Ephesus to Corinth, to go thence through Greece to Macedonia, and then to return for a second visit to

Corinth: whereas now he determines to pass first through Macedonia, and make one visit only at Corinth at the end of his Gre- . cian journey. This alteration was made (2 Cor. i. 23) in consequence of the tidings brought to him of the disorders in the Corinthian Church, that he might leave time for his First Epistle to have its due effect, before he interposed with them personally. The change, as we see from 2 Cor. i. 17-23, x. 2, gave occasion for much misapprehension, the correction of which is one object of the Second Epistle. 5. Μακεδονίαν γαρ διέρχομαι. 'I say, "when I have passed through Macedonia,' for it is now my intention to do so, instead of coming to you at once.' διέρχομαι, 'I am to pass.'

He omits here the usual phrase 'if the Lord will,' which shows that even in that early age the forms of religious speech and feelνίαν δεέλθω. Μακεδονίαν γὰρ διέρχομαι, ⁶πρός τιμάς δε τιχὸν παραμενώ ἡ καὶ παραχειμάσα, τω τίμεδι με προπέμψητε οδ ἐὰν πορείωμαι. ⁶οῦ θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς ἄρτι ἐν παρόδω ίδεἰν· ἐλπίζω ⁶γαρ χρόνον τυὰ ἐπιμεινα πρός ὑμᾶς, ἐὰν ὁ ἀτριος ⁶ ἐπτρέψη, ⁶ἐπτρενῶ δὲ ἐν Εφέσα ἔκο τῆς ποιδè for γάρ.

èmeroénn.

thave passed' through Macedonia: for I 'am to' pass through of Macedonia, and it may be that I will abide, yea and winter with you, that ye may 'send me on whithersoever I go. For 7I will not 'now see you by the way; 'sfor I trust to tarry as while with you, if the Lord 'will permit. But I will tarry ing were not universally fixed. Afterwards, in verse 7, he adds it: here he uses the ordinary expression τυχόν, 'as it may happen.'

As he was still at Ephesus, διίρχομαι is to be taken in the future sense, common in the New Testament;—not 'I am passing,' but 'I am to pass.'

6. παραγειμάσω. 'I will stay with you through the winter (i. e. 'till the navigation of the Ægæan is again open, so as to enable me to sail for Syria'). This intention, of which he here expresses some doubt, he fulfilled, so far as to pass the three later months of the year in Southern Greece (Acts xx. 3), leaving it in the spring of the following year, as appears from the mention of Easter in Acts xx. 6. It might be inferred from this passage (ov tax πορεύωμαι), as from verse 3, that he was uncertain at this time whether he should go eastward or westward from Corinth

Iva bμεῖς. 'I remain with you, in order that you, and no other Church, may have the pleasure of helping me forward.' He is addressing himself to the feeling so often touched in the Second Epistle.

προπέμψητε. This is the received phrase for 'helping forward on a journey or mission.' See Acts xv. 3, xx. 38, xxi. 5; Rom. xv. 24; 2 Cor. i. 16; Tit. iii. 13; 3 John 6.

 ἄρτι, i. e. 'now, according to my present, as distinguished from my late, intention.'

έν παρόζφ, 'merely passing by Corinth, on my way to Macedonia.'

tār ὁ κύριος ἐπτρέψη. Compare Heb. vi. 3 (ἐπ ἐπτρέπη ὁ θεὸς); 1 Cor. iv. 19; James iv. 15 (ἐπ ὁ κύριος Θελήση). The former phrase is somewhat stronger than the latter, indicating not merely permission, but giving the power to do the thing desired.

8. ἐπιμετῶ ἐἐ τɨ Ἐρρίσω ἔως τῆς arrycorɨg, 'I shall stay on at Ephesus until the end of the spring,' i. e. while the navigation of the Ægæan is closed. For the reluctance to make voyages in the Mediterranean in winter, compare Horace, Od. i. 4, 2, where 'Trahuntque siccas machine carinas,' is mentioned as one of the signs of spring.

'Pentecost' is mentioned here, merely as a mark of time, as
'the Fast' in Acts xxvii. 9.

This passage may be taken as a mark both of the place and time of the writing of the Epistle. τηκοστής· 9 θύρα γάρ μοι ἀνέφγεν μεγάλη καὶ ἐνεργής, καὶ ἀντικείμενοι πολλοί.

10°Εὰν δὲ ἔλθη Τιμόθεος, βλέπετε ἵνα ἀφόβως γένηται

9 at Ephesus until Pentecost. For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries.

Now if Timotheus come, see that he may be with you irupeve implies that he was now at or near Ephesus, and the mention of Pentecost implies that it must have been a short time before that season; which thus agrees with the apparent allusion to Easter, as in v. 7, xv. 20. 9. 9.60a, 4 opportunity, Compare 2 Cor. ii. 12; Col. iv. 3; Acts xiv. 27. ἀνεψίγεν is later Greek for ἀνεώκται. μεγάλη alludes to the extent of his preaching; ἐνεργής, to its effect: the former word, including both the sign and the thing signified in the metaphor, the latter the thing signified only. Two inducements for the Apostle to stay, are a wide sphere and a powerful opposition. Grotius:-Quod alios terruisset, Paulum invitat.' He alludes, on the one hand, to the spread of Christianity in the neighbourhood of Ephesus (Acts xix. 20; and on the other hand, to the opposition of Pagan (xix. 23) and of Jewish (xix. 33, xx. 29) enemies.

10—12. The third point is the explanation of the character and conduct of his two friends, Timotheus and Apollos. Timotheus and Apollos. Timotheus had been sent from Ephessus to Greece (Acts xix. 22), though from the expression there (čiar 2λθg) it seems that there was some doubt whether he would reach Corinth. The object of his mission was (iv. 17) to remind them of the Apostle's example and teaching, from which they were Mission of in danger of deviating. Timotheus. But St. Paul seems to have feared lest his gentle and timid character (both of which are hinted at as impediments to his usefulness in 1 Tim. iv. 12; 2 Tim. i. 6, 7, ii. 1) should not command the respect due to him. Hence this exhortation.

άφόβως—ἐν εἰρήνη, in allusion to his timid character. ἐν εἰρήνη = 'incolumis,' safe and sound.

He also speaks of Timotheus as an exact counterpart of himself, and as the one of all his companions best able to enter into his feelings. For this same fact see iv. 17, Phil. ii. 20, 22. Bhirre iva. For the construction compare 2 John 8.

τὸ γὰρ ἔργον κυρίου, as in xv.
58: Phil. ii. 30 (χριστοῦ).

προπέμψατε. See verse 6. μετὰ τῶν ἀδλφῶν. This may refer to the companions of Timotheus, of whom one (Acts xit-22) was Erastus; but, from the short manner in which the phrase is introduced, he more probably alludes to the persons of whom he proceeds to speak in the next verse.

Besides the mission of Timotheus to impress upon the Corinthian Church the feelings of the Apostle himself, a task for which Timotheus, by his close in-πρὸς ὑμᾶς: τὸ γὰρ ἔργον κυρίου ἐργάζεται ὡς κάγώ. ¹¹μή τις οὖν αὐτὸν ἔξουθενήση. προπέμψατε δὲ αὐτὸν ἐυ εἰρήνη, ἶνα ἔλθη πρὸς ὑἐμέ: ἐκδέχομαι γὰρ αὐτὸν μετὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν.

12 Περὶ δὲ 'Απολλώ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ, πολλὰ παρεκάλεσα αὐτὸν ἴνα ἔλθη πρὸς ὑμᾶς μετὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν καὶ πάντως οὐκ ἢν θέλημα ἴνα νῦν ἔλθη, ἔλεύσεται δὲ ὅταν εὐκαιρήση.

* καὶ ἐγώ,

» πρός με.

without fear: for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do.
11 Let no man therefore despise him: but send him on in peace, that he may come unto me: for I wait for him with the brethren.
12 As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly 'exhorted him to come unto you with the brethren: 'and his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

timacy with St. Paul, was peculiarly fitted, there was another later mission despatched at the time of his writing this Epistle, with the view, partly of carrying the Epistle and enforcing the observance of its contents, partly of urging upon the Church the necessitions before the Apostle's arrival (2 Cor. viii. 6, Xii. 18). This mission was composed of This was sion was composed of the content of the Church the Apostle of the Church the Apostle's arrival and two other 'breaker's trans and two other 'breaker's transfer to the Apostle of the Apostle other transfer to the Apostle other transfer transfer

Titus, thren' (2 Cor. viii. 18, 22, 23), whose names are not mentioned; Titus having been chosen for this, as Timotheus for the other, probably from his greater energy and firmness of character. That the mission thus described is the one to which he here alludes can hardly be doubted. The words mapacaλείν and άδελφός are used in the same emphatic and recognised sense, in both passages; and as the mission there spoken of was previous to his writing the second Epistle, it can be referred to no occasion so obviously as that which is here described.

These accordingly are the brothren who would, as he expected, find or wait for Timotheus at Corinth, and return with him.

It would seem, however, that the Apostle's original wish had been, that the head of this mission should have been, not Titus, but Apollos. Apollos, since his visit to Corinth (named in Acts xviii. 27, and implied in this Epistle, iii, 6), must have returned to Ephesus; and he, both from the distinction which he enjoyed in the opinion of his fellow-Christians (i. 12, iv. 6; Acts xviii. 25), and from his previous acquaintance with the Church of Corinth, would have been the natural person to send upon such a mission. The most obvious explanation of his refusal to comply with the Apostle's request, would be the fear lest his presence should encourage the faction which called itself by his name, and which apparently was the most powerful at this precise time. It is a slight confirmation of the identity of this mission with that of Titus, that the only ¹³Γρηγορεῖτε, στήκετε ἐν τῆ πίστει, ἀνδρίζεσθε, *[καὶ] κραταιοῦσθε. ¹⁴πάντα ὑμῶν ἐν ἀγάπη γινέσθω.

* Om. sef.

13 Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, and 14 be strong. Let all your things be done with love.

later occasion on which the name of Apollos occurs in the New Testament, is in the Epistle to Titus (iii. 13), where they are spoken of as living together.

13, 14. These verses had best be regarded as a short summary of the exhortation which he conceives that both Timotheus and Apollos would give them. The words are expressive of a com-γρηγορεῖτε, 'be watchful;' ' have the eyes of your mind and conscience open to all that is going on around you: the enemy is advancing; the last day (see verse 22) is approaching: be on your guard.'

στήκετε ἐν τῷ πέστει, 'stand unskaken in your faith against the enemy.' Compare xv. 58, 'be ye steadfast unmoveable;'

and (more exactly) Eph. vi. 13, 14, 'stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth;' and 2 Cor. i, 24, 'by faith ye stand.'

άνδρίζεσθε, [καl] πραταεούσθε.
The two words occur frequently together in the LXX. and form one phrase, 'Nerve yourselves for the contest.' See Ps. πχνii.
14; xxxi. 24; 1 Sam. iv. 9; 2
Sam. x.12.

àνδρίζεσθε occurs often in classical writers; κραταιούσθε never. καί, which is found in A. D. E. and the Versions, is omitted in B. G.; probably from an attempt to reduce the whole sentence to conformity, without perceiving the conventional character of the phrase.

14. πάντα ύμων ἐν Δγάτη γυτέθω. As the previous words set forth the sterner, so these set forth the setneller side of Christian duty with an allusion to the Factions and to chap. xiii. Chrypositon well says: λέγει Γρηγοροίτε, ὧε ασθενδόντων "Στήκετ, ὡ απλιομένων. "λαγβίζεθε καὶ εραταιούθελ, ὡς μαλακτώντων" Πάντα ἐν ἀγάτη, ὡς στασιαζόντων. Τ

15. Here the Epistle would properly have ended; but there were still some remarks to be made on individuals belonging to the Corinthian Church itself. There were now with the Apostle, three men recently come from Corinth, possibly with the letter of the Corinthians (vii. 1.).

The 'house of Stephanas,' in verse 15, must be the 'House of same as that mentioned Stophanas. in i. 16, where it appears that they were, not only the earlist converts of St. Paul at Corinth, but amongst the few who were baptised with his own hands. The Stephanas of verse 17 (as implied in the words of verse 15, and of i. 16,-which mention the household, apparently in contradistinction to the master) was probably one of the slaves of the Stephanas of verse 15, and had received his name from his master. The two remaining names are also more like those of slaves than of native ¹⁶Παρακαλώ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί· οἴδατε τὴν οἰκίαν Στεφανᾶ, ὅτι ἔστιν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς ᾿Αχαΐας καὶ εἰς διακονίαν τοῦς ἀγίοις ἔταξαν ἔαυτούς· ¹⁶ἴνα καὶ ὑμεῖς ὑποτάσσησθε τοῦς

15 Now I rexhort you, brethren (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the first fruits of Achaia, and that they 16 appointed themselves to the ministry of the saints), that Greeks 'Fortunatus' occurs again in the Epistle of Clement, as the name of the bearer of that Epistle to the Church of Corinth, in company with Valerius Bito and Claudius Ephebus, apparently two Greek freedmen enrolled in the Valerian and Claudian families. (Clem. Ep. I. ad Cor. i. 59.) 'Achaicus' indicates either a Greek slave, so called by his Roman masters, or, an Eastern slave, so called from the land of his adoption. Whether, however, the Apostle is here speaking of one or of two groups, it is certain that in both cases he is speaking of Corinthian Christians, to whose authority he wishes to enforce obedience. The ambiguity of the precise subject of the sentence in some degree affects its construction also: "ra, in verse 16, may depend either οη παρακαλώ οτ οη οίδατε, i. e. either (1) 'I exhort you to obey,' &c. (comp. παρεκάλουν . . . ἴνα . . . άψωνται, Matt. xiv. 86, and the use of vá. for iva. in Romaic), or (2) 'you know such persons in order to,' &c. The first is the best, in which case the construction requires that παρακαλώ should be the principal verb in the sentence, and oicure ... έαυτούς thrown in parenthetically. A similar interruption of a similar commencement, may be seen in Eph. iv. 1.

οάδατε is indicative, there being no instance of such a form in the imperative.

άπαργή. 'First fruits of the harvest which was to follow.' Compare Rom. xvi. 5, where Epenetus is called 'the first fruits of Asia,' or according to some MSS. 'of Achaia.' If the latter, then he may have been one of the household of Stephanas. Possibly in this case the metaphor is coloured by the allusion to the offering of the first fruits at the passover (see note on xv. 20), introduced in connexion with the thought elsewhere (Rom. xv. 16) expressed, that the Gentile converts were the offering which he presented to God. 15. 'Ayafaç, i. e. 'Southern

15. Αχαίας, 1. e. 'Southern Greece.' εἰς διακονίαν τοῦς ἀγίοις. This, viewed in connexion with verse I, where rove ayioue is also used without any qualification, probably refers to the contribution for the Christians in Judsea.

15. ἔτοξαν ἐαυτούς. The stress is on ἐαυτούς, 'appointed themselves,' i. e. 'of their own accord,' in the first burst of zeal which followed their conversion (comp. the classical quotation in Wetstein).

16. ἕτο καὶ ὑμεῖς ὑποτάσσησθε.

The emphatic buff is in allusion to the play upon trafer and visoriaces 98t, and the sense is, You know the zeal with which the household of Stephanas appointed themselves to their work. I exhort you that you, for your part, should appoint to yourselves the task of obeying them.

τοιούτοις καὶ παυτὶ τῷ συνεργοῦντι καὶ κοπιώντι. ¹⁷χαίρω δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ παρουσία Στεφαιὰ καὶ ⁸Φορτουνάτου καὶ ⁴Αχαίκοῦ, ὅτι τὸ ⁸ὑμέτερον ὑστέρημα ^{*}αὐτοὶ ἀνεπλήρωσαν ¹⁸ἀμέ-παυσαν γάρ τὸ ἐμὸν πνεύμα καὶ τὸ ὑμῶν, ἐπιγνώσκετε οῦν τοὺς τοιούτους.

19 'Ασπάζονται ύμας αι έκκλησίαι της 'Ασίας. ασπάζον-

Φουρτουνάτου,
 ὑμῶν.
 οὖτοι,

ye also appoint yourselves 'to be under such, and under every 17 one that helpeth with 'them, and laboureth. 'Now I 'rejoice at the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus; for 18 that which was lacking on your part they 'supplied; for they 'refreshed my spirit and your's. Therefore acknowledge ye such. 19. The churches of Asia salute you. Aquila and 'Priscilla τοῖς τοιούτοις, 'such as the household of Stephanas.' συνεργοῦντι, 'That works with them,' and the force of the σύν is, as it were, carried on to κοπιώντι.

17. γαίου ξέ. This is probably a resumption of the previous aubject, as the conclusion rayverset obv role roneirose, in verse 18, seems like a final summary of verse 16, and it is after St. Paul's custom to bring out a point in which he is deeply interested a second time.

From this verse it may be inferred that Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, were now at Ephesus; nor is there any proof that they carried back this First Epistle, which, as implied in verse 12, was probably sent by Titus.

το ὑμέτερον ὑστέρημα αὐτοὶ ἀνεπλήρωσαν. 'They in their own persons supplied the void occasioned by your absence from me.' Compare Phil. ii, 30.

 ἀνέπαυσαν γὰρ τὸ ἐμὸν πνεῦμα καὶ τὸ ὑμῶν. 'For they refreshed, reinvigorated my spirit, and by a necessary consequence of our sympathy, yours also.' It is a concise expression of the same consciousness of identity of feelings and interests, which expresses itself strongly in 2 Cor. i. 3—7. For the words compare areastmarra ro revipe awoo (i. e. of Titus). 9 Cor. vii. 13.

^taιγνώσκετε, 'acknowledge'.' recognise as your guides,' like εἶέναι, in 1 Thess. v. 12, and γινώσκω (as distinguished from επόταμαι) in Acts xix. 15 (or from οἶδας) in John xxi. 17.

19—21. The salutations are threefold: (1) Those from the Churches of Asia (icoλysia: vg. Asia; c). Here, as in xvi. 1, the plural is properly used to denote the Christian congregations in the several cities of proconsular Asia, of which the chief are the seven enumerated in the Apocallyse, all situated within the limits of the Roman province called Asia. From this parallel Asia From the Parallel Asia From the

(2) The salutation from the

ται ὑμᾶς ἐν κυρίφ πολλὰ 'Ακύλας καὶ ' Πρίσκιλλα σὺν τῆ κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησία. ²⁰ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἄδελφοι πάντες. ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλήματι ἀγίφ.

Lachm. Ed. 1. Пріока.

salute you much in the Lord with the church that is in 20 their house. All the brethren "salute you. "Salute ye one congregation in the house of Anuila and Priscilla. Anuila was -like his namesake, the translator of the Old Testament-a Jew. from Pontus. (Acts xviii. 2.) His wife is mentioned so Aquila prominently wherever Priscilla, her husband's name occurs-in four instances (Acts xviii. 18, 26 (in some MSS.); Rom. xvi. 3; 2 Tim. iv. 19) preceding it,-as to indicate that she was distinctly known, not merely in connexion with him but on her own account also. She is called Prisca in the Epistles (Rom. xvi. 3 (except in Rec. Text); 2 Tim. iv. 19), and Priscilla in the Acts (xviii. 2, 18, 26); so 'Livia 'Livilla,' 'Drusa' and 'Drusilla,' are used for the same person (see Wetstein on Romans xvi.). In this place the name is Prisca in B. Priscilla in C. D. G. They accompanied St. Paul from Corinth to Ephesus, and there remained whilst he went on to Jerusalem (Acta xviii. 18, 26). Hence the connexion with the Corinthian Church, implied in this salutation, and their presence at Ephesus, at the date of the composition of this Epistle. The expression 'the Church in their house,' which is repeated in connexion with their names in Rom. xvi. 3, implies a congregation distinct from that of the native Ephesians, probably of foreign settlers like themselves.

such as had naturally brought them into connexion with Paul at Corinth, and subsequently with Apollos at Ephesus (both strangers in the respective cities where the meeting was effected, Acts xviii 2, 26). The greater carnestness and devotion excuractions and devotion excuractions and devotion excuractions and devotion excuractions of the contraction of the reads, "a full Christian greeting") would be naturally occasioned by their intimacy with the Corinthian Church,

(3) The salutation of 'all the brethren.' Who is here meant was clear to the Corinthians, but obscure to us. It may be: either the Christians of Ephesus; or the brethren spoken of in verses 11, 12; or a general summing up of all the Christians within reach of his communication, as in Rom. xvi. 16: 2 Cor. xiii, 13. The injunction to salute each other with a sacred kiss is repeated in Rom. xvi. 16; 2 Cor. xiii. 12; 1 Thess. v. 26. It was the common form of affectionate Eastern salutation, transferred 'The Holy salutation, transferred 'The Holy to the forms of Christian society, and hence the epithet of $\dot{\alpha}_{\gamma}(\nu_{\mu}, {}^{\prime}\text{holy}.)$ ' The practice continued in Christian practice continued in Christian assemblies, chiefly at the time of the celebration of the Eucharist (Justin Apol. i. 58). The regulations of the Apostolical, Constitutions, viii. 11, and the Canons of Laodicea (Can. 19), enjoin that before the Communion, the clergy are to kins the bishop, the 21 Ο ἀσπασμὸς τῆ ἐμῆ χειρὶ Παύλου. ²² εἴ τις οὐ φιλεῖ τὸν κύριον, τόν ἀνάθεμα. μαραναθά. ²³ ἡ χάρις τοῦ κυρίου

* Add 'Ιησοῦν χριστόν.

21 another with a holy kiss. The salutation of me Paul with 22 mine own hand. If any rone love not the Lord, a let him 23 be Anathema. Maran-atha. The grace of rthe Lord Jesus men amongst the laity each other, and so the women. On Good Friday it was omitted, in commemoration of the kiss of Judas Down to the fifth century (Augustin, contra Pelag, iv. e. 8); it was given after Baptism, and was afterwards superseded by the afterwards superseded by the superlutation 'Peace be with they. It was technically called § itself, 'the Peace' (Conc. Laod. Can. 19).

It is still continued in the worship of the Coptic Church. Every member of the congregation there kisses and is kissed by the priest. In the Western Church it was finally laid aside in the thirteenth century.

21. He winds up the salutations with his own farewell, written (not like the rest of Autograph the letter by an amasignature. nuensis, but) by his own hand. The expression occurs besides in 2 Thes. iii. 17; Col. iv. 18; in the former passage, with the addition 'which is a sign in every Epistle.' This attestation was probably confined to such Epistles as especially needed it from being addressed to Churches who questioned his authority, or amongst whom, as in the case of Thessalonica (2) Thess. ii. 2), doubts had arisen as to the genuineness of his communications. Accordingly in the two instances in which his authority was most violently assailed,-Corinth at the time of the Second Epistle, and Galatia,—the Epistles to those Churches were apparently written, not merely in the conclusion, but the former in great part—Chapters x. to xiii. (see 2 Cor. x. 1),—and the latter throughout (Gal. vi. 11) by his own hand.

The ananuensis of this Epistle was probably Sosthence (see i. 1). Although it is not expressly stated, yet it seems probable that the whole of the rest of the conclusion was, like the salutation, in the Apostle's own handwriting, which would account for the greater solemnity and abruptness of the sentences.

22. εί τες οὐ φλάε τον κόμου. This peculiarity in the use of φλάει for ἀγωτάν (compare especially Epla, vi. 24), is occasioned probably by the fact that οὐ φλάει is taken as one word, a milder expression for μετέ, like οὐε έγκρατέσυται in vii. 9 for ἀκρατ τένονται in vii. 9 for ἀκρατ φλάει was more natural than οὐε ἀγωτά.

άνάθεμα is 'accursed,' as in xii. 3; Rom. ix. 3; Gal. i. 8; Mark xiv. 71; corresponding to the Latin 'sacer,' and to the Hebrew 'cherem'

'Maran-atha' is a Syriac formula in Greek characters, signifying 'The Lord has come,' or 'The Lord Mann-atha will come.' The word

'Maran' is the longer form of 'Mar,' the Chaldee (or later He'Ιησοῦ χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν. ²⁴ἡ ἀγάπη μου μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἐν χριστῷ 'Ιησοῦ. *[ἀμήν.]

 Add Πρὸς Κορινθίους πρώτη έγράφη ἀπὸ Φιλίππων δ.ὰ Στεφανὰ καὶ Φουρτουνάτου καὶ 'Αχαϊκοῦ καὶ Τιμοθέου.

24 Christ be with you. My love is with you all in Christ Jesus. Amen.

brew) word for 'Lord,' and used as such in Dan. ii. 47, iv. 19, 24, v. 23, familiar also as the title of ecclesiastical dignitaries in the Syrian Church. 'Atha' is frequently used in the poetical books of the Old Testament for 'comes,' and so also in Chaldee. See Dan. iii. 2, vii. 22; Ezra iv. 12, v. 3.

The whole phrase is introduced

The whole phrase is introduced in the original language, in order to give greater force to the previous curse; as in like manner the Syrine 'Abba' is preserved in Rom. viii. 15; Gal. iv. 6; and Hebrew words, such as 'Abaddon,' 'Armageddon,' are retained in the Apocalypse.

Maran-atha would seem to follow the curse in verse 22, as Amen in some MSS. follows the blessing in 23, 24. But the precise meaning of the phrase is ambiguous. If it means 'The Lord has come,' then the connexion is, 'the curse will remain, for the Lord has come, who will take 'the curse will remain, for the Lord has come, who will take vengeance on those who reject Him. Thus the name 'Maronite' is sometimes explained by a tradition that the Jews, in their expectation of a Messiah, were constantly saying 'Maran' (Lord), to which the Christians nawered 'Maran atha', i. e.

"The Lord is come; why do you expect Him?" and hence the name "Maronite" as applied to Jews, and especially Spanish Jews and Moors, who confessed "Maron," but not "Maron-atha" (see Estius). If it means "The Lord will come," then the connexion will be, "This is the curse, and beware how you incur it, for the Lord is at Marol." Compare (in support of this view) a similar abruptness of introduction in Phil. iv. 5, "The Lord is at hand."

There is no proof of any such phrase in the Jewish liturgies. The word 'anathema' occurs frequently in later ecclesiastical censures; the words Maran atha never. (See Bingham, Ant. xvi. ii. § 16.)

ή χάρις. 'The favour or goodness.' See note on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.
 ή ἀγάπη, i, e, ἔστι.

The subscription, which is contained in no ancient MSS is manifestly incorrect, being a false inference from δεθρομοι in xvi. 5. From verse 8, it is certain that the Epistle was written, not from Philippi, but from Ephesua.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XVI. 1-24.

- There are still some practical remarks to be made in conclusion:
 - I. Remember to have the money for the poor Christians in Judaa ready when I come; and the best way of having it ready is that which I formerly suggested to the congregations in the cities of Galatia, namely, that every one should on every Sunday lay by something privately; and then, when I arrive, it shall either be sent by your approved messengers, or taken by myself to Jerusalem, according as it may seem deserving of one or the other mode of transmission.
 - II. I wish to amounce to you that I have changed my plan. Instead of coming to you on my you fo Macedonia, I shall come to you after I have been in Macedonia, and remain with you, not as I had formerly intended, on a transiert visit, but for a long time, probably through the winter. Meantime I shall remain at Ephensus till the beginning of summer; for I have great opportunities to use and powerful obstacles to surmount.
 - III. Timotheus will probably not have reached you so soon as this Episit!; but, telenever he does come, encourage and reasure his timidity and his youth; remember that he is a true representative of myself, and send him on to meet, for I expect him to return with the Christians who bear this better.
 - IV. Apollos would have been the natural person to have accompanied them, and I earnesstly entreated him to do so; but he steadily refused; though he will come, when the cause for his present refusal is removed.
 - In conclusion, remember how great a conflict you have to carry on. Be on the alert, stand fast in your faith, nerve yourselves for the battle; and, at the same time, let all be done in the spirit of Christian love.
 - V. I have yet a few words to add. You know the slaves and family of Stephanas; how they were my first converts in Greece, and how they made it their business to serve the power Christians. Be it your business to obey them and all like them.

And you know how I rejoice in the arrival and presence of Stephonas, Fortwatus, and Achaicus; how they fill up the void of your absence; how they lighten the load, both of my spirit and of yours, by communicating your thoughts to me and mine to you. Such are the characters that you ought to recognise and esteem.

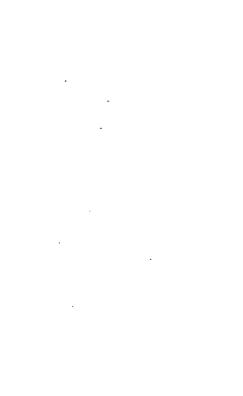

VI. Receive the salutations of the congregations in the cities of proconsular Asia. Receive the salutations of the congregation of foreign settlers, which meets in the house of your former Friends, Aguila and Priscilla. Receive the salutations of all the Christians in this place. Salute each other by the sacred kiss of Christian brotherhood. Receive my own salutation in my own handsorling.

VII. In conclusion, may he who turns away from our Lord without love be doomed to the curse which is his proper judgment. Maran-atha. May the goodness and the blessing of our Lord be with you. My Christian love is with you all. Amen

END OF THE FIRST EPISTLE.

THE

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

OF all the Epistles of St. Paul there is none so personal as the Second to the Corinthians. Its occasion lay in the Occasioned peculiar complication of circumstances which took the Second place in the interval between the two Epistles. If Epistle, the Introduction to the First might be called 'The State of the Corinthian Church', the Introduction to the Second might be called, with equal propriety, 'The Effects of the First Ensitle.'

That Epistle had been conveyed, or, at least, immediately followed by Titus. To him the Apostle had entrusted the duty both of enforcing its commands, and of communi- The App. cating to him its results; whilst he himself, after a stle's destay of some weeks at Ephesus, was to advance by easy stages through Macedonia to Corinth. The Ephesus. stay at Ephesus was probably cut short by the riot of the silversmiths; his departure is described as taking place immediately after and in consequence of it. From thence he went to Troas, and from thence to Macedonia.2 It was a journey overcast with perplexity, sorrow, and danger. Possibly the recollection of the recent tumult at Ephesus still weighed upon his mind; possibly some new conspiracy against His anxihis life had been discovered on the road; but his ex- ety to hear pressions3 rather imply that the gloom and misery of the which oppressed him were greatly enhanced, if not occa- the First sioned, by his anxiety about the reception of his Epistle. Epistle. at Corinth. His bodily constitution, never strong, seems to have been bowed down almost to the grave by this complication of sorrow.1 All was dark around him; and all was darkened into a still deeper night by the fear lest his influence in his favourite Church should be extinguished by his own act in his own Epistle. His beloved Timotheus, who was now with him, either had never reached Corinth, or had returned before the arrival of the First Epistle; he, therefore, could give his master no comfort on the one subject which filled his thoughts. Corinth, and Corinth only, was the word which would then have been found written on the Apostle's heart; and Titus was the only friend who could at that conjuncture minister balm to his troubled spirit. His first hope of meeting was at Troas :2 thither vessels sailed from the opposite Arrival at coast, as when the Apostle himself a year later returned by that route from Corinth;3 and thither, therefore, Titus might already have arrived from the same city. But the Apostle waited in vain: some unexpected delay retained the faithful friend, and added new pangs to the Apostle's anxieties. Even his apostolic labours, at other times his chief consolation in trouble, had now no charms for him : of the great opportunities which were opened for him at Troas. and of which a year later he gladly availed himself,4 he could now make no use; and bidding farewell to the disciples in that city, he embarked for Macedonia, probably as once before,5 to Neapolis, and thence by land to Philippi. There, amidst the familiar scenes of his first European journey, he paused on his onward route, cheered by the zeal of his Macedonian converts:6 but still distrustful and oppressed, his flesh had no rest,' he was 'troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears.'7

¹ Acts xx. 1. 2 ii. 12. 13. 3 i. 4. 8-10. ii. 13. vii. 5, 6.

At last the long-expected day came: Titus arwith Titus rived, and arrived with tidings, not indeed wholly at Philippi. satisfactory, but sufficiently cheering to relieve the Apostle at once from the chief load of care which had weighed down his spirit; and, for the rest, though agitating, yet calculated rather to call forth his energetic indignation than to overcloud and distress him.

The First Epistle had been received, and, by those for whom ¹ j. 8. 2 ii. 13.

³ Acts xx. 5, 6. 4 ii. 13; Acta xx. 6.

⁵ Acts xvi. 11, 12, ¢ viii. 2.

⁷ vii. 5.

it was mainly intended, entirely appreciated. The licentious party who, whether from misunderstanding or perratings verting the Apostle's teaching, had used his name from coas a watchword for their excesses, were humbled.

Some complaints were raised against the Apostle's change of purpose in not coming to them direct from Ephesus; some cause still remained for fear lest the intercourse with the heathen should be too unrestrained; but on the whole, the submission of the mass of the Corinthian Church to his directions was complete. They received Titus with open arms; and, in the matter of the incestuous marriage, the correction of which had been truck with the deepest peni-

Epistle, they had been struck with the deepest penitence; an assembly had been convened, and a mentofine punishment inflicted on the offender; and although inestsous this sorrow for themselves, and this severity towards marriage, the guilty nerson, had passed away before Titus's denature, a the guilty person, had passed away before Titus's departure, and the sin itself had been forgiven, 'yet there was nothing to indicate any dissinclination to follow the spirit of the Apostle's teaching. Thus far all had gone beyond the Apostle's expectations; in the one point in which his command might seem to have been only partially followed out, in the temporary character of the penalty inflicted on the incestuous person, his mind was relieved even more than if they had literally observed his orders. They had judged, he almost seemed to think, more wisely in this respect than himself; 'and generally he felt that confidence between them was now restored,' and that he was now more inseparably united with them in that union in their common Lord, which none but Christians knew. '9

Mingled, however, with this good news were other tidings, not wholly unexpected by the Apostle, for he had already anticipated something of the kind in his First Epistle, "but still demanding new and distinct consideration. The Jewish party at Corinth, which claimed especially the name of Revolt of Peter, and apparently that of Christ also, "I had at the Jewish the time of the First Epistle been so insignificant in party." itself, or so insignificant when commared with the greater evil of the opposite party, as to call only for a few passing notices from the Apostle. It had, however, even then reached a sufficient height to question his apostolic authority; and, in the interval, apparently from the arrival of a new teacher or teachers, with letters of commendation? from some superior authority, probably from Jerusalem, the opponents of the Apostle had grown into a large and powerful party? constituting even 'the majority' of the teachers; 'openly assailing the Apostle's character, claiming almost despote dominion over their followers,' insisting on their purely Jewish origin,' and on their peculiar connexion with Christ,' on their apostolical privileges,' and on their commendatory letters.'

These two subjects, the general acquiescence of the Corinthian Church in the Apostle's injunctions, and the claims of the Judaizing party, must have been the chief topics of Titus's communication. The first and prominent feeling, awakened in St. Paul's mind, was one of overwhelming thankfulness for relief from the anxiety which he had, up to that moment, felt for the effects of his Epistle: next, indignation at the insinuations of his adversaries. To give vent to the double tide of emotion thus rising within him, was the main purpose, therefore, of the Second Epistle. A third subject of less importance, but which gave him a direct opportunity for writing, was the necessity of hastening the collection of the sums Contributo be contributed by the Corinthians to the wants tion for Jerusaof the Christian poor in Judga. He had already spoken of it in the close of his First Epistle: but his spoken of it in the close of his First Epistle; but his sense of the need of success had been further impressed upon him by the generosity of the Macedonian Churches, of which his recent stay among them had made him an actual witness.

As in the occasion, so also in style, the contrast between the First and Second Epistle is every great. The First is the most, $S_{lyls\ of}$ the Second the least systematic of any of the Λ postle's the Epistle's routing a The three objects of the Epistle are, in early in the first part is of arrangement, kept distinct. But so vehement were the feelings under which he wrote, that the thankful expression of the first part is darkened by the indignation of

```
1 Cor. ix. 1—6.
2 Cor. iii. 1, x. 12.
5 i. 12, 17, iii. 1, x. 1, xii. 21.
4 ii. 17.
```

i. 24, ii. 17, xi. 13, 20.

^{*} xi. 22. * v. 16, x. 7, xi. 13, 23, xiii. 3.

^{*} iii. 1, v. 12, x. 12, 18.

the third; and the directions about the business of the contribution are coloured by the reflections both of his joy and of his grief. And in all the three portions, though in themselves strictly personal, the Apostle is borne away into the higher regions in which he habitually lived; so that this Epistle becomes the most striking instance of what is the case, more or less, with all his writings: a new philosophy of life poured forth, not through systematic treatises, but through occasional bursts of human feeling. The very stages of his journey are impressed upon it; the troubles at Ephesus, the repose at Trons, the anxicties and consolations of Macedonia, the prospect of moving to Corinth. 'Universa Epistola,' says Bengel, 'titler-rarism refert, sed precepties pertextum presstantissismis.'

Through this labyrinth of conflicting emotions it is now necessary to follow the Apostle. As in the First Epistle, so in this, we must conceive him, at least at Contents.

its outset, dictating his thoughts to an amanuensis, in this instance, probably to the youthful disciple Timotheus, whose name, in the opening of the Epistle, fills the place whose name, in the opening of the Epistle, fills the place which, in its predecessor, had been occupied by that of Sosthenes.

The first feeling to which he gave utterance after the formal salutation, is one of unbounded thankfulness for deliverance from his anxiety, and of the entire sympathy which existed between himself and his converts. This feeling is first checked by the recollection that their sympathy with him was not so complete as his with them, in consequence of a suspicion of double-dealing and double-speaking on his part, chiefly grounded on his change of purpose in not coming to Corinth as expressed in his former Epistle. This charge he turns saide for a moment to explain and to justify; to point out that he had relinquished his earlier design only to leave scope for the First Epistle to work its own effects, and this leads him to express his cordial acquisecence in the conduct which they had pursued in reference to the offender who had been the chief cause of the severity in his previous address.³

By this turn he is again brought to the point from which he had diverged, and proceeds to give a regular account of his journey from Ephesus to Macedonia, and of his meeting with

¹ Gnomon, on 2 Cor. i. 8. See tary on 2 Cor. i. 1. also his arrangement of the contents of the Epistle in his commen-

Titus.\footnotes He has hardly touched upon this before the narrative loses itself in an impassioned thankegiving, which would probably have interrupted it only for a moment, but that a sudden turn is given to his thoughts, as if by an actual apparition of those dark and insidious enemies whom he felt to be dogging his path and marring his work wherever he went.\footnotes He knew that he was sufficient to carry through his task of offering up the sacrifice of the Gentile world to God; but he knew also that his opponents were not; and he felt that the difference between himself and them—between his openness, suspected as he was of the reverse, and their duplicity—was the natural result of the openness and sninplicity of the Gospel, contrasted with the dimness and ambiguity of the He

To proclaim this Gospel, however, was his glorious task; 4 and to this task he felt himself adequate, in spite of all the difficulties and distresses, which only made him more conscious of his Divine support, and more eagerly look to the higher life of which his present life was but a poor and unworthy prelude.⁵

He has now wandered far away from his direct object; but he has arrived again at one of the points which brings him into sympathy with his converts. If another life and a judgment of Christ are impending, then there is no room for double-dealing. Christ's love draws him to Himself and to God. In Christ's death, he felt that he had died; in the reconciliation of the whole world which Christ had effected, he calls on them to share; in the name of Christ and of his own sufferings for Christ's sake, he calls on them to seize the opportunity now offered, of a complete change of heart and life.

In that burst of feeling all barriers between him and them melt away; and he now at last (after one short and unaccountable interruption)? closes these successive digressions with the fervent account of the arrival of Titus and his own satisfaction.*

In conjunction with the arrival of Titus was another point of immediate, though of subordinate, interest. The reception of Titus at Corinth had been so enthusiastic that Titus was now ready to be the bearer of this Second Epistle also; and in company with two others appointed for this special purpose, to urge

```
<sup>1</sup> ii. 12, 13.

<sup>2</sup> ii. 14, 16.

<sup>3</sup> iii. 1, 12, 18.

<sup>4</sup> iv. 1—6.
```

^{13, 5} iv. 2--v. 10. 6 v. 11--vi. 10. 2, 18. 7 vi. 14--vii. 1.

r. 1—6. $ vi. 12—vii. 1.

upon the Corinthians the necessity of having their contribution for Judga ready for the Apostle's arrival.1

Thus far all had been peaceful; there had been occasional allusions to lurking enemics, but on the whole the strain of the letter was cheerful and calm. But henceforward a change comes over it, the adversaries are now attacked face to face. Timothous is no longer coupled with the Apostle : it would almost appear as if St. Paul took pen and parchment into his own hands and wrote the Epistle himself. First comes the warning against the false pretences of his opponents; 2 then a vindication of his own claims; 3 crossed at times by protestations of his own sincerity against their insinuations,4 and bitter irony against their desnotic demands on obedience,5 but closing in an elaborate enumeration of his own exertions and dangers. as the best proof of his apostolic mission and authority.6

Once more he repeats the apology for his apparent egotism, and repels the insinuation of duplicity; 7 and then with a final warning and assurance of his intention to visit them, the Epistle closes.

Of its effect nothing is known. The two Epistles of Clement to Corinth, the second of them of more than doubtful Reffert of authority, are the only records of the Corinthian the Second Church for the next three centuries. Factions are Epistle. described in the first of these, as still raging; but the Apostle's authority is recognised, and there is no further trace of the Judaizing party. But it still lingered in other parts of the Church, and in the curious apocryphal work entitled the 'Clementines,'s written some time before the beginning of the

¹ viii. and ix. I have assumed this as the most probable explanation of the passage. But the Apostle's language raises a question whether the mission spoken of in viii. and ix. is not the same as that in xii. 18,

¹ Cor. xvi. 12. s x. 1-18

³ xi. 1—6.

⁴ xi. 7-15.

^{$} xi. 16-20 e xi. 21-xii. 10.

⁷ xii. 11-18.

The Clementines are published in Cotelier's edition of the 'Pa-tres Apostolici,' and in a separate volume by Schwegler, and are the subject of an elaborate treatise by Schliemann. They consist of: 1. The 'Homilies' or Conversations. 2. The Epistle of Peter to James. 3. The Adjuration of the Presbyters by James. 4. The Epistle of Clement to James, 5. The 'Recogni-tions.' 6. The Epitome. A complete text of the Homilies (including the Epistle of Peter to James, and the Adjuration of the Presbyters) has been published by Dressol, from a MS, in the Vatican Library not bofore collated.

third century, but containing the last indications of the struggle which first appears in this Epistle and that to the Galatians.

The following are the most remarkable instances: -

- St. Peter is represented as the Apostle not only of the Circum-Later transe cition, but of the Gentilies; all the glory of St. Paul is of the Johntransferred to him (Ep. Pet. ad Jac. c. 1; Hom. ii. 17, 'Cleman'.
 Compare 2 Cor. x. 14, 15, and contrast Gal. ii. times.'
 9. 11.
- 2. Although Peter is spoken of as 'the first of the Apostles' (Ep. Clem. ad Jac. i. 8), and as appoining Clement to the See of Rome (bitd.), yet James is described as superior in dignity both to him and Clement (Ep. Pet. ad Jac. 1; Ep. Clem. ad Jac. 18), and to all the Apostles (Rec. i. 66—68); as 'the Lord and Bishop of the Holy Churchs, Bishop of Bishops, ruling the Clurches everywhere, the Bishop, the Archbishop', 'the Chief Bishop,' as opposed to Caiaphas 'the Chief Priest' (Ep. Pet. c. 1; Ep. Jac. c. 1; Reog. 166, 63, 70, 73, 35. So the Ethonicus' adored Jerusalem as the house of God' (Iren. Har. i. 26.) Compare 2 Cor. 1, 24; xi. 5, 20, and contrast James 1; 1; 1 Pet. v. 5.
- St. Paul is never attacked by name; but the covert insinuations are indisputable.
- (a.) St. Peter is represented as warning St. James against 'the lawless and foliah teaching of the enemy' (ro' ½q/φο ἀ «λφ/άκτω), who perverts 'the Gentiles from the lawful preaching of Peter,' and misrepresents Peter 'as though the thought with the Gentiles, but did not preach it openly'. (Ep. Pet. ad Jac. 2). Compare Gal. li. 12, 14. The 'enemy' (homo trainicus) takes part in a conspiracy against the life of James, and receives letters from the High Priest to persecute Christians at Damascus. (Recog. i. 70.) Compare Acts ix. 1.
- (b.) St. Peter warm his congregation to beware of 'any apostle, prophet, or techner, who does not first compare his presching with that of James, and come with witnesses, lest the wickedness,' which tempted Christ, 'afterwards, having fallen like lightning from heaven' (comp. Acts xxvi. 13, 14) 'should send a herald against you, and suborn one who is to sow error (πλάπην) amongst you as it suborned this Simon against us, preaching in the name of our Lord, under pretence of the truth.' (Hom. xi. 35.) Compare 2 Cor. iii. 1, x. 12—18, v. 12.
- (c.) The parallel which is suggested in the foregoing passage, hereen St. Paul and Simon Magua is carried out still further in other passages, which actually describe the Apostle under the name of Simon. St. Peter maintains that, as Cain preceded Abel, and Islamon preceded Peter to the Gentlies, and that Peter then succeeded to him as light to darkness; 'that 'the false Gospel must come first from some deceiver (re's vlower vro's), and then, after the destruction of the holy place, the true Gospel; were he known, he would not have been received; but now, not being known (4/yoo/guche, he has been trusted to; he who is our enemy, has been received as a friend; has been loved; in ew ho is our enemy, has been received as a friend; being death, he has been longed for as a saviour; being fire, he has been regarded an light; being a deceiver (valves), he has been lived to as speaking the truth. (Hom. ii. 17, 18.) Compare 2 Cor. vi. 8, 9, x. 13—16; Acts xxi. 28.

INTRODUCTION. 353

In an argument between Simon and Peter, in which the former insists on the superiority of visions as evidence to our Lord's discourses, the latter on that of actual intercourse. Peter concludes as follows: 'If then, Jesus our Lord (ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἡμῶν) was seen in a vision, and was known by thee and conversed with thee, it was in anger with thee as an adversary that He spoke to thee through visions and dreams, and even through outward revelations. But can any one be made wise to teach through a vision? If thou sayest that he can, why then did our Master abide and converse with His disciples, not sleeping but awake, for a whole year? And how shall we believe the very fact that He was seen of thee? And how could He have been seen of thee, when thou teachest things contrary to His teaching? And if by having been seen and made a disciple by Him for one hour, thou becamest an Apostle, then expound what He has taught, love his Apostles, fight not with me who was His companion. For me, the firm rock, the foundation of the Church, even me thou didst "withstand" openly (4 v0 i orneac). If thou hadst not been an adversary, thou wouldst not have calumniated me, and reviled my preaching, to deprive me of credit when I spoke what I had heard myself in intercourse with the Lord; as if I were to be blamed, I whose character is so great. Or if thou sayest that I was condemned by my own act (κατεγνωσμένον), thou accusest God who revealed Christ to me, and attackest Him who blessed me because of that revelation. But since thou wishest truly to work with the truth, now learn first from us what we learned from Him; and when thou hast become a disciple of the truth, then become a fellowworker with us.' (Hom. xvii. 19.) Compare Gal. i. 1, 12, 15-20; 1 Cor. ix. 1; 2 Cor. x. 16, xi. 1-5, and especially St. Paul's own words (Gal. ii. 11) in the account of the feud at Antioch, - ἀντέστην, . . . κατεγνωσμένος.

προς κορινθίοτς Β.

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

PLAN OF THE EPISTLE.

SALUTATION AND INTRODUCTION. Chap. I. 1-11.

THE TIDINGS BROUGHT BY TITUS. Chap. I. 12-VII. 16.

- Confidence of St. Paul in the Intentions of the Corinthian Church. Chap. i. 12—ii. 11.
 - 2. The Arrival of Titus. Chap. ii. 12-16a.
- Digression on the Apostolical Mission. Chap. II. 16b—VI. 10.

 1. The Plainness and Clearness of the Apostolical Service. Chap.
 - ii. 16b—iv. 6.

 2. The Difficulties and Supports of the Apostolical Service. Chap.
 - iv. 7—v. 10.
 - St. Paul's Motive for his Service. Chap. v. 11—vi. 10.
 The Arrival of Titus (continued from ii. 16a). Chap. vi. 11—13;
 - vii. 2-16.
 5. Digression on Intercourse with Heathens. Chap. vi. 14-vii. 1.
- THE COLLECTION FOR THE CHURCHES IN JUDEA. Chap. VIII. 1-
 - The Example of the Macedonian Churches. Chap. viii, 1—15.
 - The Mission of Titus. Chap. viii. 16—24.
 The spirit in which the Collection is to be made. Chap. ix.
- 1—15.
 The Assertion of his Apostolical Authority. Chap. X.—XII. 10.
 - Assortion of his Authority. Chap. x. 1—6.
 Digression on his Boast of his Claims. Chap. x. 7—xii. 10.
 - a. The Reality of his Boast. Chap. x. 7—18.
 b. His Boasting excused by his Affection for the Corinthians.
 - Chap. xi. 1—15.
 c. His Ecasting excused not by his Power, but by his Weakness. Chap. xi. 16—xii. 10.
- CONCLUDING EXPLANATIONS, WARNINGS, AND SALUTATIONS. Chap. XII 11-XIII. 14.

SALUTATION AND INTRODUCTION.

ΠΑΤΑΟΣ ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ χρωττοῦ διὰ θελήματος θεοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφός, τῆ ἐκκλησία τοῦ θεοῦ τῆ οὕσης ἐν Κορώθως σὺν τοῖς ἀχίοις πάσιν τοῖς οὕσιν ἐν δλῆ τῆ ᾿Αχαῖα. ¾χάρις ὑμῦ "καὶ ἐἰρήνη ἀπὸ θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ γρωτική.

ε Εὐλογητὸς ὁ θέὸς καὶ πατήρ τοῦ κυρίου ήμων Ἰησοῦ

* MS. C. begins with [seal elphrn.

1 PAUL an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and 'Timotheus our brother, to the church of God which is 2 at Corinth with all the saints which are in all Achaia. Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed be "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,

1, 2. For the general language of the salutation, and for the several towards δε δελός, 'A you's, see note on 1 Cor. 1, 1.2. Timothers, who, in the First Epistle, was prevented from appearing in prevented from appearing in course described in 1 Cor. iv. 17, xvi. 10; Acts xix. 22, has now returned, and resunts his usual place by the Apostle's side.

 εὐλογητὸς ὁ θεός. This phrase, which occurs in Eph. i. 3, is parallel to the more usual form of the Apostle's thanksgiving εὐχαp(சால் ரல் சி.ல்.

In the fulness of his thankfulness, he at once proceeds to invest the abstract names of 'God' and 'the Father' with the attributes of which he was now himself most conscious. 'Blessed be God, i. e. the God of comfort; blessed be the Father, i. e. the Father of mercies,' the inversion being occasioned partly by the convenience of the construction. which required that παρακλήσεως should be continued into the next sentence, partly by the fact that the first of the two expressions ('the Father of mercies') is the more natural and obvious of the two. It was possibly suggested by the phrase in the opening of Jewish prayers, 'Our Father, Merciful Father!' But it is used here in a more personal sense : and, the genitive row olkrupuor is not merely a Hebraism, but combines the two ideas that God's essence consists in mercy, and also that He is the Father and source of mercies. Compare 'the Father of glory,' Eph. i. 17; 'the Father of spirits,' Heb. xii. 9; 'the Father of lights,' James i. 17; 'the God of hope,' Rom. xv. 13. In the same way the next phrase expresses that God is the Author of comfort. This χριστοῦ, ὁ πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν καὶ θεὸς πάσης παρακλήσεως, ¹ὁ παρακαλῶν ἡμᾶς ἐτὶ πάση τῆ θλίψε ἡμῶν, εἰς τὸ δύκασθαι ἡμᾶς παρακαλεῦν τοὸς ἐν πάση θλίψε διὰ τῆς παρακλήσεως ῆς παρακαλούμεθα αἰντο ἀντό τοῦ θεοι, ὅτι καθώς περιστεύε τὰ παθήματα τοῦ χριστοῦ εἰς ἡμᾶς, οῦτως διὰ ¹τοῦ χριστοῦ περιστεύει καὶ ἡ παράκλησες ἡμῶν. Θέτε δὲ θλιβομέλα, ἀντὸρ τῆς ὑμῶν

* Om. τοῦ.

4 the Father of mercies and ° God of all comfort, who comforted us 'upon all our 'trouble, that we may be able to comfort those who are in any trouble by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted 'by God, for as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, 'so by Christ abounded our 'comfort also. 'Now whether we be 'troubled, it is

is the earliest passage in the New Testament where the words παράκλησις, παρακαλῶν, are applied to God; as, in ors. St. John's writings, they are applied more precisely to The Son and The Spirit.

ἐπὶ πάση τη Ͽλίψει ἡμῶν....
 'in any kind of affliction that befalls me' or 'them.' The article in the first phrase is only used in consequence of the more particular application of it, defined by the genitive ἡμῶν.

5. περισσείει τὰ καθάματα... tɨ njac, vɨn sufferings undergone by Christ in His own person overflow to us; with the double meaning that the sufferings of Christ pass from Him 'to us,' and that they are to be found 'in us' in a superabundant measure. Sec Rom. v. 15.

ούτως δια χριστού περισσεύει και ἡ παρίκλησες ἡμών, 'so also through Him in whom we al suffer together, the comfort, which we ourselves possess from God, passos over abundantly to you.'

The general sense of the pasage is based on the idea that he was one with Christ, and through Christ with all Christians, 'It is of the very nature of spiritual things that they cannot be confined within themselves. Freely we have received, freely we give, The comfort which we feel ourselves, communicates itself to you. Because Christ suffered, therefore we suffer; because He comforts us, therefore we are able to comfort you.' For the transference of the sufferings of Christ to the Apostles, see iv. 10; Heb. xiii. 13; Phil. iii. 10; Rom. viii. 17. And in still nearer connexion with this passage, Col. i. 24, 'the afflictions of Christ in my flesh.' Matt. xx. 23, 'ye shall drink of my cup.

"The example of suffering and of comfort in me shows that if you are similarly afflicted, you will be similarly comforted. This is the course of Christian salvation; your experience will be like mine."

εῖτε ἔξ, κ.τ.λ. There is considerable difference in the order of the words in the MSS. but none in the sense: (1) B.D.E.F.

παρακλήστως καὶ σωτηρίας τῆς Δυεργουμέσης ἐν ὑπομονη τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομει, "καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν· εἰτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας, 'εἰδότες ὅτι 'ἀς κοινωνοί ἐστε τῶν παθημάτων, οὐτως καὶ τῆς παρακλήσεως.

⁸Οὖ γὰρ θέλομεν ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοί, ʿπερὶ τῆς θλίψεως ἡμῶν τῆς γενομένης 'ἐν τῆ 'Ασία, ὅτι καθ' ὑπερβολὴν 'ὑπὲρ δύναμω ἐβαρήθημεν, ὥστε ἐξαπορηθήναι

* Transpose; and read είτε παρακαλούμεθα . . . σωτηρίας. καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς . . . ὁμῶν· • ἄσπερ. • ὁπὶρ. • Αdd ἡμῶν. • ἐδαρήθ. ὁπὲρ δύναμν.

for your 'comfort and salvation which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which ec also suffer, 'and our hope of you is stedfast': whether we be comforted, it 7 is for your 'comfort and salvation, knowing that as you are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the 'comfort.

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which rhappened at in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure above strength, insomuch that we despaired

G. J. K. and Lachm. as in the Text above. (2) A.C. είτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα, υπέρ σωτηρίας είτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως, της ένεργουμένης έν υπομονή πάσχομεν καὶ ἡ έλπὶς ἡμων βεβαία ὑπέρ ὑμῶν, κ.τ.λ. (3) Received Text, made by Erasmus from the Latin versions, combined with the Greek MSS, but not found exactly (either in his time or since) in any Greek MS. : zirz čż θλιβόμεθα . . . πάσχομεν είτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὶρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως και σωτηρίας, και ή έλπις ημών βεβαία υπέρ υμών. Ειζότες κ , τ , λ . The first is the most forcible. The general sense is the same in all, whether the words and η έλπιο ημών βεβαία ψπέο ψαών are to be placed in the first clause, after πάσχομεν, or in the second, after σωτηρίας. A comparison of v. 13 shows that 3λεβέμεθα and παρακαλούμεθα are in each case to be repeated,—'whether we are troubled, it is for your salvation that we are troubled, ... whether we are comforted, it is for your comfort, that we are comforted, knowing,' &c. ἐνεργουμένης, here, as always, is middle, not passive,—' exercising its powers.'

 εἰδότες should more properly be εἰδότων. But the participle is used in the same abrupt manner as elsewhere; e. g. Rom. xii. 9— 13. xiii. 11.

8. He explains his meaning, by referring to the actual danger and consolation which led him to these remarks. The word 3λ/ψ_c, the greatness of the peril, and the comparison of it in verse 5 to the sufferings of Christ, suggest some outward persecution at Ephesus, such as may have occurred in the ήμᾶς καὶ τοῦ ξῆν' ἀλλὶ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἐαυτοῖς τὸ ἀπόκριμα τοῦ θαιάτοι ἀτχίκαμαν, τὰν μη πετευθέτες ἄμεν ἐξὸ ἐαυτοῖς, ἀλλὶ ἐπὶ τῷ θεῷ τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκρούς, ¹οδς ἐκ τηλικούτου θεὰ τοῦ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκρούς, ¹οδς ἐκ τηλικούτου θεὰ τὰ ἐπὶ ἐρύσεται, ἰ'στυνπουργούστων καὶ ὑμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τῆ δεήσει, ῶν ἀ ἐκ πολλῶν προσώπων τὸ εἰς ἡμᾶς χαριστμο δὶ απλλῶν εἰγαριστηθῆ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.

• δύεται.

9 even of life; but we 'ourselves had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in 10 God who raiseth the dead, who delivered us 'out of so great a death and 'will deliver, in whom we trust that If will 'also lyet deliver us, ye also helping together by prayer for us, that, for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many, thanks may be given 'from many faces' on our behalf.

tumult of Demetrius (Acts xix.), or as is referred to in 1 Cor. xv. 32, 'I fought with beasts at Ephesus.' On the other hand, the words έβαρήθημεν, αὐτοὶ έν έαυτοῖς, and the general context, point either to illness or to inward care occasioned probably by his anxiety for the Corinthian Church: also had he alluded to the tumult at Ephesus, he would have probably used the expression έν 'Εφέσω, as in 1 Cor. xv. 32, not iν τη 'Aσiq. Here, as elsewhere, we may observe the understatement, in the Acts, of his sufferings.

9. ἀλλ', 'nay,'=' immo.' ἀπόκριμα, 'When I have asked myself what would be the issue of this struggle, the answer has been "Death."

9ανάτου, 'peril of death,'

as in xi. 23; and 1 Cor. xv. 31

(dardo-jesca).

11. iz volλār προσώτων is probably to be taken with eigenport@5, since the thankegiving more properly proceeded from more properly proceeded from may have the later Greek sense of preson; but it is more in conformity with the otherwise invariable usage of the New Testament to make it 'that thanks the properly thanked the protained thanked the sense of the test and the properly thanked the protained the protaine

The use of the word χάρισμα for 'deliverance from affliction' shows the general application of the phrase to what are now termed natural occurrences.

συνυπουργούντων, 'helping with me.' For the thought see iv. 15, ix. 12.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, I. 1-11.

I return my usual thanks to Him in whom we recognise not only the supreme God, but the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; the Father also, from whose fatherly mercy all mercies descend, the God who is the source of that strengthening comfort which in manifold forms is sent to support us under manifold forms of affliction. Thus we in turn may be called to sunport others in like afflictions by the example and the sympathy of the comfort which we ourselves enjoy; for as we are identified with Christ in His sufferings, so also are we identified with you through Him in our comfort. Your comfort, in fact, is the end and object of our existence: if we suffer, it is for your welfare; if we are comforted, it is that out of your like sufferings may grow a like comfort. What my sufferings were you know; how the hope of life itself seemed to vanish away; and it is from that depth that I have been raised, bu the deliverance for which I now thank God, and which was the result of your prayers.

THE APOSTLE'S SYMPATHY.

THE thanksgiving with which the Epistle opens, furnishes the key-note to the ensuing six chapters.

Two feelings rise in his mind the moment that he begins to address the Corinthians, and cross each other in almost equal proportions. The first is an overwhelming sense of gratitude for his deliverance from his distress, whether it were the actual dangers to which he had been exposed at Ephesus, or the inward trouble which he suffered from his anxiety for the Corinthian Church. The second is the keen sense which breathes through both the Epistles to Corinth, but especially through the Second, of his unity of heart and soul with his Corinthian converts. Not only did he naturally pour out his deepest feelings to them, but he felt that they were one with him in his sorrows and in his joys; that his comfort and deliverance would be shared by them, as it had been the result of their prayers. He may have also been influenced partly by the desire to begin from that serene atmosphere of thankfulness and love, which would soon be disturbed in the course of the Epistle; and partly by the anxiety, here as in his other Epistles, to exhibit his relations to his converts in the most friendly aspect, and to dispel at once by his own frankness the cloud of suspicion which, as we see from many subsequent passages, intervened between him and them. But it is out of keeping with the irregular and impassioned tone of this Epistle to suppose that any such secondary considerations were put prominently forward as the groundwork of a formal and deliberate plan.

There are two remarks of Bengel on this portion of the Epistle, which sum up its characteristics well. First, 'Experientiæ quanta est necessitas: quâ qui caret, perieuc. quam inentus magister est!' Secondly, 'Communio

Sanctorum in corde Pauli, Titi, Corinthiorum, aliarum Ecclesiarum exercita, egregiè representatur in hâc Epistolâ. Hæc corda fuere quasi specula imagines inter se reciprocantia.' The sympathy with which the Apostle makes himself one with his converts-their joys his joys, their sorrows his sorrows, their thoughts his thoughts-is a striking instance of the manifold susceptibility with which he was endowed, and of his capacity for throwing himself into the position of others-becoming 'all things to all 'men,' transferring the feelings of others to his own person. It is the same largeness and depth of heart which embraced so wide a circle of personal satility.

friends; which 'suffered when the weaker brother

3 suffered,' which would not allow him to 'eat meat whilst the world standeth lest he make his brother to offend.' It is the Gentile side of his character, which so remarkably qualified him for his mission to the Gentile world; the Christian or religious form of the proverbial versatility of the Grecian mind. and of the significant maxim of the Roman poet, ' Homo sum, humani nihil a me alienum puto.'

For the right understanding of the Epistle, this identity of

^{1 1} Cor. ix. 22.

² Rom. vii. 7—23; 1 Cor. iv. 6, vii. 1, viii. 1—6. The closest re-semblance to this passage in its expression of personal affection is 1 Thess. ii. 7—12. 3 2 Cor. xi. 29; 1 Cor. viii. 12.

feeling between the Apoetle and his converts must be borne in Double mind throughout. It accounts for a large portion, current of even in detail, of the peculiarities of the style and Feeling. A double current of feeling and thought, now taking the form of passionate sympathy, now of anxiety, now of caution and prudence; the plural number, which he employs in this Epistle even more frequently than elsewhere for himself, as if including his readers also.

It is also important as the liveliest instance of the real communion or community of feeling introduced by Christianity into the world. Never had there been seen amongst heathens, so close a bond between those who had no local, natural, or hereditary connexion with each other. And it thus exemplifies a universal truth. The Apostle did not think it beneath him to show that he rested his claims on his capacity of thoroughly understanding those with whom he dealt. Let them sympathy, see that he cared for them, that he loved them, and he fielt that all else was as nothing in the balance.

he felt that all else was as nothing in the balance. Sympathy is the secret of power. No artificial self-adaptation, no merely official or pastoral interest, has an influence equal to that which is produced by the consciousness of a human and personal affection in the mind of the teacher towards his scholars, of the general towards his soldiers, of the Apostle towards his converts.

THE TIDINGS BROUGHT BY TITUS.

Chap. I. 12-VII. 16.

IIIs Confidence in the Intentions of the Corinthian Church.

Chap. I. 12—II. 11.

THE connexion of this section with the preceding is this: 'Your intercessions and your sympathy will, I trust, continue; for my intercourse with you has been always frank and open." With this declaration of conscious uprightness, he enters on the reply to a charge which weighed so heavily on his mind, as to be one of the chief reasons for his writing. His coming, announced in 1 Cor. xvi. 5-8, had been long delayed; even Timotheus, who had been sent before (1 Cor. xvi. 10), seems never to have arrived. Titus only had appeared as the Apostle's deputy; the threat of Divine vengeance upon the offending sinner (1 Cor. iv. 21, v. 5) had not been fulfilled. Accordingly, when Titus returned to St. Paul, it was with the tidings, on the one hand indeed, that the Corinthian Church had to a great extent complied with his injunctions; but, on the other hand, that in consequence of these delays there had arisen insinuations that he had broken his word, that he practised worldly wisdom, and wrote one thing to the eye and another in reality (i. 12, 17, x. 10). Against these insinuations the Apostle remonstrates with the indignation natural to an honourable mind unjustly suspected. At the same time, it must be observed that, till the 10th chapter, this indignation is kept within bounds: it is only by covert allusions that we discover, in the earlier part of the Epistle, the real occasion of his remarks; and as if restrained partly by affection, partly by prudence, his chief object here seems to be so to conciliate his readers, as to prevent an open rupture.

HIS CONFIDENCE IN THEIR INTENTIONS.

¹² ἡ γὰρ καύχησις ἡμῶν αὐτη ἐστυ, τὸ μαρτύριον τῆς συνειδήστως ἡμῶν, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχύτητι καὶ εἰλικρυαία 'τοῦ θεοῦ, οὐκ ἐν σοφέα σαρκική ἀλλ' ἐν χάριτι θεοῦ, ἀνεστράψημεν ἐν τῷ κόσιμφ, περισσοτέρως δε πρόν ὑμῶς. ¹30 ὁ γὰρ ἄλλα γράφομε ὑμῶ (ἀλλ') ἢ ἄ ἀναγυώ.

άπλότητι for άγιότητι.

ь Оm. тог̂.

12 For our boasting is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in holiness and sincerity of God', not in carnal wisdom' but in the grace of God, we had our conversation in the 13 world, and more abundantly to you-ward. For we write no other things unto you than what ye read or 'indeed

12. Whether ἀγιότητι (Λ. Β. Δενλότητ ος ἀπλότητι (D. Ε. F. αnd Rec. Text) be the right reading, the context fixes the general sense. thtepreta is 'transparent sincerity,' as in ii. 17; 1 Cor. v. 8. exháryr therefore would be 'singleness of view,' according to its etymological meaning, as in xi. 3; Eph. vi. 5; Col. iii. 22; and âyuáryr would be 'purity of metive.' Compare 1 Thess. ii. 3, obči iξ ἀκαθαρσίας, οὕτε ἐν ἔόλφ.

The word ἀγιώτης occurs elsewhere only twice: 2 Macc. xv. 2 (of the consecration of the Sabbath); Heb. xii. 10 (of the holiness of God). roῦ θεοῦ expresses that his sincerity is 'imparted by God' as in Rom. iii. 21.

έν σοφία συρκική, κ. τ. λ. 'not relying on maxims of worldly prudence, but on the sustaining favour of God.' Compare 1 Cor.

έν τῷ κόσμφ, ὑμᾶς. 'This sincerity was manifested before the heathen (comp. 1 Cor. v. 10), but still more before you,' alluding either to his display of preternatural gifts, in which case he refers to the words 'in the grace of God'—or to his refusal of maintenance from them, in which case he refers to the words 'in holiness and sincerity.'

13. 'I have no hidden meaning in what I write. I am not one person when absent, and another when present (compare x. 1); I write nothing else than what you see on the surface of my letter, and recognise in my conduct now, and will still further recognise at the final judgment, when your present misconstructions of me will be changed into the perfect recognition that I am your ἀναγινώσκω glory, as truly as you ἐπιγινώσκω are mine.' For the play on the words άναγινώσκω and in the worth arrayerable and in the colebrated speech, έγνων, άνέγνων, κατέγνων: and in this Epistle, γιτώσεω and ἀναιχεύσωςω, in ii. 2; συγερίνω and ἀναιχεύσω, and ii. 13, 14; ερένω, δαιαχείνω, and σκετε ή καὶ ἐπιγινώσκετε. ἐλπίζω δὲ ὅτι εκο τέλους ἐπιγνώσεσθε, ¹³καθώς καὶ ἐπέγνωτε ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ μέρους, ὅτι καύχημα ὑμῶν ἐσμὲν καθάπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς ἡμῶν ἐν τῆ ἡμέρα τοῦ κυρίου [ἡμῶν] Ἰησοῦ.

15 Καὶ ταύτη τῆ πεποιθήσει ἐβουλόμην ⁶ πρότερον πρὸς ύμᾶς ἐλθεῖν, ἵνα δευτέραν χάριν ἔχητε, ¹⁶καὶ δι' ὑμῶν

* δτι καί.

» έλθεζν πρότερον.

acknowledge. And I trust that ye shall acknowledge to the 14 end, as also ye 'did acknowledge us in part, that we are your boast even as ye also are our's in the day of 'our Lord Jesus.

16 And in this confidence I was minded before to come unto 16 you that ye may have a second grace, and to depart by κατακρίνω, in 1 Cor. xi. 29, 31, 32, &c. If anything further is to be sought in the words than the resemblance of sound, ἀταγινώσκω may refer especially to the Epistle, ἐπειγινώσκω to his conduct (ἀτε.

στράφημεν). καί = 'in fact.'

For this contrast between their present imperfect and their future perfect knowledge of his true character, compare 1 Cor. xiii. 12, where nearly the same words are used, άρτι γινώσκω έκ μέρους, τοτέ δε έπεγνώσυμαι καθώς και έπεvrώσθην. In both cases, the aorist, έπεγνώσθην, έπέγνωτε, is used with the signification of the present. ἐπιγινώσκω combines the sense of 'recognition' with that of 'complete knowledge, in which last sense it is used especially in vi. 9, xiii. 5. For the general sense compare 1 Cor. iv. 8-5.

 (b) 'that we are your joy,' dependent upon ἐπιγνώσισθε.

έν τῆ ἦμέρα τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν may be made indifferently to refer either to the words immediately preceding, or to the whole sentence, as in Rom. ii. 16. 15. ταύτη τῆ «κανοθήσει», 'in this conviction that you would recognise my sincerity.

πρότερον, i. e. 'before going into Macedonia'

ίνα δευτέραν χάριν ἔχητε, 'that by paying you a visit before going to Macedonia, the visit which I intended to pay you after my return from Macedonia may thus be (not the first, but) the second.'

χάριν, 'favour of the Apostle's presence.'

προπεμφθήναι, 'to be assisted on my journey to Jerusalem.' Compare 1 Cor. xvi. 6, 11.

16. διαλθεῖν (B. C. D³. J. K. Rec. Text), 'to pass through Achais,' as in 1 Cor. xvi. δ; δπελθεῖν (Lachmann with A. D¹. F. G.), 'to depart.' The authorities being so nearly divided, the better sense of δεαλθεῖν, and the proba'slifty that ἀπελθεῖν is a

*ἀπελθεῶν εἰς Μακεδονίαν καὶ πάλιν ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας έλθεῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς καὶ ὑφ' ὑμῶν προπεμφθῆναι εἰς τὴν Ἰουδαίαν. Ἱτοῦτο οὖν ʰβουλόμενος μή τι ἄρα τῆ ἐλαφρίᾳ · Sur Adely.

Βουλευόμενος.

you into Macedonia and to come again from Macedonia unto you and 'by you to be 'sent on 'o toward 17 Judgea. When I therefore was thus minded, did I use correction, are in favour of the former.

The plan which he here mentions as originally to the Apostle's plans. by him, was: (1) to have crossed the Ægean from Ephesus to Corinth (as in Acts xviii, 19 he had crossed from Corinth to Ephesus); (2) then to have passed by land through the north of Greece to Macedonia (as he had, in Acts xvii. 14, 15, xviii. 1, passed from Macedonia to Corinth, as he in fact did pass, in Acts xx. 3, from Corinth to Macedonia); and (3) finally to return, either by land or sea from Macedonia to Corinth, and thence sail for Jerusalem. Instead of this he had already, at the time when he wrote 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 6, abandoned the direct voyage to Corinth, and determined to go by Macedonia to Corinth, and thence to Jerusalem (1 Cor. xvi. 3). To this plan he finally adhered (Acts xx. 2. The original plan may have been conveyed to the Corinthians by Timotheus, who left Ephesus for Corinth before the First Epistle was despatched, and who, even if he never reached Corinth. may still have been the means of communicating the Apostle's resolution. This is confirmed by the fact that, in the beginning of the first Epistle, there are traces

17. The misconstruction thus occasioned was twofold, a suspicion of some sinister motives, κατὰ σάρκα βουλεύομα:—a charge of levity, τῃ ἐλαφρίς ἐχρησάμην.

μή τι άρα, 'surely I did not.'
τη ελαφρία. The article probably indicates the levity with which he was charged.

For the construction with ixpopaints, compare πολλή παρίσμες χουάμες, compare πολλή παρίσμες χουάμες, iii: 12. The difference of the tenses, ixpopaints and βουλείομαι, is occasioned by the different sense required. If he was guilty of levity, it was when he changed his purpose. If of worldly motives, he was still actuated by them now.

iva π παρ' tμαὶ τὸ ναὶ ναὶ καὶ τὸ οῦ οῦ. His object is not so much to assert his right of changing his resolution, as to assert that, although he had apέχρησάμην, ή ἃ βουλεύομαι, κατὰ σάρκα βουλεύομαι, ενα ή παρ έμοὶ τὸ ναὶ ναὶ καὶ τὸ οὐ ου; ¹⁸ πιστὸς δὲ ὁ θεός, ὅτι ὁ λόγος ἡμῶν ὁ πρὸς ὑμάς οὐκ *ἔστιν ναὶ καὶ οῦ. ¹⁹δ *τοῦ θεοῦ γὰρ υἰὸς Ἡρσοῦς χριστὸς ὁ ἐν ὑμῖν

* ἐνένετο for ἔστι».

ο 'Ο γάρ τοῦ θεοῦ.

lightness, or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be 'yea yea,' sa and 'nay nay?' But as God is 'faithful, our word towar' to you 'is not 'yea' and 'nay.' For the Son of God Jesus parently given up his original plan, he still in fact and Stedfastin spirit adhered to ness of the it; that, for the two Apostle. short visits which they had lost, they would now (see 1 Cor. xvi. 7) be compensated by one long visit at the end of his whole journey. For this reason, he never directly states his change of purpose, but leaves it to be inferred from the statement of his original plan in verse 16, combined with the fact that, at the time when he wrote the present Enistle, he was on his way, not to Corinth, but Macedonia; and accordingly, in what follows, it is only the 'Yes,' and not the 'No, which pervades his argument.

These words, therefore, are a part of the question 'am I actuated by worldly motives, in such a manner as to give way to inconsistency; that I should say "yes" at one time, and "no" at another; promise to come, and then break my promise? No: I promised to come, and I shall ful-fil that promise.' In this case, it is an objection that the article before the first vai and the first ov loses its force, and that the reduplication is only for the sake of emphasis. But the article may be accounted for as in 79 thatoia-'in such a way as that you should see in me that interchange of "yes" or "no" of which you complain.' And the reduplication is justified by the similar use of it in Mat. v. 37: term 2ê à λέγος θμών, Nai vai Oi vi, and (in the case of vai) by the frequent iteration in the Gospels of 'Amen, amen,' the Hebrew form of vai.

18—20. The Apostle's life was so bound up with his teaching, that, in the mind of his opponents, the charge of personal levity was immediately transferred to his teaching; and he in like manner considers that the vindication of his conduct depends on the vindication of his teaching. Compare in 17—10, where he similarly repels the instituation of duplification of the subject of his teaching is to the subject of his teaching is to be found also in the manner of it.

 πιστὸς δὲ ὁ θεός. 'So true as it is that God is faithful, so true is it that my communications are not variable.' Compare xi. 10: Rom. xiv. 11.

δ λόγος is purposely indefinite, in order to include both his personal communications and his presching.

19. At the thought of the subject of his preaching, he at once ascends into the higher sphere δι ήμῶν κηρυχθεὶς, δι ἐμοῦ καὶ Σιλουανοῦ καὶ Τιμοθέου, οὐκ ἐγένετο ναὶ καὶ οὔ, ἀλλὰ ναὶ ἐν αὐτῷ γέγονεν ²⁰ὄσαι γὰρ ἐπαγγελίαι θεοῦ, ἐν αὐτῷ τὸ ναί· ³διὸ καὶ

· for: for eyévera.

b sal de airo for bid sal bi airoi.

Christ who was preached among you by us, by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not 'yea' and 'nay,' but in Him o'has been 'yea.' For all the promises of God in Him aro 'yea:' 'wherefore also by Him is' 'Amen' unto the glory of ever present to his thoughts, from which he returns in verse 22, to resume his personal defence; "I alrea said that any words to you have said that any words to you "no," because He who is the great subject of our preaching, not of my preaching only, but of my colleagues' also, was not a mixture of "yes" and "no"; on the contrary, His whole life has been trary, His whole life has been for in Him all the promises of God for in Him all the promises of for

'The Son of God, Jesus Christ.' Word is Stedfastheaped upon word to express the great-Christ. ness of Him whom they preached, and so to aggravate the impossibility of His connexion with any littleness or levity. The names of Silvanus and Timotheus are introduced partly in order to intimate the unity with which they taught of Him; partly not to arrogate too much to himself. The tense of the phrase 'was not yea and (our eyerero) shows that it refers to the certainty, which, as a matter of history, attended on His words and deeds: compare 'As the Father said unto me, so I speak.' 'Now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb.' 'He taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes' (John xii. 50, xvi. 29; Matt. vii. 29). The tense of the phrase 'has been yea in Him' (val év abr@ yéyorev) comprehends also the thought that not only were His words based on immovable certainty, but that in His life and works the promise of God Himself was justified and fulfilled,- 'is and has been, and is still producing its results,' Compare for these allusions to the truthfulness and certainty in Christ's historical character, xi. 10, 'as the truth of Christ (ή άλήθεια Χριστοῦ) is in me.' Compare also John xiv. 6, 'I am the truth, and xviii. 37, 'to this end was I born . . . that I should bear witness to the truth. and (in still nearer conformity with this passage) Rev. iii. 7, 'He that is true,' and Rev. iii. 14, "the Amen, the faithful and true witness."

20. To the Greek val is here added to the Hebrew 'Amen,' partly to give greater emphasis, as in the Afocaliyas, where the most solemn expressions are given both in Greek and Hebrew, profit in Glassian and the Amen of the Greek and Hebrew, and the Greek and the Amen of the public assemblies formed the natural accompanional of the Greek and the Amen of the public assemblies formed the natural accompanional companions and the Greek and the Amen of the public assemblies formed the natural accompanions.

δι' αὐτοῦ τὸ ἐμὴν τῷ θεῷ πρὸς δόξαν δι' ἡμῶν. ²¹ὁ δὲ βεβαιῶν ἡμᾶς σὐν ὑμῶν εἰς χριστὸν καὶ χρίσας ἡμᾶς θεὸς, ²²ὁ καὶ σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς καὶ δοὺς τὸν ²ἀρα-βῶνα τοῦ πνεύματος ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν.

• ἀββαβώνα

21 God by us. Now He who "confirmeth us with you in 22 Christ and "anointed us is God; who also "sealed us, and "gave the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

ment. See 1 Cor. xiv. 16, and note thereon. 21. With the doxology the digression properly ends; but one thought lingers behind, which he must express before he returns to his personal defence. As in 1 Cor. iii. 23, xi. 3, xv. 24-28, he passes on from the greatness of Christ to the Divine greatness still beyond, so also here, after having represented Christ, as the one subject of his preaching, and the one consummation of the Divine promises, he still thinks it necessary to ground the stedfastness of his faith on the ultimate basis of all hope and trust, God, Himself; 'Christ is faithful and immovable; and He who makes us faithful and immovable with us faithful and immovable with Christ, is no less than God.' βεξαιῶν is the emphatic word, connecting this with the preceding verses.

ἡμᾶς σῦν ἡμᾶν is inserted with a view of introducing on every occasion his sense of complete union with the Corinthians, as εἰς χριστόν, 'into Christ, so that we become more and more' (this seems the force of the present tense in βεθαιῶν) 'identified with Him.'

in verses 4-7.

χρίσας, 'He who anointed us to be like the Anointed.' Observe the connexion of χριστός and xpisas. For the application of the word to Christ see Acts x. 38, to believers generally, as here, 1 John ii. 20.

22. ė al spayarsiysero cai looi; ris spacios. The tenses of these words, as of xeises, point to the moment of conversion, when the gifts of the Spirit were first given, as in Acts ii. 38, x. 44, xix. 6; and the figure of sealing, as in Eph. i. 13, iv. 30, and of the earnest or pledge, by those gifts, of the reality of the union with Christ, into which they had been baptized.

άραθών is used twice besides (v. 5; Eph. i. 14) in a similar context, for the first instalment paid as a pledge that the rest will follow. It is so used by the Greek orators, and by the earlier Latin writers. A. Gellius (xvii. 2) speaks of it as a word considered in his time (A.D. 120-150) to be vulgar and superseded by 'Arra,' which is the substitute for it in later Latinity. The same word 'erabon' is used in the same sense in Hebrew, Gen. xxxviii. 17, 18, from 'arab,' to 'mix' or 'exchange,' and thence 'to pledge,' as Jer. xxx. 21. Neh. v. 3. It was therefore probably derived by the Greeks from the language of Phenician traders, as 'tariff,' 'cargo,' &c., ²⁵ Έγοὸ δὲ μάρτυρα τὸν θεὸν ἔπικαλοῦμαι ἐπὶ τὴν ἐμην ψυγήν, ὅτι φεδόμενος ῦμῶν οὐκέτι ቫλθον εἰς Κόρμθον. ²⁴ούχ ὅτι κυριεύομεν ὑμῶν τῆς πίστεις, ἀλλὰ συνεργοί ἐσμεν τῆς χαρὸς ὑμῶν τῆ γῶν πίστει ἐστήκατε · Πι. ²ἔ κρινα δὲ ἐματιῷ τοῦτο τὸ μὴ πάλιν ἐν 'λύπη πρὸς ὑμᾶς πάλιν έλθεῶν ἐν λύπη.

23 "But I call God for a "witness upon my soul, that to suppare you I came "no longer unto Corinth. Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are "fellow-workers 1 of your joy: for by faith ye stand. II. But I determined this with myself, that I would not 'in "sorrow come again are derived, in English and other modern languages, from Spanish traders. In this verse it is ἀρα-Εῶνα in A. F. G. J. ἀρộα-Εῶνα in B. C. D. E. In 2 Cor. v. 5; Eph i. 14, it is ἀρβα-Εῶνα in almost all the MSS.

23. He now returns to the question of the delay of his visit; and as in the preceding verses (i. 17—22) he had defended it on the ground that it was not really a change of purpose, so now he defends it on the ground that it was occasioned by tenderness for them.

έγὼ δέ, 'I, whatever my opponents may say.'

έπὶ τὴν ἐμὴν ψυχήν: (1) 'against my soul,' i. e. if I speak falsely; or, (2) 'into the presence of my soul to testify that I speak the truth.'

φειδόμενος ὑμῶν, 'that I might not have occasion to exert my power to the full, and take vengeance on your sins.'

oùxére, 'no more.' 'I gave up the thought of coming.'

24. oby ör: (for obe ipe ör:).

'When I speak of sparing you, I do not mean that I had or have at any time despotic control over your faith, your Christian life.

We are but co-operators with you in producing, not your griof, but your joy; and so far from our being the masters of your faith, it is by your faith that you stand independently of us.'

κυριεύομεν is suggested by the idea of authority implied in φειδόμενος. χαρᾶς, 'joy,' is introduced in χαρας, 'joy, is introduced in contrast to the grief which he wished to spare them. τῆ γὰρ πίστει is the reason for ούχ ὅτι κυριεύομεν, the intervening clause being passed over as parenthetical, as in Mark v. 41, 42, xvi. 3, 4.

II. 1, 2. ἔκρινα δὲ ἐμαυτῷ, 'for myself,' i. e. 'for my own happiness, as well as yours.'

πάλιν έν λύπη προς ὑμᾶς έλθεῖν. In all the best MSS. έν λύπη is put thus early in the sentence, as the most emphatic πάλιν is taken with έλθεῖν. λύπη is used in opposition to χαρᾶς in i. 24.

My second visit shall not be painful; for in giving you pain before, my only object was that I might have joy now.' The abruptness is occasioned by the vividness with which the ofελθείν. "εί γὰρ ἐγοὰ λυπῶ ὑμᾶς, καὶ °τις ὁ εὐφραίνων με εί μη ὁ λυπούμενος ἔξ ἐμοῦ; ¾καὶ ἔγραθμα ¨ τοῦτο αὐτὸ, τω μὴ ἐλθῶν λύπην ¨ἔγω ἀφ ἄν ἔδει με χαίρευ, πεποιθώς ἐπὶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ὅτι ἡ ἐμὴ χαρὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἐτιν. 'ἐκ γὰρ πολλής διλύμενος καὶ στυοχῆς καρδίας ἔγραψα ὑμῶν διὰ πολλῶν δακρύων, οὐχ ὑνα λυπηθήτε, ἀλλὰ την ἀγκητην ὑνα γνῶτε, ἡν ἔχω περιστοτέρως εἰς ὑμᾶς. 'ἐἰ δὲ τις λελύπηκεν, οὐκ ἐμὲ τίς ἐστίν.

 Add ὑμῶν.
 Lachm, Ed. 1. σχῶ.

2 to you. For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad but the same who is made sorry by me? 3 And I wrote this same unto you, lest when I came I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to 'have rejoiced', having confidence in you all that my joy is the diyor of you all. For out of much 'trouble and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears, not that ye should be 'made sorry, but that ye might know the love a which I have more abundantly unto you. But if any have caused 'sorrow, he hath not 'made me sorry', but in part fending party at Corinth starts into sight. 'If I ever give you pain, who can enliven me, except he to whom I have given pain [and who is thereby induced to repent]?' Then applying this general statement respecting his conduct to the particular circumstances of the First Epistle, he proceeds: 'And accordingly I wrote that very passage in the First Epistle [viz. 1 Cor. iv. 8, 18-vi. 11], in order that I should have no more pain occasioned to me by your misconduct; trusting that, as my chief joy comes from your good conduct. you, with that community of feeling which subsists between us, would give me the joy which, as being mine, will also be yours." For the abruptness of kai, see verse 16, καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ίκανός; Luke xviii. 26, καὶ τίς δύναται σωθήναι:

4. 'For I wrote to blame you with great veluctance, my only object being to show my love for you. The passage gives a lively picture of the feelings with which he wrote the First Epistle. For the 'many tears,' compare Acts xx. 19, 'serving the Lord with many tears,' ix and διά, 'out of a broken and oppressed heart my words flowed through (διά) tears.' διά expresses, 'amidst floods of tears;' or, 'with eyes dimmed by tears.'

την άγάπην ΐνα. For this inversion of ΐνα compare 1 Cor. ix.

5. The position of tμt and antithetic to each other, shows the general sense to be, that the sin of the offender, whom from delicacy he avoids more especially mentioning, was felt by St. Paul chiefly because it gave pain to them. He impresses upon λελύπηκεν, ἀλλὰ ἀπὸ μέρους (ἴνα μὴ ἐπιβαρῶ) πάντας ὑμᾶς. ⁶ ἱκανὸν τῷ τοιούτῳ ἡ ἐπιτιμία αὖτη ἡ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, ⁷ ὤστε τοὺναντίον "μᾶλλον ὑμᾶς χαρίσασθαι καὶ παρακαλέ-

Lachm. Ed. 1. omit μᾶλλον.

6 you all (that I may not overcharge you). Sufficient to such a man was this punishment, inflicted by the greater part, so that contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swal-them that he is satisfied with the measures which they had adopted, and acquiesces in any act of indulgence which they might have shown him. It can hardly be doubted, from a comparison of this passage with Ch. vii. that the horror excited by the First Epistle against the offender had been very great, and that one main object of the Apostle is to moderate it.

άπο μέρους (ἴνα μη ἐπιβαρῶ) may thus relate (1) either to the offender,- 'I say "in part," that I may not press too heavily upon him; or (2) to the Corinthian Church,-'I say that he has grieved, not me, but you, lest I should take too much upon myself.' (ἐπιβαρῶ, like κυριεύομεν in i. 24, and ἀπὸ μέρους inserted to qualify the strength of mayrac and reduce it to the level of τῶν πλειόνων afterwards; in which case comp. Rom. xi. 25, πώρωσις ἀπὸ μέρους τῷ Ίσραηλ γέγονεν.) But some expressions indicate a disposition to leniency in the Corinthian Church, which the Apostle, whether from a prudent fear of a reaction in favour of the offending person, or from a real tenderness towards him, eagerly meets, as it were, half way. Thus the word imripia ('punishment'), although it may be extended to mean the extreme sentence of separation recommended in 1 Cor. v. 4, is more naturally referable to some milder punishment; and the tenses of χαρίσασθαι and χαρίζεσθε, in verses 7 and 10, although they may be supposed to refer to what he expected in the future, are naturally expressive of what had been done, or was being done at that time.

 ἐκατόν. ἔστι οτ ἔστω may be understood equally well. ἰκατόν possibly in the legal sense of 'satisfaction,' as in Acts xvii. 9, λαβόντες τὸ ἰκατόν.

ἡ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων is the sentence or the reprobation (λύπη) expressed by the majority of the meeting of the whole Church; see I Cor. v. 4.

7. Gert reiverrier paller pufer, yaginerste ar dependent in seems to depend on icervier 'its seems to depend on the foreign 'but of 'cx-horting,' but of 'comforting,' but of 'cx-horting,' but of 'cx-horting,' but of 'ex-horting.' For a similar juxta-position of the same word in the position of the same word in the different senses, see 1 Cor. xi. 23: mageixer, ampatition.

τη περισσοτέρα λύπη 'by the excess of his grief.'

ό τοιοῦτος, the usual expression of the Apostle, like ὁ δεῖνα, when he alludes to a well-known perσαι, μή πως τή περιστοτόρα λύτη καταποθή ό τοιούτος δελό παρακαλώ ύμας κυρώστα είς αίτόν άγάπην" είξε τούτο γάρ καὶ έγραψα, ΐνα γνώ την δοκιμήν ύμων, "εί είς πάντα ὑτήκοοί έστε. "³⁶ δέ τι χαρίζεσθε, "καλών καὶ γάρ "έγω ὁ κεγάρυτμαι, εί τι καράρυτμαι, δί ύμας ἐν προσ-

Lachm. Ed. 1. fj. > καὶ Εγω. ο δγώ εἴ τι κεχάρισμαι ῷ κεχάρισμαι.

slowed up with overmuch sorrow. Wherefore I 'exhort o'you 'to establish' your love toward him. For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, to whether in all things ye be obedient. To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also: for if I 'have forgiven' any thing, 'what I forgave for your sakes forgave I it in the son, without wishing to specify him more particularly. Comp. xii. 1, 2.

* Or 'have been forgiven,'

8. This expresses his agreement in any act of conciliation which they had adopted or might of his apostolical authority into this act of 'loosing', by the Christian society, as he had before thrown it (in 1 Cor. v. 4) into the act of 'binding,' ""."..." "confirm." This farmers.

vours the supposition that they had already commenced some milder course, which he here urges them to continue.

Bengel: — ' κῦρος est penes amorem, non penes tristitiam: majestas regiminis et disciplinæ ecclesiasticæ sita est in amore.'

 εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ ἔγραψα, 'you may safely exchange harsher for gentler measures; for the object which I had in writing so severely in 1 Cor. v. 4, 7, is fulfilled, now that I see how readily you obeyed me.'

It is a hyperbolical expression of his gratitude to them, as though his object had not been the reformation of the offender, but the trial of their obedience. Compare vii. 12: 'Though I wrote unto you, I wrote not for his sake that had done the wrong, but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear.' Compare, also, I Cor. ix. 9, 10: 'Doth God care for oxen?' Or saith he it altogether for our sakes?' For our sakes?

εἰς τοῦτο, i. e. 'for this object which I proceed to state.' καί, 'in fact,' as in i. 13.

την δοκιμήν. ὑμῶν, 'your proved sincerity.' The words are a confusion of two constructions—'των γνῶν την ὑπακοήν ὑμῶν, and ἴνα σχῷ δοκιμήν ὑμῶν. Compare, however, Phil. ii. 22, την δὲ δοκιμήν αἰνοῦ γινῶσκετε.

 ώπω χριστοῦ, 11 ἴνα μὴ πλεονεκτηθώμεν ὑπὸ τοῦ σατανὰ· οὐ γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὰ νοήματα ἀγνοοῦμεν.

11 face of Christ, lest we should be defrauded by Satan: for we are not ignorant of his devices.

impulse, but for their sakes; and that this forgiveness was as truly in the name and person of Christ, as had been the former act of condemnation, 1 Cor. v. 4. If κεχάρισμαι, as most interproters take it, be transitive (as in Acts xxvii. 24; Gal. iii. 18), then, whether the reading be $6$ or $4$, the meaning will be, for in this, as in all else, my chief motive is my sympathy for you. Whatsoever [or whomsoever] In have in any previous time forgiven, I have forgiven for your sakes. If it be passive, then the meaning will be, "for your welfare is the chief thing to be consider even the forgiveness which I have myself received was for your sake, for the services which I might render you." yeaped@-

Philen, 22; and the sense, 17 have had something forgiven to me, is justified by the analogy of ππίστυμαί r. Rom. iii. 2; 1 Cor. ix. 17. For the general sense of the passage thus understood, compare 1 Cor. xv. 10: "by the grace (χώρις) of God I am what I am: and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in ναι and χαρισθέντα, έχαρίσθη, χαρισθήσομαι are so used in Acts iii.

14; 1 Cor. ii. 12; Phil. i. 29;

suia; and for the humility of the expression, if I really have been forgiven, compare I Tim. i. 13, I obtained mercy because I did is ignoratly; I Cor. iv. diyet am. I not hereby justified, yet am. I not hereby justified. I as well as you. 'in the liker, I as well as you.' in the liker, I as well as good sense. The context, and the transitive use of exceptions of the context and the transitive use of exceptions.

is προσώνες χραντοῦ is probably connected with εχώρομω. Compare is ημέρα, Rom. ii. 16, where the same ambiguity of construction occurs. It must be (not merely 'in the presence of, which would be expressed by siwinero, κατάνατης, ένατάντος, κατάνατης the construction of the constructio Himself were looking on."

11. Tour ph' AnonextroBugue bro' roo' actaral. 'I forgive, and you forgive, lest by withholding such forgiveness sinners should be driven to despair, and so Sand, the great adversary, should win an unfair advantage over us.' Compare I Cor. vii. 5: 'Come together that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.'

rà νοήματα, 'his designs against Christ's kingdom.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. I. 12-II. 11.

I rejoice in my deliverance; I trust in the continuance of your sympathy; for I am conscious of my perfect sincerity to all, but especially to you. There is nothing kept back, as my encmies would insinuate, from you; my letters have no doublemeaning, my writings and my life are both equally open to your inspection : and all misconstructions will be cleared away in the perfect knowledge and perfect sympathy which you will have in the great day when all shall be revealed, and we shall know and be known entirely. If you fully understood this, you need have no fear of any levity or any double dealing in the recent delay of my visit to you. My original plan, it is true, had been to pay you two visits; one on my way to Macedonia, one on my return from it. But if you now find out I am writing from Macedonia before I visit you, you must not suppose that I have broken my former promise, and that what I have said one day, I unsay the next. God knows how contrary this would be to the whole spirit of my communications with you; how contrary, above all, to the spirit and character of Him who is the one subject of the teaching of muself and of my colleagues alike. The Son of God, who appeared amongst us in the person of Jesus Christ, spoke and acted in no vacillating manner. The 'Yes,' the emphatic ' Amen,' which was the especial mark of all His Divine discourses, was but the expression of the perfect consummation of all the Divine promises in Him, the foundation of the solemn praises which we offer to God, from whom those promises came; Who, at our conversion, gave both to us and to you (for we cannot be separated) a pleage of the gifts of the Spirit, of our complete identification with Christ in this certainty and firmness as in all besides, we being anointed by the same Divine Spirit that anointed Him. God knows (to return from this general assurance to my own particular case), God knows that it was from no weakness or duplicity that I delayed my visit. It was simply that I might not be obliged to use my authority severely against you. And when I speak of my authority now, or at any other time, I claim no despotic control over that faith in which you stand independently of any human teacher, All that I now wish is to help in making your happiness, which is my happiness. And, therefore, I was resolved for my own sake, that my second visit to you should not be in sorrow either to yourselves or to me. For if I cause sorrow on my coming to you, the very countenance which should have arceted me with smiles areets me instead with the sorrow which I have myself occasioned. This was my object in using the severe language of my First Epistle, that the sorrow which I felt for the sin committed amongst you might be removed; and that I might thus feel the happiness which, as being mine, I felt sure would become yours also. This was my object; and not any wish to cause you sorrow, but to show you the love which I bear to you above all; as is well testified by the heart-breaking anguish and bitter tears which that Epistle cost me. And this sorrow, so far as it was occasioned by one of your society, was in fact, not so much my sorrow as in great measure the sorrow of all of you. It was not, therefore, my concern, but yours, to punish him; if I interpose at all, it must be not in my own behalf, but in his. The punishment, which the majority of the Christian society has inflicted upon him, is sufficient: the course now to be pursued is of forgiveness and consolation, lest he should be driven to despair. Whatever marks, therefore, of Christian love you have shown towards him, may safely be continued; by the punishment which in obedience to me you have inflicted upon him, you have fulfilled my object in writing Whatever marks of forgiveness you show, have received my full approbation; it is for your sakes, and because of your forgiveness, and not from any impulse of my own, that I have exercised forgiveness muself \[as it is for your benefit that I have been muself forgiven , in the presence of Him who is always watching lest an opportunity of evil should be given to the Adversary.

THE APOSTLE'S RELATIONS TO THE CHURCH.

This passage well exhibits the Apostle's relations to his converts. First, in the repudiation of the charge of duplicity and vacillation, it discloses his keen sus-His ceptibility to attacks of this kind. His sensitiveness susception is such as we should hardly have expected in a chability-racter of such intense devotion to great objects; but it is a natural consequence of the peculiar feeling of high honour and courtesy which runs through the Apostle's writings, and which, as Paley and Coleridge have well observed, makes him a striking example—they might almost have said the first example in any great detail—of what is now called by the untranslatable name of 'gentleman.'

Secondly, it is historically instructive, as containing the virtual retractation of the censure in 1 Cor. v. 1-6. It is an instance of the Apostle's loosing, as the former passage is of the Apostle's binding. It is an instance of the ready forgiveness of the Apostle, as soon as the need for anger was gone; thus exemplifying, in a practical case, as he himself observes in ii. 10, the great peculiarity of the Gospel morality. It His concessis an instance, also, of the wish to allow the sions to the Christian society as much independent action as freedom of the possible; the very opposite of a despotic hierar-community. chical ambition. 'Not lording it over their faith.' 'By faith,' their own faith, 'they stood.' The penalty is inflicted 'by the majority.' 'To whomsoever they forgave, he forgave,' (i. 24, ii. 6, 10.) The Apostle treats his converts as his equals. Even to a Church which needed the assertion of his authority, he yet forbears to press his claims; and thus shows what large concessions could be made even at such a time to the principle of Christian freedom.

THE ARRIVAL OF TITUS.

Chap. II. 12-16.

12 Ελθών δὲ εἰς τὴν Τρωάδα εἰς τὸ εὐαννέλιον τοῦ γριστοῦ. καὶ θύρας μοι ἀνεψγμένης ἐν κυρίω, ¹³οὐκ ἔσχηκα ἄνεσιν τῷ πνεύματί μου, τῷ μὴ εὑρεῖν με Τίτον τὸν ἀδελφόν

12 But when I came to Troas' for the gospel of Christ', 13 and a door was opened unto me of the Lord. I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother,

He resumes the main subject of the arrival of Titus. 'Let me then put aside all these questions about my delay, and let me place before you the scene at Troas. Although with every facility for pursuing the mission which I had long hoped to accomplish in those parts, I was so distracted by not receiving the expected tidings from Corinth. that I tore myself away from the disciples of Troas, and embarked for Macedonia. την Τρωάδα. The article possibly indicates the region of 'the Troad,' rather than the city. The city had been built by Antigonus, under the name of Antigonia Troas; was afterwards called Alexandria Troas (Conybeare and Howson, vol. i. pp. 301, 302); and was at this time a Roman 'colonia Juris Italici,' and regarded with favour by the Roman Emperors, as the representative, though at a considerable distance, of the ancient Troy, of which, throughout the middle ages, and still by the inhabitants, it has been supposed to occupy the site. St. Paul had only been prevented from staying there on his first visit (Acts xvi. 8) by the vision which called him into Macedonia, and on the return from his present journey (Acts xx. 3—6) was received there with much enthusiasm, and remained for more than a week. These indications of the field of labour thus opened for him, agree with the expressions here used, είς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ' with the view of preaching the Gospel,' and θύρας ἀνεωγμένης, 'a great opportunity offered for preaching." See note on 1 Cor. xvi. 9.

έν κυρίω, 'in the sphere of the

13. οὐκ ἔσχηκα ἄνεσιν τῷ πνεύματί μου, 'my spirit drove me forwards,' as in the first visit to Troas, Acts xvi. 8, when ' the Spirit suffered them not' to stay, τώ μη εύρεϊν, by reason of the non-arrival of Titus; Troas having been appointed on this occasion, as in Acts xx. 5, for the place of rendezvous. The perfect has here the same force as the præsens historicum, in giving a living image of what is past, άποταξάμενος, 'having taken leave,' Acts xviii. 18, 21; Luke ix. 61; Mark vi. 46. abroic, i. c.

μου, ἀλλὰ ἀποταξάμενος αὐτοῖς ἐξῆλθον εἰς Μακεδονίαν. ¹⁴τῷ δὲ θεῷ χάρις τῷ πάντοτε θριαμβεύοντι ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ χριστῷ καὶ τὴν ὀσμὴν τῆς γνώσεως αὐτοῦ φανε-

but taking my leave of them I went on into Mace-14 donia, Now "grace" unto God, who always "leadeth us in triumph' in Christ and maketh manifest the savour of

· Or 'thanks.'

'the disciples at Troas.' Compare his parting with them in Acts xx. 7.

iξήλθον, 'I went forth.' The same phrase is used for the departure to Macedonia in Acts xvi. 10, xx. 1, apparently to mark the transit from Asia into Europe.

14. This would have been the natural point at which to enlarge on the details of Titus's message. But it would seem as if the recollection of the relief was so overpowering that, without even mentioning it, he breaks out in a strain of thanksgiving similar to that in i. 3-10, but more impassioned; and in the course of this, the whole importance of his office bursts upon him, in such vivid colours, that he is unable to withdraw his gaze from the vision which thus opens before him, with one distant vista after another. The main thread is not resumed till vi. 11-13, vii. 2-16, in language so exactly harmonizing with that in these verses (12, 13) as to leave no doubt that we have there the thoughts which had been here so abruptly intercepted.

πάντοτε 'always,' i. e. 'even from the deepest distress.'

ἐν παντὶ τόπφ, 'in every place,' i.e. 'at Corinth, as well as Macedonia and Treas;' his thoughts travelling from one part of his Apostolical sphere to another; the electric spark of his influence being communicated no less by his letter to Corinth than by his preaching to Macedonia and Troas. Speanβεύειν is properly, 'to lead captive in triumph, as in Col. ii. 15, and as in all classical authors (see Wetstein, ad loc.); and probably retains that signification here, expressive of the complete dependence of the Apostle on God, and of the over-ruling of all his anxiety to good; he being himself the sacrifice. (Comp. Phil. ii. 17, άλλ' εί και σπένcount.) But the sense of conquest and degradation is lost in the more general sense of ' making us to share His triumph.' Compare the like extension of sense in verbs in εύω, e. g. μαθητεύειν, properly, as in Matt. xxvii. 57, 'to be a disciple; but in Matt. xxviii. 19, xiii. 52: Acts xiv. 21. 'to make disciples: ' βασιλεύειν, properly 'to be a king;' but often in the LXX. as in 1 Sam. viii. 22, xv. 11, 'to make a king: χορεύει», properly, 'to dance;' but in Eur. Herc. F. 688, 873, ' to make to dance.'

The idea of the Roman triumphal procession, in the eyes of the then existing world the most glorious spectacle which the imaρούντι δί ήμων έν παντὶ τόπφ, 15 ὅτι χριστοῦ εὐωδία ἐσμὲν τῷ θεῷ ἐν τοῖς σωζομένοις καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις, ¹⁶ οἶς μὲν ὀσμὴ "ἐκ θανάτου εἰς θάνατον, οἶς δὲ ὀσμὴ ἐκ ζωῆς εἰς Κωῆς εἰς Κανάτου τοῦς και το και τ · douh Sandrov . . . douh (wiis,

15 His knowledge by us in every place, for we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved and Sin them that perish, to the one 'a savour 'from death unto death, and to the others 'a savour 'from life unto life.

gination could conceive, and in its general features familiar even to those who had never witnessed it, seems to suggest the thought of the odours, whether from the altars smoking with incesse in the open temples (Plut. Æm. Paul. c. 32), or from the sacrifices offered up on the arrival of the procession at the temple of the Capitoline Jupiter (Jos. B. J. the Capitoline Jupiter (Jos. B. J.

VII. v. 6).

15. As applied to the know-ledge of God revealed through his preaching, this thought expresses the invigorating and quickening effect of the new element of life, Christianity permeating the world as a cloud of frankincense. This figure he details more at length in the following verses. His own life, as diffusing the knowledge of God, is now the fragrant odour rising up before God, as in the primitive sacrifices. Gen. viii. 21, 'the Lord smelled a sweet sayour; ' Lev. i. 9, 'a sweet savour unto the Lord' (οσμή εὐωδίας, LXX.). And this odour is given forth, because of his union with Christ: it is not his act, but Christ's; hence the emphatical position of χριστού in the sentence. The two ideas, of his own self-sacrifice (as in Eph. v. 2), and of his offering up his work to God (as in Phil. iv. 18; Rom. xv. 16), are blended together.

Compare Col. ii. 15.

16. The metaphor of the odour suggests the double effect which his preaching might have; according to the Rabbinical image, so frequent as to be almost proverbial, by which human life and action, and especially the Law is spoken of under the figure of a seent, either deadly or salibrious. (See Wetstein and Schöttgen ad loc.)

This passage is the origin of the metaphor, once so common in the religious language of Christendom, as in popular belief to have been even re-converted into a fact, of 'the odour of sancity,' applied in both the Eastern and the Western Church, to the beneficent influence of a holy life, followed by a holy death.

For arealysistons and ewloprivers, see I con. i. 18. The repetition of the phrases, is Suvárov ile Stavrov—ie Lovie ele Coirp. Rom. i. 17, is n'ortes ele n'ortes 2 Cor. iv. 17, and brepfohy's ele brepfohy's. They are, in fact, thebrew superlatives, expressed by repeating the emphatic word twice.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, II, 12-16.

I came to Trous, and had a great field open before me. But I nous so anxious for news from you, that not finding Titus there, I passed over the Ægean, and came to Europe. There, thanks be to God, I heard the tidings that out of my freshe efforts God had brought the spectacle of a glorious triumph, and that the incense of the triumphal sacrifice in my life and teaching had prescretated far and wide. Also! that there should be a darker side; for to some it is not the scent of life and health, but of poison and death.

THE MEETING WITH TITUS.

Is these few abrupt words we have a glimpse of the outward scene which witnessed the events and feelings on which the whole of this Epistle is founded. It is but a glimpse, closed almost as soon as revealed. We cannot dwell on the striking thought of the Apostle standing day by day on the wooded shores of that classic region, under the heights of No classical Ida, vainly expecting the white sail of the ship associations at which was to bring back his friend from Corinth. Tross.

We cannot allow ourselves to thread with him the mass of the lofty islands of Lemnos and Tenedos, and Samothrace, as he sought once more the great continent to which, from that same city of Troas, he had five years before been invited by the vision of the Macedonian stranger. The more attractive these associations are to us, the more conclusive is the proof, furnished by the absence of such allusions in this Episteh, how slight was their effect on the mind of the Apostle: even the description of the actual meeting with Tixus, so full of dramatic interest, is dissolved in the burst of thankfulness which expresses itself in imagery borrowed not from the neighbouring localities, but from the gorgeous spectacles in the Imperial City as yet unseen and remote.

But the most remarkable feature of the passage is the sudden transition from the bright to the dark side of the picture, from Conscious- the thought of the benefits to the thought of the evil ness of effects of his teaching. Probably here, as elsewhere in this Epistle, his consciousness of the sympathy of Chrisbetween himself and the Corinthian Church is checked tianity. by the recollection of his opponents, which immediately afterwards breaks in upon his joyous strain, in a long and complicated digression. But this feeling of the double aspect of Christianity, of its failures side by side with its successes, of its judgments and responsibilities side by side with its blessings and privileges,-is characteristic, not only of this juncture of the Apostle's life, nor of his writings only, but of all parts of the New Testament. 'The falling and rising again of many in Israel,' 'a sword' and 'a fire upon earth,' 'the Son of man finding no faith when He comes,' are amongst the many instances in which, as here, a shade of pensive and melancholy foreboding goes along with the most triumphant exultation; most unlike the unqualified confidence and security of the partial and one-sided views of Religion, which, within or without the pale of Christianity, have from time to time appeared,most like the mingled fortunes of good and evil which have been the actual condition of Christendom, as recorded in history.

DIGRESSION ON THE APOSTOLICAL MISSION.

THE PLANNESS AND CLEARNESS OF THE APOSTOLICAL SERVICE.

Chap. II. 16 b—IV. 6.

A DOURLE train of thought here comes across him, and chokes his further utterance. First, the consciousness roused within him, by his own impassioned expressions, of his high responsibility, vents itself in the question 'And who is sufficient for these things?

But, secondly, this sense of the greatness of his mission, and of his own inadequacy to fulfil it, is so blended with the thought of his opponents (latent in the previous verses) as to call out the feeling that, though he was not worthy, much less were they; that though he was not worthy, he still was free from the charges of dishonesty and meanness which they brought against him; that though he was not worthy in himself, yet he was worthy by the help of God, who had raised him to a level with the office to which he had been called. The confluence of these three contrasts is protracted from ii. 17 to iv. 6, and thus the direct answer which might have been expected to the question in ii. 16,- In his own strength no one is sufficient, is exchanged for the suppressed answer ' [I am sufficient], for I stand on a ground different from that of my opponents, or from that which they ascribe to me.' But still the implied answer is in iii. 5, 6, where he explains in what sense be was, and was not 'sufficient;' and the course of the argument showing how he was at last enabled to accomplish the vast work set before him, is resumed in iv. I for a moment, and then at still greater length in iv. 7-16.

PLAINNESS OF THE APOSTOLICAL SERVICE.

καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανός; ¹⁷οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν ὡς οἰ πολλοὶ καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ εἰλικρινείας, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐκ θεοῦ ^{*}κατέναντι θεοῦ ἐν χριστῷ λαλοῦμεν.

* κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ

And who is sufficient for these things? For we are not as 17 the many who corrupt the word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God before God speak we in Christ.

The abruptness of the connexion is shown by the abruptness of the construction. (For a similar use of καί, comp. verse 2, καὶ τίς ὁ ἐψφραίνων;)

ταῦτα relates to the responsibilities just described.

17. οἱ πολλοί (A. B. C. K.), or as it is still more strought given in D. E. F. G. J. οἱ λοιτοί. ¹The mass '(not of mankind in general, nor of the church, but) of the teachers who claim to discharge the functions of which he has just been speaking. It shows the isolation of the Apostle,— 'Athanasius contra Mundum.'

καπηλεύοντες. This (see the like instances quoted on verse 14) is a neuter verb, having an active sense. καπηλεύω καπηλεύω, is 'to be a retail dealer;' but when joined with an accusative, 'to make a trade of;' and as the original word signifies a petty merchandise, so when used actively, it usually has a bad sense, either of 'making an interested use,' or (from the practice of adulterating wine by petty tradesmen) of 'corrupting.' For its use in both these senses in classical authors, see Wetstein ad loc. In the New Testament, it is never used, except in this place. As applied to 'the word of God' (i. e. the teaching of a knowledge of God, as in verse 14), it may either be 'to corrunt' and 'falsify' (like δολούντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ in iv. 2), or 'to make a dishonest gain of it.' For the general sense comp. 1 Thess. ii. 3-5: 'Our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile . . . neither at any time used we flattering words . . . nor a cloke of covetousness' (iv προφάσει πλεονεξίας). The particular allusion is probably to the charge brought against him of endeavouring to extort money from them through Titus or otherwise (see xii. 15-17), and he retorts the charge upon those who were themselves liable to it from their own solfish actions (see xi. 12—20). ως ἐξ εἰλικριτείας, 'we speak as one who was perfectly sincere would speak.' For the word see note on i. 12.

lε θεοῦ, 'as one who was sent by God;' enlarged into the expression which follows,—'as actually in the presence of God.'

έν χριστῷ, to be taken with

III. ¹¹Αρχόμεθα πάλιν έαυτοὺς ゚συνιστὰν ; ἡ μὴ χρήζομεν ως ˚[πέρ] τινες συστατικῶν ἐπιστολῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς

* συνιστάνειν; Εί μή. See note.

Omit πέρ.

1 Do we begin again to commend ourselves? or need we, as some others, epistles of commendation to you or λαλουμεν, 'in communion with Christ.' Both expressions occur in a similar context, xii. 19.

III. 1. The protestation of his sincerity, in tonnexion with the greatness of his mission, suggests a charge which his opponents brought against him (iv. 2, v. 12, x. 12), that he had no commendatory letters from the Apostles or from other Churches, as they had; and that he, therefore, was wont to commend himself by self-exaltation, or by dishonest shifts. Hence, the frequent emphasis on 'commending ourselves' (ἐαυτοὺς συνιστάν), iii. 1, iv. 2-5, x. 12, and hence the connexion of this apparently irrelevant topic with the assertions of his openness and sincerity, ii. 17, iii. 12, iv. 2. Instances of such letters are expressly recorded in the commendation of Titus and his companion in this very epistle (viii. 17-19) and in Acts xviii. 27, where Apollos is described as having come to this very Church of Corinth, with letters from Aquila and Priscilla, requesting the brethren to receive him. In later times letters having the same designation (Epistolæ commendatoriæ) were granted by bishops to clergy travelling through other dioceses. If the opponents in question were Judaizers, it is probable that the letters on which they founded their claim to recention. were from the Church or Apostles of Jerusalem, like those 'who came from James' (reves άπὸ Ἰακώβου), Gal. ii. 12. And it would appear that one of the objections to the Apostleship of St. Paul was the fact that he produced nothing of the kind. but came on his own authority - not of men, neither by man; not conferring with flesh and blood; neither receiving the Gospel of man, neither being taught it;' but by the immediate 'revelation of Jesus Christ' to himself personally (Gal. i. 1, 12, 16), In like manner, the Clementine Homilies (xi. 35) represent St. Peter as warning his audience against 'any Apostle, prophet, or teacher, who does not first compare his preaching with James. and come with witnesses,' (See Introduction, p. 367.)

'Appóinted wither, r. r. \(\). He is checked in his onward flow of self-defone, by the expected tunnt of his adversaries: 'Here at the very opening of his Egistle begins the old sover of his self-wither and the event of his former conduct, must refer to such passages in the First Epistle as iz. 15, 21.

συνιστῶν in B. D¹. συνιστῶν ιν in A. C. D³. E. I. K. If $\mathring{\eta}$ μ $\mathring{\eta}$ (adopted by Lachmann from C. D. E. F. G. and all the Versions) be the right reading, the construction is clear, — 'or are we in want of commendatory epiή έξ ύμων*; ²ή ἐπιστολὴ ἡμῶν ὑμεῖς ἐστέ, ἐγγεγραμμένη ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν, γινωσκομένη καὶ ἀναγινω-

Add συστατικών.

2 % from you? Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts, stles, &c. (un=num.) But this is probably a correction (from like pronunciation) of the more difficult, but nearly equally supported reading of εἰ μή (in A. B(e sil.). J. K.). If, therefore, we take εί μη χρήζομεν as the true reading, it is ' No, we do not commend ourselves? unless we are in want of commendatory epistles,' the clause being the reason for a suppressed answer to the question, 'do we commend ourselves?' as ii. 17 is the reason for the similarly suppressed answer to the question in 16

^{iξ} ^{ύμων}, 'from you to other Churches.' For the power claimed over other Christians by the Church of Corinth, see 1 Cor. xiv. 36.

2. 'I want no letters of commendation; you, my converts, are my real letter.' This metaphor of the letter he gives in two different forms. First, he conceives of them as written on his heart, according to the image familiar in all languages, by which that which is most dear and cherished is supposed to be written on the heart. 'When I die, Calais will be found Letter written written on my heart,' on the was the well known expression of the expiring queen of England. And the same thought runs through this Epistle; vi. 12, 'our heart is enlarged, ye are not straitened in us; 'vii. 3, 'ye are in our hearta,' So Phil. i. 7: 'I have you in my heart.'

But, secondly, on this image, the almost unconscious expression of his sympathy with them, he bases his representation of the manner in which they were to him instead of a commendatory letter; and in so doing imperceptibly passes to the more obvious metaphor in which he conceives the letter to be written on their hearts by Christ, so that they should be by their lives a commendation of him to themselves and others: 'The letter of commendation which I have to give is no other than yourselves, a letter written on my heart, bound up with my inmost affections; but a letter, also, plain and open to all the world, with no secret meaning or double dealing' (alluding to the charge, already noticed in i. 19), 'known as widely as your faith and love is known; a letter, therefore, which commends me with far greater authority than any outward testimonials, for it is a letter written not by man but by Christ, not with perishable, but imperishable materials.' For the play on the words γινωσκομίνη and αναγινωσκομένη (as in English we might say 'read and reread') compare άναγινώσκετε and έπιγινώσκετε in i. 13. The imagery of the following words is from the ancient mode of writing: but the metaphor seems here, as in the preceding words, to have been distorted; a Gentile notion, as often in St. Paul, being blended with a recollection from the Jewish Scripσκομένη ύπο πάντων ανθρώπων, ⁸ φανερούμενοι ὅτι ἐστὲ ἐπιστολὴ χριστοῦ διακονηθεῦσα ὑφ΄ ἡμῶν, ἐγγεγραμμένη οὐ μέλανι ἀλλὰ πνεύματι θεοῦ ζῶντος, οὐκ ἐν πλαξὶν sknown and read 'by all men, manifestly declared to be 'an epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God, not in tables of tures (e. g. in ii. 14, 15). The usual writing materials for letters at this time were (see 2 John 12) papyrus and ink, to which accordingly the allusion is made in the words οὐ μέλανι. Compare the Rabbinical proverb, 'A boy learning is like ink on new parchment; an old man learning is like ink on old parchment.' (Schöttgen, ad loc.) But the expression 'by the Spirit of the living God,' seems to have awakened the thought of 'the finger of God' which wrote the Ten Commandments on two tables in the wilderness. Hence seems to be derived the mixture of two incongruous images-ink (which would not apply to stone) and tables of stone (which, strictly speaking, were not employed for epistles). For the association of the two expressions 'Spirit' and 'finger' of God, compare Matt. xii. 28, 'If I by the Spirit of God,' with Luke xi. 20, 'If I with the finger of God cast out devils."

čusorytkieu ve južev may be either: (1) 'You are a letter dicated by Christ through me so an amanusais,' still keeping up the figure in verse 2 of the Corinthians themselves being the Dipatie; or (2) 'You have in Dipatie; or (2) 'You have in like command) bero Christ (και ly me,' passing on to the effects of their conversion as described in verse 3. For the stress laid on the fruits of his preaching as the proof of his apostolical authority, comp. 1 Cor. ix. 2, 3; 'the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord. Mine answer to them that examine me is this.'

is this.

The contrast of the law of the living Spiris in the human heart, the human heart stone, is suggested by the often quoted passage in Jer. xxx. 33, to which he himself refers in vi. 16. The metaphor of 'the tables of the heart' may have been derived from the recollection of the phase in Prov. iii. 3, vii. 3 (though ret in LXXX.), and the heart of flesh, in Ezek. xi. 19, xxxxi. 26

πλαξίν καρδίαις σαρκίναις, 'tables which are hearts of flesh.'

In the preceding image of 'the Epistle,' two ideas are brought out: first, the inward, as oposed to the outward testimony of the Apostle; secondly, its openness and simplicity, as opposed to concealment and obscurity. Each of these in turn suggests a further comparison of the mode, with the subject, of his teaching, analogous to the transition in i. 18-20, from the assertion of his personal firmness and decision to the firmness and immutability of Christ. In each case he starts with a resumption of the argument as it was left in ii. 17, 'Who is sufficient to sustain the Apostolical responsibilities? Asλιθίναις άλλ' έν πλαξίν "καρδίαις σαρκίναις. 4 πεποίθησιν δὲ τοιαύτην ἔχομεν διὰ τοῦ χριστοῦ πρὸς τὸν θεόν. δούχ ότι ίκανοί έσμεν ^δλογίζεσθαί τι ἀφ' έαυτῶν ὡς ἐξ δφ' ἐαντῶν λογίσασθαί τι,

4 stone but in fleshy tables of the heart. "Now such "confi-5 dence have we through Christ to God-ward. Not that we are sufficient to think anything of ourselves as from ourselves.

sisted by the consciousness of your support and sympathy, I feel that I am.' This is the feeling expressed in verse 4 ('such is our confidence'), and again in verse 12 ('having such a hope'). But in each case this personal feeling is absorbed into the general contemplation of the nature of his service; in the first instance, into the consideration of the glory and life of the Gospel as opposed to the dimness and death of the Law; in the second, into the consideration of the openness and freedom of the Gospel, as opposed to the obscurity and mystery of the Law. Thus the Apostle not only delineates the general character of Christianity (as is his wont) in reference to an incidental and personal circumstance, but this delineation is set forth in an express contrast to the Law, and he, for the first time, introduces into this Epistle a polemical element unknown to the First, but found in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. Even in ordinary writings, when the author throws himself into a hostile attitude, we look round to see what enemy he is menacing; much more in the Apostolical Epistles, where almost every truth is elicited by some directly prac-The concluding tical object. portion of the Epistle reveals to us the connexion of ideas in the present case. The same insinuations which are indirectly glanced at here, in ii. 17, iii. 1, 2, are, in x. 1-18, xi. 5-15, openly attacked, and the party from whom they proceeded are expressly declared to belong to the Jewish Christians, xi. 22. If in the interval between the First and Judaizers.

Second Epistles the Judaizing party had grown to such a height as to assail the Apostle in the stronghold of his influence, it is not surprising that their image should be constantly before him, and that, in repelling their charges his sense of the greatness of his mission should be enhanced by a consciousness of its superiority to the ancient and decaying system to which they were still enslaved.

τοιαύτην, i. e. 'such as is inspired by your testimony, and such as I have expressed in ii. 16, 17, δια του γριστού, 'my confidence is entirely through Christ;' a correction of any assertion of his own independent power. πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, 'a confidence which will stand the test of God's trial,' as in Rom, iv. 2, v. 1. 5. oby ore inavol sousy. The connexion is through the implied meaning of πεποίθησιν, i. e. 'confidence that I have the sufficiency spoken of in ii. 16; and the repetition of the word here proves the identity of this

°αὐτῶν, ἀλλ' ή ίκανότης ήμῶν ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ, ⁶ὃς καὶ ίκάνωσεν ήμᾶς διακόνους καινῆς διαθήκης, οὐ γράμματος

* éaurûr.

6 but our sufficiency is from God, who also rmade us rsufficient ministers of ra new rcovenant, not of ra letter but of ra train of thought with that on which he then entered. 'Not that my sufficiency of which I am confident, is my own,' &c.

ούχ ὅτι, the usual phrase for ούκ ἐρῶ ὅτι, as in i. 24.

λογίζεσθαί τι, 'to judge or conclude anything out of our own sufficiency.' Compare the parallel passages of x. 7 (where the occurs with âφ ἐσυνσὸ), and xii. 6; and for the general sense comp. 1 Cor. iv. 1—4 (where the word also occurs), 'Yet am I not hereby justified.'

άφ' έαυτῶν, 'from our own resources.'

δς ἐξ αὐτῶν, 'with the confidence that it is from our own hearts;' opposed to ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ, and also for the sake of accumulating phrases, as in ii. 17.

6. c̃e cai,=qui idem, 'the same to God who' (with reference to karoi immediately preceding) 'made us sufficient to be' čea-κόνους, as in the common Greek phrase παιδεύειν σορόν ('to educate so as to make wise'), 'κέπτων κερόν' ('to strike so as to kill'). The word δεάσους, 'searny, or 'instrument,' refers back to διακουβαίτοι in verse 8.

xαυσές διαθήσης, 'not of an old and worn-out covenant; but of 'A new covenant, incovenant, sinct with youthfulness and energy;' and then this neuness leads him back to the image of the living Epistle of the Corinthian Church; and the dead letter of the Mosaic

Law, as set forth in verse 3 -'a new covenant, which consists not in a writing like the Law, which could do nothing but pronounce the sentence of death on those who disobeved it: but in a Spirit which, according to the very nature of spirit, which is the principle of animation, breathes life and vigour into the soul.' For the words 'new covenant' (καινή διαθύκη), see 1 Cor. xi. 25, 'The new covenant in my blood;' from which expression of our Lord they are probably derived.

Closerve the omission of the article before διαθήκης, γράμματος, πνεύματος.

The connexion of the ideas of 'life' and 'spirit,' as expressed in the words and life. ζωοποιεί and πνεύμα is obvious, and is to be found in John vi. 63, 'the words that I speak ... they are spirit and life. Cor. xv. 45, a 'quickening (ζωο-ποιούν) spirit.' Rom. viii. 11, 'He shall quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit.' Gal. vi. 8, 'He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life." But the connexion between the ideas of 'death' and the 'letter' is less clear. In most of the previous passages just quoted, the 'Spirit' is opposed, not to 'the letter,' but to 'the flesh;' and though we now frequently contrast 'the letter' and the 'spirit,' vet it is this very passage άλλὰ πνεύματος: τὸ γὰρ γράμμα *ἀποκταίνει, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ζωοποιεῖ. τεὶ δὲ ἡ διακονία τοῦ θανάτου ἐν ὑγράμ-

* ånoureires. 3 -

» γράμμασιν.

spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. 7 But if the ministration of death rengraven in the letter on' which has made that contrast familiar to us. In the first place, by γράμμα,

' the letter,' is meant the Letter sacred books of the Old Test. as appears from the Spirit. general use of the cognate word, γραφή, 'the Scripture,' of the derived word γραμματεύς ('scribe' or 'interpreter of the sacred books'), and of the word young itself (in the plural). 'The writings (τοῖς γράμ-μασι) of Moses,' John v. 47; the sacred writings' (rà l'spa γράμματα), 2 Tim. iii. 15; Joseph. Ant. X. x. 4. These expressions, though occurring in the LXX., are never there used for the sacred books. Probably. the nomenclature at this time arose from the fact, that to the Jews the Old Testament stood in the relation of 'literature' generally,' and hence was called by the name which the Greeks applied to their own literature. (Compare the use of γράμματα in this general sense, John vii. 15: Acts xxvi. 24.) And the expression would be still further fixed by the increasing attention of the Jews to the actual writing of the words and letters of the sacred books as distinguished from their contents. Hence the Apostle brings out to the surface of the word the meaning which thus lay latent within it; and hence his use of it (wherever it occurs in the singular number), not simply for the Hebrew Scriptures, but (in a bad sense) for the mere outward book or ordinance, as contrasted with the living power of the Gospel. 'Circumcision in spirit and not in letter' (Rom. ii. 27—29). 'The oldness of the letter and newness of the spirit' (Rom. vii. 6).

Maring so used the word, he sacribes to it, as to the Law, the introduction of death into the world through sin, without the power of alleviating or averting it. See Rom. v. 12, viii. 9, viii. 2, 3; 1 Cor. xv. 56; Gal. iii. 10, 21. And so here the fizing authority in the Corinthian Church suggests strongly the contrast of the dearn death-like atmosphere characters on which his opponents rested their claims.

The thought of the tables of stone carries the Apostle more fully into the Mosaic account of their descent from Sinai; and he argues from the glory which (as described in Exod. xxxiv.) then environed them, that his mission must be more glorious still. All the words-τοῦ θανάτου, ἐν γράμματι, έντετυπωμένη, λίθοις-αге meant to express the inferiority of the Mosaic covenant, 'bringing not life but death,-carved mechanically, in precise characters, on hard stones.' With the same view, την καταργουμένην is added at the end of the sentence, to leave this as the final and emphatic expression.

7. The Received Text, with ματι Εντετυπωμένη "λίθοις έγενήθη ἐν δόξη, ώστε μή δώνασθια ἀνενίσκαι τοὺς υλοιός 'Ισραήλ εἰς τὸ πρόσωπου "Μωυσέως διὰ τὴν δόξαν τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ τὴν καταργομένη», "πας οιχί μαλλον ή διακονία τοῦ πενέματος όστα ἐν δόξη; 'ἐι γαρ 'τῆ διακονία τῆς κατακρίσεως δόξα, πολλώ μάλλον περισσείει ἡ διακονία τῆς διακουτώς 'δόξη. "ὑκαὶ γαρ, 'οὐ δόδξαστα τὸ δεδόξασμένου ἐν τούτω τῷ μέρει, 'εἰνεκεν τῆς ὑπερβαλλούσης δόξης τὸ καταργούμενου διὰ δόξης, πολλώ μάλλον τὸ μένον ἐν δόξη. "¹ξχοντες οῦν τοιαίτην ἐλπίδα πολλή παρ-

* Add èv.

Masséus.

† Add èv.

† Starovia.

† Éperev.

† Éperev.

stones was 'made in glory', so that the children of Israel 'were not able to look' stelfastly 'on the face of Moses for the glory of his 'face (which glory was to 'vanish saway'), how shall not the ministration of the spirit be a rather 'in glory'? For if the ministration of condemation 'have glory, much more doth the ministration of rightcossoness 'abound in glory. For even that which 'has been' made glorious 'has had no glory in this respect, by reason 10f the glory that excelleth. For if that which 'vanisheth away was 'in glory', much more that which remaineth is 'in 'glory'. 'Having then' such hope, we use great plainness of

A. C. D³. E. J. K. and almost all the Versions, reads $\ell\nu$ $\gamma\rho\delta\mu\mu\rho\sigma\sigma\nu$, Lachmann, with B. D¹. F. G., $\ell\nu$ $\gamma\rho\delta\mu\mu\sigma\nu$. The first would refer to the actual letters; the second, to the general fact of the writing. $\ell\gamma\nu\nu\eta\delta\eta$, 'came into existence.'

ence.

9. τῆς κατακρίσεως and τῆς ἔικαισσύνης are here opposed, as βανίτου and πνεύματος in verses 7, 8. For this use of δικαισσύνη see 1 Cor. i. 30.

 This strange use of the perfect δεδόξασται and δεδοξασμένον is from Exod. xxxiv. 29, 35 (LXX.).

iν τούτψ τῷ μέρει, 'in this instance of Moses.' Compare ix.
3. The neuter gender gives to the sentence the turn of an abstract proposition—'In this particular instance was fulfilled the general rule, that a greater glory throws a lesser glory into the shade.'

shade.'

11. τὸ καταργούμενον is continued in thought from τὴν καταργουμένην in verse 7.

čιὰ δόξης, 'in a state of glory.'
For this variation of ἐν and διά, compare ἐκ and διά, Rom. iii. 30,
διά and ἐν, Rom. v. 10.

12. He now once neumes the subject of his direct intercourse with the Corinthians. "Having such a hope' is the repetition of the words in verse 4, "we have such confidence" (reredigene 2d reasirys Yopate'); but by the intervening vision of the glory of his work, what was there 'confidence' is here filled out into 'hope." ρησία χρώμεθα, ¹³καὶ οὐ καθάπερ ^{}Μωυσῆς ἐτίθει κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τὸ πρόσωπον ^{}αὐτοῦ πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι τοὺς υἰοὺς Ἰσραὴλ ἐἰς τὸ τέλος τοῦ καταργουμένου.

* Μωσής,

b έσυτοῦ.

13 speech, and not as Moses put a veil rupon his face, that the children of Israel could not stedfastly look to the end πολλή παβρησία γρώμεθα, ' we speak openly, and plainly, and confidently,' in opposition to the insincerity with which he was charged by his opponents, and with which they are charged by him, ii. 17. As before in 5-11, the life and spirituality, so here the openness of the Apostleship is contrasted with the darkness of the Law. The imagery of Moses descending from the Mount is still continued; but, whereas the previous contrast was between the tables of stone and the living words of the Spirit, the contrast here is between the veil of Moses and the unveiled face of the Apostle. whole transaction in The καὶ οὐ, i. e. τίθεμεν κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τὸ πρόσωπον ἡμῶν.

wpòς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι, κ. τ. λ. The most natural view of the passage in Exod. xxxiv. 30—36, is that which represents the veil as worn by Moses during his speech to the people, in order to hide the glory of his countenance. In this sense the English version inserts the word 'till' in verse 33, and other versions understand 12.21 in a pluperfect sense—'he had put on the veil.'

But the Hebrew words of Exod. xxxiv. 33, most The LXX. readily agree with the LXX and Vulgate the reli of versions: καὶ ἐπειδη Μοses. κατέπαυσε λαλῶν ... ἐπείδηκεν ἐπειδη κρινικοῦ κόλυμμα.

έπὶ τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ κάλυμμα. 'Impletisque sermonibus posuit velamen super faciem suam." 'And when he had made an end of speaking with them, he put a veil on his face.' With this agree Exod. xxxiv. 34, 35, as translated both by the LXX. and by modern versions, which imply that the veil was not put on till the close of his speaking with the people, when he resumed it until the moment of his again returning to the Divine presence; the Vulgate, however, giving another version, founded apparently on a different reading (DPN for INN, 'with them,' for 'with him') 'sed operiebat ille rursus faciem suam, si quando loquebatur ad eos."

Whether or not the LXX be a correct reading of the exact words of the original, the close resemblance of the words in verses 10 and 16 to the LXX. of Exod. xxxiv. 30, 34, leaves but little doubt that this was the version which furnished the basis

¹⁴ ἀλλ' ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήματα αὐτῶν. ἄχρι γὰρ τῆς σήμερον *ἡμέρας τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τῆ ἀναγνώσει τῆς

· Omit ńućess.

1+of that which 'was vanishing away'. But their 'thoughts were 'hardened. For until this 'very day the same veil remaineth o in the reading of the old 'covenant, 'since its

of the Apostle's allegory. The meaning of that version must be, that the veil was put on, not to conceal the glory, but to conceal the fact that the glory vanished away, as soon as he had ceased to speak to them; being rekindled by the light of the Divine presence, but again fading away when he had ceased to speak the Divine message. To this sense of the transitory character of the glory the frequent repetition of the word καταργούμένος refers, in verses 7, 11, 12, 13, 14. With this also will best agree the explanation of the words πρός το μή άτενίσαι τους υιούς Ίσραήλ είς τὸ τέλος του καταργουμίνου. If the Apostle is supposed to adopt what is now the usual mode of regarding the transaction in Exod. xxxiv., then the sense of these words must be 'in order that the sons of Israel might not gaze on the end of that which is passing away, i. e. on Christ as the fulfilment of the Mosaic Law.' But, in that case, he ascribes directly to Moses an intention which only could be conceived as existing in the order of Providence, and also abruptly introduces the antitype into the type. If, however, it be taken according to the LXX. version, then the sense will be: 'We put no veil on our teaching, as Moses did on the glory of his countenance; we have no fear as he had, that our glory will pass away.' In this manner, ro richer obtains its natural meaning of 'destruction,' which alone suits it when thus connected with row careyouptires, the with row the connected with row careyouptires, the beaper of 'completion' may be appropriate in other passages where, as in Rom. x. 4, the institutions or words have direct reference to the objects which they are desired to fulfil.

 The thought of the veil, which prevented the people from recognising the perishable charactor of the glory of Moses, throws him back on the thought that this veil still continues on their hearts, so as to prevent their recognition of the perishable character of the Law, which not only was represented in the nerson of Moses, but derived from him its usual title (as in Acts xv. 21). And this metaphor was rendered still more appropriate by the fact that in the synagogues the Jews prayed and read with veils upon their heads-the Tallith, or four-cornered white scarf, still seen in the Jewish and Samaritan worship. (See Conybeare and Howson, St. Paul, vol. i. p. 185.)

A similar idea may have been present to the Evangelist's mind in recording the rending of the curtain of the Temple (Matt. xxvii. 51).

άλλά, 'nay, so true is this, παλαιᾶς διαθήκης μένει, μὴ ἀνακαλυπτόμενον "ὅτι ἐν χρι στῷ καταργείται, "ἀλλ' ἐως σήμερον, "ἡνίκα ἀν ἀναγνώ σκηται Μωνσής, κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τὴν καρδίαν αὐτών κείται. ¹⁶ἡνίκα δ' ἀν ἐπιστρέψη πρὸς κύριον, περιαιρείται τὸ

δ τι. ^b ἡνίκα ἀναγινώσκεται Μωσῆς.

15 vanishing away in Christ is not unveiled to them', but unto this day, whenever Moses is read, 'a veil 'lies upon their heart. 16 'But whenever he' shall turn to the Lord, 'He taketh away' that, not their eyes, but their thoughts, were hardened and dulled ' (ἐπωρώθη): see iv. 4. τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης. Nothing more strongly expresses the Apostle's conviction of the extinction of the Jewish system than this expression of the 'Old Covenant,' applied to the Jewish Scriptures within thirty years after the Crucifixion. µ\u00e4 avecdaver\u00fc\u00fcureor \u00f6rr \u00e4r άλλ' ἔως σήμερον, κ. τ. λ.

 This is a resumption and further explanation of άλλ' ἐπωρώθη in verse 14.

16. This verse is based on the LXX. of Exod. xxxiv. 34: ἡνίκα δ' ἃν εἰσεπορεύετο Μυυσῆς ἐναντε Κυρίου λαλεῖν αὐτῷ, περιπρεῖτο τὸ κάλνιμα ἔως τοῦ ἐκπορεύεσθαι. ἡνίκα, 'whenever,' is used when here alone in the New Test., being (like ἐεδόturns to the Lord.)

Exod. xxxiv. 34.

The nominative to ἐπιστρίψη must be 'Moses.' No other nominative case will answer the purpose, 'Israel' being too remote, and ἡ καρδία ('the heart') not sufficiently prominent; and such a nominative is required for περιαιρείται, which, when compared with repopeiro in Exod. xxxiv. 34, must be (not 'is stript off,' but) 'strips off.' In Acts xxvii. 20, περιηρείτο is indeed used passively, and instances to the same effect may be found in classical writers; but in the LXX, amidst numerous instances of the active sense mostly, as here, with regard to dress, instances of its passive sense are very rare. Each clause, beginning with hrica, will then correspond, and the parallel with Exod. xxxiv. 34 will be preserved. Moses is thus taken for the representative, not only of the Old Covenant, but also of the people of Israel, as the Apostle in the next verse identifics himself with all Christians, and as in iii. 23 he had spoken of the differently on his heart or on theirs.

The passage turns on the double meaning of the word Kipion ('the Lord'), which in Exod. xxxiv. 34 is used for Jehovah, and here, as usual, for Christ. 'When Moses in the

Enistle of Christ, as written inκάλυμμα, 17 δ δὲ κύριος τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστιν · οῦ δὲ τὸ 17 the veil. Now the Lord is *the Spirit: and where the serion of his people turns again to Him who his cur Lord down, as he went of old time to Him who was their Lord in Sinai, then he strips off the veil from his face, and from their hearts, and then the perishable nature of the Law will be made manifest in the full bixe of the Divine glory. Comp. Ps. Lxxx. Divine glory. Comp. Ps. Lxxx. Priverpoler 'lying cal tridgarer 'n replement' over cal endrogisthe. Compare Acts ix. 35; 1 Thess. 1, 9, where 'errorsploy is used for conversion to Christianity. 17. ' Ο δὲ κύριος τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστιν. The allegory which has hitherto been confined to Moses and the veil, is now carried a step higher, 'When I speak of Israel turning to the Lord, I speak of their turning from the letter to the Spirit which is behind the letter, even as Moses turned to the Lord on Mount Sinai behind the Law and the veil.' Compare for the form of speech, 'The passover the Christ,' 1 Cor. v. 7: 'The rock (ή πέτρα) was Christ,' 1 Cor. x. 4. The Lord of the old dispensation, whom Moses saw on Sinai, is, in the new dispensation, the Spirit. οῦ δὲ τὸ πνεῦμα κυρίου, έλευ-où ôt rò wreipus cuplou, Realepie. This is to explain subpture vell is taken off, on turning to the Lord. 'If by "the Lord" is meant "the Spirit, 'thas Spirit of being the Opinit of "the Lord" word, i. e. "of Christ," then we word, i. e. "of Christ," then we have the bost assurance that the result must be freedom,—freedom from all obstacles intervening between us and God, the glorious freedom of the sons of God (Rom. viii. 21); the freedom wherewith " Christ has made us free" from the Law and its consequences' (Gal. v. 1, 13). The connexion between the Spirit and freedom lies partly in the general sense of liberty which pervades the word Spirit, both in its etymological and in its derived significations, τὸ πνεῦμα οπου θέλει πνεί (John iii. 8); τὸ πνεύμα διαιρούν . . . καθώς βούλεras (1 Cor. xii. 11); partly in the particular sense in which 'the Spirit' is throughout these chapters opposed to 'the letter,' as the source of life, and energy, and liberty. And the analogous stress laid upon the veil in 1 Cor. xi. 4-16, would lead one to imagine that here, also, the thought of 'freedom' was in part suggested by the removal of the restraint or burden of the veil: in part by the fear which made the Israelites shrink from looking on the face of Moses, unveiled, Exod. xxxiv. 30 (έφοβήθησαν έγγίσας αύτω). Compare Gal. iv. 4, 5, 6: 'God sent forth His Son . . . to redeem them that were under the Law . . . God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father, And still more nearly, Rom. viii. 15: 'Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.'

18. We at last reach the climax which should naturally have followed immediately upon the unfinished sentence at the beginning of the comparison in verso 12; but which, by the intervening digressions, is now diπνεῦμα κυρίου, ἐλευθερία. ¹8ἡμεῖς δὲ πάντες ἀνακεκα Add δειῖ.

18 Spirit of the Lord is, on is liberty. But we all with "unlated to enlarged proportions, such as the additional conflux of images required. ἡμεῖς δὲ πάντες. As Moses had

We all, been made the representative of the whole people of the Jews, so in the parallel to him, the Apostle places nor merely himself, but all believes; the word 'all' (κάντες) being inserted with emphasis, because the plural 'μμτε alone would, according to the frequent use of this Epstale, only indicate himself.

ανακεκαλυμμένω προσώπω. 'We all,' he proceeds to say, 'with 'whether Apostles or unvoiled 'whether Apostles or face.' not, you who are written upon my heart, as well as I who wrote the word of

as I who wrote the word of Christ on your hearts, stand out before the world, not like Moses with a veil to conceal the sadies away of our glory, but with our countenances open and unveiled before God, and open also and unveiled before the world for all to see.

rāν δέξαν κυρίου, 'the glory 'The giory 'The glory the glory of God was Lord'. Moses. 'Here, again, Lord'. Moses. 'Here, again, the phrase 'the Lord', 'the vision of the 'glory' of God (h δέξα μου), to Moses in Ex. xxxiii. 19—22 mmediately before the story of the veil in xxxiv. 30, 34, is transferred to the vision of Christ englory of Christ' is meant the glory, the greatness, the Divine plory, the greatness, the Divine excellence, above all, the truth, which made His life on earth which grade His life on earth the light of the world, the Light of light, 'Comp. iv. 4; and also John i. 14, 17, 'we beheld His glorg; 'John ii. 11, 'this did Jesus, and manifestic forth His glorg; 'John xell', 'glorify me with the glorg which I had with Thee before the world was.'

curs nowhere besides either in the New Testament or the LXX.

The same of carostylics in the active is, to show in a mirror.

The same of carostylics in the middle is, therefore, properly, 'to look at oneself in a mirror.' See Westein ad loc.) This seams being plainly inapposite here, there remain two possible meanings, both of which the word would bear: (1) 'beholding' Behald as in a mirror', or, 'see ad-

as in a mirror, or, ing as in a mirror. Of this there is one example in Philo, Leg.

Alleg. p. 10^f, where Moses, in a rhetorical paraphrase of the speech in this very same Exod. Acxidii. 18, in represented as saying: µpôl ipparveblip, µpôl carropparaphr it ablay not jud be not possible in the control of the control of the presence of God, behold he glory of Christ. But though in itself the sense is admissible, the context is much against the carropric purson cannot be used of beholding 's miply, because in λυμμένω προσώπω την δόξαν κυρίου κατοπτριζόμενοι, veiled face reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, that case the Apostle must have used the word arevizu, as already twice before, in verses 7, 13. Nor would the image of the mirror, if we consider the stress laid upon it in 1 Cor. xiii. 12. be altogether merged here. And if it were thus taken to mean beholding not face to face, but in a mirror,' it runs counter to the general spirit of the passage, which is intended to express, not a distant, but an intimate relation with God, more intimate even than the vision of Mores; to which, as an exhibition only of the outward attributes of God (Exod. xxxiii. 19, 20, xxxiv. 6, 7), this word might, as by Philo, be not improperly applied. Christ is spoken of as the 'image' or 'likenesa' (εἰκών, iv, 4; Col. i. 15), 'the effulgence' (ἀπαύγασμα, Heb. i. 3); but still in Him we see all the Divine perfections, 'we beheld (ἐθεασάμεθα) His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father. John i. 14. Still less would there be any such distinction drawn in this passage, where Christ and God are studiously blended in one under the common name of κύριος (' the Lord'). We come, therefore, to the

We come, therefore, to the "Raffect- on 2" of "reflecting as in a mirror." It is ing as in a mirror." It is ing as in a mirror. It is only the second of the

this is far-fetched, and though there is no actual instance of the sense of 'reflecting,' yet the fact that a Greek writer like Chrysostom understood it here in that sense, shows that there was in his time nothing in the usage of the word to make it impossible. And this sense is undoubtedly the one most agreeable to the context. The point of contrast between the Christian dispensation as represented in himself and the Jewish dispensation as represented in Moses or his opponents, is not so much the greater clearness of knowledge as the greater openness of dealing and teaching exhibited by Christians. The veil is described as concealing not the light, but the evanescence of the light; and, in like manner, the removal of the veil is described as disclosing not higher revelations, but greater liberty. Christians 'having, like Moses, received in their lives the reflected glory of the Divine presence, as Moses received it on his countenance, are unlike Moses in that they have no fear, such as his, of its vanishing away, but are confident of its continuing to shine in them with increasing lustre. In this confidence they present themselves without veil or disguise, inviting instead of deprecating inquiry, with nothing to hold back or conceal from the eager gaze of the most suspicious or the most curious.' For the general view that the Christian's life is the reflex of the glory of Christ and of God, compare 1 Cor. xi. 7: 'The man ought not to veil (κατακαλύπτειν) τὴν αὐτὴν εἰκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the "Lord the Spirit".

his head, fornsmuch as he is the image and glory of God (where there is the same thought of the voil): and also the verses immediately following the present passage, in iv. 4, 6, where all the expressions imply (not the contemplation of the Divine glory by man, so much as) the influx of the Divine glory into the heart of man.

την αθτην είκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα. The lustre of 'Transthe Christian light will formed (unlike that of Moses) likeness; increase rather than 'We are diminish. transfigured,' i. e. (as is implied by the present tense) 'we are continually undergoing a transformation in the same likeness as that which we reflect,' i. e. 'the likeness of Christ.' Compare συμμόρφους τῆς εἰκόνος τοῦ υίου αύτου, Rom. viii. 29; 'As we have borne the image (elsora) of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly,' 1 Cor. xv. 49. The words with which Dr. Arnold closed his last lecture on the New Testament were, in commenting on the parallel passage, 1 John iii. 2: 'We know that when he shall appear. we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.' 'Yes,' he added with marked fervency, the mere contemplation of Christ shall transform us into His likeness." (Arnold's Life, p. 615.) The word μεταμορφούσθε is used in Rom. xii. 2, for 'a transformation,' in the sense with which we are familiar from the 'Metamorphoses' of Ovid; in this place it has the milder meaning which it bears in Matt. xvii. 2, where it is used for the 'Transfiguration'. The construction seems to bo μεταμοσφώμεθα δετε την αίτη κατιρούς είνειος γενένθαι. It might posiείνειος γενένθαι. It might posibly, however, be την αίτην, opposed to πάντες... 'we all, however various in character originally, are transformed into the some character.

άπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν. This is one of the numerous from glory expressions which are into glory; to be found in St. Paul to indicate, not so much a progression, as a completeness and entireness in the subject of which he is speaking. See note on ii. 16, έκ θανάτου εἰς θάνατον. 'The glory which is reflected ends not in extinction, like that of Moses, but continues and continues still as far as human thought can reach.' 'Our transformation begins and ends in glory.' καθάπερ ἀπὸ κυρίου πνεύματος.

'Our glory is not tran- 'from the sitory, but perpetual, Lord the coming as it does from Spirit." the Lord the Spirit.' and must here be 'from,' both because it has just before been used in that sense in and coenc, and also, because the word μεταμορφούμεθα suggests not so much the idea of an agent by whom the transformation takes place, as the source from which the light proceeds. Eupiou mreimaroc is an expression so harsh and unusual, that any explanation of it must be equally so. But the identification of o καθάπερ ἀπὸ κυρίου πνεύματος. ΙΥ. ¹διὰ τοῦτο, ἔχοντες τὴν διακονίαν ταύτην καθὼς ἦλεήθημεν, οὐκ *ἐγκακοῦμεν, · desarobusy.

IV. Therefore, rhaving this ministry as we received mercy, κύριος with τὸ πνεῦμα, in verse 17, and the omission of the article here, are in favour of considering it as, in a certain sense, a proper name framed for the occasion, to express the thought that, as He from whom the glory proceeds is the Spirit of life and freedom, therefore extinction and concealment are henceforth impossible. This compound substantive (for such it seems to be) may be compared to such Hebrew phrases of the LXX. as κύριος θεός, Deut. iii. 24 ; κύριος βασιλεύς, Deut. ix. 26: κύριος κύριος, Ps. exl. 8; κύριος Σαβαώθ, 1 Sam. xv. 2.

'The new name, the new epithet by which the Lord must be known is Spirit.' IV. 1. He now resumes the thread of the general argument, which he had twice taken up in iii. 4 and 12; but with the difference that from the confidence which he possesses in the great ness of his task, he now draws a new conclusion, not 'we use great plainness of speech,' as in iii. 12, but 'we faint not;' a conclusion which, as it is more directly an answer to the original question, 'who is sufficient for these things?' in ii. 16, so is it the basis of the ensuing chapters, iv. 7-v. 10. But, with one of the inversions peculiar to this Epistle, he has hardly entered on this new topic before he drops it again. The charge of insincerity, which had occasioned the digression, iii, 1-18, still lingers in his recollection, and accordingly he turns round upon it, as if to give it one parting blow before he finally dismisses it from his mind. Hence iv. 2-6 are still closely connected with iii. 1-18, whilst the new subject begun in verse 1 is not resumed till verse 7, where it is expanded in all its or close of the southern commence of the southern commenced here does not occur till verse 16, where the same words are repeated: 'for this cause we faint not.'

διά τοῦτο refers to the substance of the preceding chapter, as involved in the words ξχοντες τὴν διακονίαν ταύτην. For a similar construction compare Rom. ii. I.

έχοντες την ξιακονίαν ταύτην takes up the thread from έχοντες τοιαύτην έλειδα in iii. 12. διακονίαν, 'takk' or 'service' (referring to iii. 6-9);

'the service of the Spirit, the acting as the instrument of the Spirit,' either as in iii. 3, like the scribe who writes its dictates on the heart, or, as in iii. 18, like Moses who reflects its glory on the countenance.

cathing βλείθημεν, to be taken with ξχοντες ε. τ. λ. 'having this task, as we have been thought worthy of it.' Compare 1 Covin. 25, γνώρην δὲ διδωρι, ὡς ἡλεημένος ὑτο ευρίου πιστός είναι. ἐγκακοῦμεν, 'we are weary, desponding, Łuke xviii.
1; Gal. vi. 9. The word 'γκακοῦν.

as regards the New Test occurs only in St. Paul and St. Luke. ² ἀλλὰ ἀπειπάμεθα τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχύνης, μὴ περιπατοῦντες ἐν πανουργία, μηδὲ δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τῆ φανερώσει τῆς ἀληθείας *συνιστάντες

* συνιστώντες.

2 we faint not, but we "renounced the hidden things of "shame, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by "the manifestation of the truth com-

2. 'Supported by the consciousness of the greatness of our mission, we faint not; but, if so, it is because we trust that we come before you with clean hands and pure consciences; the openness of which I have just been speaking (iii. 1—18) is the secret of our strength.' (Compare ii. 17; I Thess. ii. 3.

τα κρυπτα τῆς αἰσχύνης, 'the hidden things of shame,' i. e. 'the secrets of which men are ashamed to speak.' The contrast here would lead us to supnose that he is speaking of dishonesty. Yet the words themselves, especially when compared with it arabapsiac in 1 Thess. ii. 3, suggest the notion of sins of sensuality. (Compare Eph. v. 12: τὰ κρυφή γενόμενα ὑπ' αὐτῶν αλσχρόν έστι καλ λέγειν.) If 80, it alludes to some practice of his opponents, or to some charge against himself, to us unknown, and receiving no light from the context. μή περιπατούντες έν πανουργέα = μη ἐκ πλάνης, 1 Thess. ii. 3.

μη δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ =μη ἐκ δόλου, in 1 Thess. ii. 3.
See οὐ καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 17.

τη φανερώσει της άληθείας. This 'manifestation of the truth' applies both to the Apostle's conduct (as in ii. 17) and teaching (as in iii. 12), and also to the conduct of his converts (as in iii. 2, 3: ἀναγινωσκομένη ὑπὸ πάντων ἀνθρώπων. φαιερούμενοι ὅτι ἐστὰ ἐπιστολή, κ. τ. λ.).

συνιστάντες έαυτούς: i. e. 'This is our true commendation,' as in iii. 1. πρός πάσαν συνείδησιν άνθρώπων is nearly the same as πρός συνείδησιν πάντων άνθρώπων, the expression arising in order to bring out more strongly the feeling that in this, as in other parts of his conduct; he was 'all things to all men.' 'We commend ourselves, not to this or that individual, but to all. Some, indeed. there are, between whom and us there is a veil, as in the case of Moses and the Jewish people; but these are they to whom our mission is not a mission of life, but of death (as in ii, 16); the veil is not in my teaching, but on their hearts (as in iii. 14), and so they cannot receive the rays of the glory of Christ.' Compare vi. 12: 'Ye are not straitened in us, but ye are straitened in your own hearts.' 'Our Gospel' (τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν) is the good tidings which we preach, 4-6. The thought of ii. 16 is here brought out with a more than usual severity; perhaps, because, as in iii. 14, he was thinking of Judaizing teachers, In connexion with this dark view he introduces the 'The God singular expression 'the God of this world' (for Satan), so as to express world.' έωτοιδις πρός πάσαν συνείδησεν άνθρώπων ένώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ. ³εὶ δὲ καὶ ἔστεν κεκαλυμμένον τὸ εὐαγγόλιον ήμων, ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένος ἐστὶν κεκαλυμμένος, ἐν οῖς ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου ἐτψόλωστεν τὰ νοήματα τῶν ἀπίστων εἰς τὸ μὴ αἰγάσαι. τὸν φωτισμὸν τοῦ εἰαγγελίου τῆς δόξης τοῦ χριστοῦ, ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν τοῦ θεοῦ mending ourselves to "every conscience of men' in the sight of God. But if our gospel be "veiled, it is "veiled to them that "perish, in whom the god of this "age blinded the "thoughts of those who believe not lest the light of the "gospel of the glory" of Christ, who is the image of God, in the strongest manner the contrast between Satan as the author of all darkness, and Christ and God as the authors of all light. The nearest approaches to it are Eph. ii. 12, The prince (αρχων) of the power of the air; Eph. vi. 12, 'The rulers of the darkness of this world;' and John xii. 31, xiv. 30, 'the prince of this world.' These very words are applied to Satan by the Rabbis, 'The true God is the first God, but Samael is the second God.' (See Wetstein, ad loc.; and Eisenmenger, Ent. Judenthum, i. p. 827.) It is as if he said, 'There are some so entirely lost to a sense of right, that the adversary of good is to them what he is called in the Rabbinical language, their God.' Comp. Phil. iii, 19, 'whose God is their belly.

· Add abrois,

Irenzus (Adv. Hzr. iii 7), in order to avoid a Gnostic inference from the passage, and after him, Origen, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Augustine, Œcumenius, Theodoret, and Theophylact, by a violent inversion of the words, connect row alwaye robrow with rà vojuara, so as to make the sense, 'in whom God blinded the thoughts of this world in the unbelieving."

έτύφλωσεν τὰ νοήματα = ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήματα in iii, 14.

τῶν ἀκίστων = ῶστε ἀκίστους εἶναι. αὐγάσαι, 'shine with radiant lustre.'

riche voi Seo is inserted in order to trace the source of the light of Christ up to God himself. (Comp. i. 21; 1 Cor. iii. 23, xi. 3, xv. 24, 28.) 'Light-streams from Christ, as the likenses of God; for He who shone in our hearts on as to light them up with the glory which dwells in the face of Christ, is the same as He who said, "Let there be light."

λάμψει (A.B¹.), 'shall shine,' for λάμψαι (C. D³. E. F. G. J. K.), 'to shine,' makes it more lively.

iν προσώπω χριστοῦ might favour the interpretation which makes iii. 18 to be the contemplation of God's glory in Christ, and not the reflection. But the phrase is too general to require this. (See ii. 10.)

The 5th verse is occasioned by the stress laid on the person of Christ in verse 4. 'I say, "the glory of Christ;" for it is He, and (οἱ γὰρ ἐαυτοὺς κηρόσσομεν ἀλλὰ "Τησοῦν χριστὸν κύριον, ἐαυτοὺς δὲ δούλους ὑμῶν διὰ 'Τησοῦν), "ὅτι ὁ θοὰς ὁ εἰπὰν 'Ἐκ σκότους φὰς 'λαμψει, δὲ ἐλαμψεν ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν πρὸς φωτισμὸν τῆς γνώσεως τῆς δύξης ¨αὐτοῦ ἐν προσώπος "γριστοῦ.

* Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. * λάμψαι. * τοῦ Βεοῦ, 4 Add Ἰησοῦ, a should "blaze upon them (for we preach not ourselves but "A feau Christ' the Lord, and ourselves your "slavely for 6 Jews aske), for "that God who "said "the light shall shine out of darkness," "is He who shined' in our hearts, togethe light of the knowledge of "His glory in the face of "Christ."

not ourselves, that we declare to you. Jesus is your master (κόμου), we are your slaves (δούλουε); 'in which there seems a double allusion: (1) to the charge of exercising despotic control over them (comp. οὐ κοριεύομεν in i. 21); (2) to the charge of commending himself (compare ἐαυτοὺς συνιστάνειν, iii. 1).

"Inσούν χριστόν κύριον, 'we preach not ourselves, but Jesus Christ whom we acknowledge as "The Lord." Compare 1 Cor. xii. 3, 'No man can say, Κύριος 'Ιπσοῦς.'

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. II. 16-IV. 6.

Such are our responsibilities. And who is sufficient to meet them? We have, at least, this sufficiency that, unlike our adversaries, unlike the character which they impute to us, our conduct is transparently sincere. And this sufficiency, like all our sufficiency, comes not from men; not like that of our adversaries. from commendatory epistles; but from God, and from the work which God has enabled us to accomplish. You, the Corinthian Church, are the commendatory Epistle; your names, your interests are written in our hearts; our deeds, Christ's work through us, are written in your lives. He is the author of this joint Epistle, which we bear as His messengers in our hearts, which we wrote as His scribes on your lives. And this is an Epistle written, not with perishable ink, but with the Finger, the Spirit, of God, who lives for ever; not like the old commandments which the Finger of God wrote on tables of stone, but written on the tender tablets of your human hearts. For this is the characteristic, not only of our conduct, but of the dispensation under which we act. The covenant which we serve is not like that which our adversaries serve, an old and decaying, but a new covenant; a covenant written not once for all in sacred letters, which have no power to speak or move, but in a living and moving atmosphere of Spirit which, by its very nature, gives new life and energy to all connected with it, as surely as the mere letter and writing of the Mosaic Law brought with it sin and death. Yet even that service of the old covenant, even at the very moment when this attribute of deadness was most plainly shown, was glorious : even at the moment that Moses brought down from Sinai the ten stern commands, engraved mechanically on hard stones, in lifeless characters, the glory on his face, though it was to vanish in a few moments, was so bright that the Israelites could not gaze upon it. How much more glorious, then, is our service which relates, not to lifeless letters, but to a life-giving Spirit; not to hard condemnation. but to perfect restoration, which is not to vanish away, but to last for ever.

With such a hope of our sufficiency as this gives, a sufficiency which comes direct from God through our communion with Christ, we cannot but be as sincere and open in our dealings with you, as the dispensation of which we are the instruments is itself sincere and open. In the Jewish dispensation, to which our adversaries cleave, and to which their conduct may be likened, you have just been reminded how Moses put a veil upon his face, at the close of his discourse, that the Israelites might not continue their gaze up to the moment when the glory should fade away. In like manner when, at this day, Moses is read to them in the synagogues, a veil, like the veil which they actually wear in the synagogue service, lies upon their hearts : they cannot see that the glory of the law which is read to them is to vanish away in Christ. But there is another and brighter side to the story in the Book of Exodus. which also may have its counterpart in the present time. We are told that, when Moses turned back to the presence of the Lord on the mountain, he stripped the veil from off his face, and again held undivided communion with the Lord. What thus took place in the case of Moses, will again take place with the people of Moses, when they also turn to the Lord. And 'the Lord' of Mount Sinai means, in this case, 'the Spirit,' the life-giving Spirit which dwells behind the written characters of the Mosaic Law, and which confers the freedom belonging of necessity to the Spirit and all its operations; and the veil being thus taken away from our faces, we all, you as well as we. shall receive the full reflection of that Divine alory which will transform us into a brighter and still brighter likeness of the Divine presence, coming from the Lord, who is also the Spirit, working, not on tables of stone, but on our spirits. Therefore we have nothing to conceal; our only commendation is that we disclose ourselves as if in the sight of God for every one to examine. If there be any veil still remaining between us and you, it is on your side, not on ours; it is a veil interposed by the God of this dark and blind and unbelieving world, to whom some surrender themselves-not by the true God, who is represented faithfully to you in our Lord and Master Jesus, whose slaves we are, and to whom alone, not to ourselves, do we wish to subject your minds. He is the true God, who, at the beginning, said, ' Let there be light;' and who now pours into your hearts the full blaze of His glory from the face of Jesus Christ.

THE whole argument of this passage is so interwoven with personal allusions, and with illustrations from a particular interpretation of a single passage in the Old Testament, that there is a difficulty in deducing any general truth from the directly. But the indirect conclusions from it are important.

I. There is no other passage in which freedom, and openness, and absence of mystery and concealment, are Freedom so strongly put forth as characteristic of Christianity. and open-The reserve and stiffness, which the Apostle here ness of Christiascribes to the Mosaic covenant, was exemplified anity. to a still greater degree in the other religions of antiquity, in the priestly castes of India and Egypt, in the mysteries of Greece and Rome. In fact, the original excellence of the Mosaic dispensation had, in a great measure, consisted in the difference which existed on this point between itself and Pagan systems, namely, absence of any hidden ritual or doctrine. Still, the importance that attached to the sacred books in which the revelation was contained, partly from the necessity of the case, partly from the exaggerated veneration with which they were regarded by the later age of Judaism, tended gradually in this respect to assimilate the Jewish system to the old religions; and it is the change from this spirit which Christianity effected, and of which this Chapter is one of the most striking manifestations. To it we owe, even in words, the contrast between 'the letter' and 'the Spirit,' which is now so familiar that few remember the source whence it comes; even after the passage was written its full purport was long overlooked. The expansiveness, the comprehensiveness, the free inquiry, the truth-seeking spirit of the modern, as distinguished from the ancient world, is thus not only sanctioned but originated by the most authentic documents of Christianity. There may have been much, in the subsequent history of the Church, at variance with the spirit of this Chapter. But since it was written, and so long as its spirit is any way carried out, there never have been, and there never will be in Christendom, any institutions like the Eleusinian mysteries, like the Egyptian castes, or like the Jewish Rabbinical schools of the ages before and after the Christian era.1

II. The Apostle further asserts his conviction that this new life and freedom were to be found in the contem- Christ the plation of Jesus Christ. Whether he chiefly pointed Example to the example, the death, or the life beyond death, of Freedom. he does not here explain. But it is clear, first, that he regarded Him as in the fullest sense the representative of God to man; and also, that by means of that representation, he considered the free, unrestrained spiritual character of the Gospel to be effectually and for ever guaranteed. And on turning to the definite and strongly marked outlines of the character of Christ's life and teaching as laid down in the four Gospels, a picture is there exhibited which at once accounts for the Apostle's assertions. Not only does it present to us an image of holiness and wisdom, which justifies St. Paul's transference of the language of the Old Testament to this new object of religious veneration, but it exhibits in numerous instances, that sacrifice of form to spirit, that encouragement of freedom and openness and sincerity, which St. Paul here identifies with the name and presence of Christ.

¹ Chrysostom and most of the Greek Fathers take the words 'the the uselessness of the historical sense letter killeth' to refer to the capital of Scripture.

III. It may be worth while to go through the various images which the Apostle has called up in the preceding section. First, there is the commendatory Epistle of of images. the Corinthian Church, written on his heart. Next, the same Epistle written on their hearts and lives, read and reread by the wayfarers to and fro, through the thoroughfare of Greece. Thirdly, the contrast between this Epistle, written on the tender human feelings, on the vibrations of the wind, by the breath of the Spirit, carrying its tidings backwards and forwards, whithersoever it will, with no limits of time or space, like the sweep of the wind on the Æolian harp, like an electric spark of light,-and the Ten Commandments, graven in the granite blocks of Sinai, hard, speechless, lifeless. Fourthly, there rises into view the figure of Moses, as he is known to us in the statue of Michael Angelo, the light streaming from his face, yet growing dim and dark as a greater glory of another revelation rises behind it. Fifthly, the same figure veiled, as the light beneath the veil dies away, and shade rests upon the scene; and there rises around him a multiplication of that figure, the Jews in their synagogues veiled, as the Book of the Law is read before them. Sixthly, the same figure of Moses once more, but now unveiled as he turns again to Mount Sinai and uncovers his face to rekindle its glory in the Divine presence; and now again, the same figure multiplied in the Apostle and the Corinthian congregation following him, all with faces unveiled, and upturned towards the light of Christ's presence. the glory streaming into their faces with greater and greater brightness, as if borne in upon them by the Spirit or breath of light from that Divine countenance, till they are transfigured into a blaze of splendour like unto it.

THE DIFFICULTIES AND SUPPORTS OF HIS APOSTOLICAL DUTIES. Chap. IV. 7-V. 10.

7 Εχομεν δε τὸν θησαυρὸν τοῦτον ἐν ὀστρακίνοις σκεύεσιν, ίνα ή ύπερβολή της δυνάμεως ή του θεου και μή But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us,

In enlarging on the greatness of his task-the point from which he started in ii. 16,-he insensibly passes to the support thence derived in the difficulties which he experienced in carrying it on. 'We faint not,' is the key of this passage, on which he had already touched in iv. 1, and to which he returns again, as the conclusion of the whole, in verse 16, first dwelling at length on the greatness of the trials which would, but for this hope, have caused him to be faint-hearted. Here, as in the more elaborate passage, xi, 23-xii. 10, he may be induced to enlarge upon them, partly with a view of contrasting his own labours with the inaction of his adversaries, partly with the view of showing that, in the troubles which his adversaries regarded as derogatory to his Apostolical authority, God had a purpose to answer by manifesting forth His power in the Apostle's weakness. But, on the whole, there is less of polemical argument, and more of the natural outpouring of his own feelings in this section, than in most other parts of the Epistle.

 δέ expresses the contrast to the foregoing strain of exultation. τον θησαυρόν τούτον έν όστρακίνοις σκεύεσιν. This 'Treasure in earthen vessels."

figure is taken apparently from the custom of placing gold and silver in earthenware jars, as was the practice of the Persian kings, described in Herodot. iii. 96. Compare also the Rabbinical story given by Wetstein, of the reply of Rabbi Joshua to a daughter of the emperor, who, on taunting him with his mean appearance, was referred by him to the earthenware vessels in which her father kept his wines; and when, at her request, the wines had been shifted to silver vessels and there turned sour, was tannted by the Rabbi with the observation that the humblest vessels best contained the highest wisdom. The same figure also occurs in later classical authors. Artemidorus (vi. 25) indicates death by the phrase re εἶναι ἐν ὀστρακίνω σκεύει. Comp. 2 Tim. ii. 20, where 'wooden and earthenware (οστράκινα) vessels ' are contrasted with 'gold and silver.

The expression σκεύος ('vessel') is frequently used, as it it had almost ceased to have a metaphorical meaning, for 'the human body.' Compare 'vessels of wrath and mercy' (Rom. ix. 22, 23); 'the weaker vessel' (1 Pet. iii. 7); 'his own vessel' (1 Thess. iv. 4); 'a vessel unto honour' (2 Tim. ii. 21). Hence it was natural to bring out this latent metaphor by adding to it the epithet 2 earthenware.'

ίνα ή υπερβολή της δυνάμεως ή έξ ήμῶν, ⁸ἐν παυτὶ θλιβόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐ στενοχωρούμενοι, ἀπορούμενοι ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐξαπορούμενοι, ⁸διωκόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγκαταλειπόμενοι, καταβαλλόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀπολλύμενοι, ¹⁰ πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσων τοῦ "Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι πε-

* τοθ κυρίου Ίτητοῦ.

stroubled on every side yet not distressed, perplexed but 9 not in despair, persecuted but not forsaken, cast down 10 but not "perishing, always bearing about in the body the dying of ⁶⁰ Jesus, that the life also of Jesus 'may be made row Stow. The reason here given is the same as that in xii. 9. The order of the words invites us to take ħ ὑπερβολὴ with τῆς ὑπτρμεν, the extraordinary power, as in Joseph Ant. I. xiii. 4; II. ii. 1. Comp. vi. 7, 'by the power of God,' and 1 Cor. ii. 5, 'not in the wisdom man, but in the power of God.'

έν παντί, 'in every direction.' Compare xi. 6, and 1 Cor. i. 5.

9λιβόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐ στενοχωρούμενοι, 'pressed for room but stillhaving room.' For this sense of<math>9λίβω compare i. 6, vii. 5; of στενοχωρείσθαι, vi. 4, 12. $\frac{1}{4}$ πορούμενοι άλλ' οἰχ ἐξαπορού-

 $\mu\nu\nu\sigma$, 'doubting, but not despairing' (such is the sense of the words elsewher; John Xiii. 22; Gal. iv. 20; Acts XXV. 20, and 2 Cor. i. 8); but here, as in the case of σκείσε and $3\lambda_i\beta_{\mu\mu\nu\sigma}$, the metaphor is more fully drawn out,—'losing our way, yet not entirely,'—'bewildered, but not benighted.'

 διωτόμενοι dλλ' οὐε ἐγκαταλιεπόμενοι. Here, again, the meaning of διωτεσθαι and ἐγκαταλείπεσθαι, which in later Greek had come to mean merely 'persecuted' and 'forsaken,' is brought out according to the original signification. 'Pursued in our flight, but not left behind as a prey to our pursuers.' Compare Herod. viii. 59: οἱ δέ γε έγκαταλειπόμενοι οὐ στεφανεῦνται.

caraβaλλόμενοι, 'struck down, yet not perishing.' The phrase is used chiefly for being thrown in wrestling, as in Plutreih, Pericl. 8 (in the famous speech of the orator Thucydides about Pericles); but also for being struck by a dart, Xen. Cyr. i. 3, 14.

10. For this enumeration of contrasts, the mind and spirit always rising above the outward pressure of distress, compare the character of the Athenian people in Thuyd. i. 70. It is wound up with the contrast between death and life,—'we are dead, and yet we live, because even in life we are dead.'

For the idea of the Apostle's sufferings as a continuation of the sufferings of Christ, see i. 8. For his 'perpetual death,' compare xi. 23, 'in death oft;' and 1 Cor. xv. 31, 'I die daily.'

riν νέερωσεν is not 'dying' (rô ೨νήσκεν), nor 'death' (9άνατος), but 'deadness;' the 'mortification,' 'paralysation' of death, as in the phrase 'the deadness (νέερωσεν) of Sarah's womb,' Rom. iv. 19 (comp. Heb. ριφέροντες, ινα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι ἡμῶν φανερωθὴ· Ἰαἰ γὰρ ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες εἰς θάνατον παραδιδόμεθα διὰ Ἰησοῦν, τὸν καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ φανερωθὴ ἐν τῆ θνητῆ σαρκὶ ἡμῶν. 12 ὧστε ὁ * θάνα-

Add μέν.

11 manifest in our body: for we who live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus may 12 be made manifest in our mortal flesh. So then death

xi. 12); and 'mort'fy (νεκρώσαν) your members' (Col. iii. 5). The word occurs elsewhere only once, in a poem of the 4th century, published under the name of Astrampsychus: νεκρούς όρων νέκρωστο τέκες πραγμάτων.

It is as if he had said, 'we are living corpess'. It is a continual 'Descent from the Cross'. We bear with us wherever we go the burden of the dead body;' is γν̄ ψωμαντί implying that is in himself that the deadly pallor and torpor is to be seen; χτιρεψέρωντες pointing rather to the weight of the dead corpes, which like Joseph and Nicodemus, he carries with him.

ΐνα καὶ ἡ ζωή, 'in order that the life as well as (kui) the death may appear.' By the 'life,' he means not merely 'the outward physical life,' nor yet merely the life on earth,' but the lifegiving power, moral and spiritual, which Christ possessed both on earth and beyond the grave. Compare Rom. v. 10. 'we shall be saved by His life: John xiv. 19, 'because I live. ye shall live also.' Their deliverance from danger and death. and their spiritual power and life, was to be a proof to the world that Christ was still living.

 The same union of the two ideas of physical and moral life is continued in the phrase, 'we who are alive '(hµsīc ei ⟨ωντε⟩. 'We, living as we are, with our life sustained by Christ, are yet given over to death.' hµsīc is emphatic; partly from its connexion with oi ⟨ωντε, as, in I Thess. iv. 15. we the living laready dead; partly from the contrast with the Corinbians, expressed in verse 12, 'see die that you may live.'

arrore is 'at any conceivable time; ' aei is ' continuously through all time.'

δια Ίησοῦν, 'for the sake of Jesus.' This makes it clear that he is speaking of sufferings for the sake of the Gospel.

ἐν τῷ Ͽτητῷ σαρκί, 'in our literal mortal bodies' (compare Rom. vi. 12, viii. 11); 'not merely in our outward life (ἐν τῷ σώματι), but in this my bodily frame, Christ's power will be shown.'

12. Up to this point he has dwelt on the consolatory fact that, though he was exposed to danger and death, the power of Christ always restored him to life. A new thought now comes across this argument (as in i. 4—11); namely, that his sufferings were for the good of his Corinities which they enjoyed through him, was a pledge that he should hereafter share in that same life.

'Death,' as before, is physical τος ἐν ἡμῶν ἐνεργεῖται, ἡ δὲ ζωὴ ἐν ὑμῶν. 13 ἔχουτες δὲ τὸ αὐτὸ πνεῦμα τῆς πίστεως, κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένου Ἐπίστευσα^{*}, διὸ ἐλάλησα, καὶ ἡμεῖς πιστεύομεν, διὸ καὶ λαλοῦμεν, ¹ἐξὸδτες ὅτι ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν κύριον Ἰησοῦν καὶ

* Note. MS. A. is deficient between exformora] and [et euov, xii. 6.

is worketh in us, but life in you. "But having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written 'I believed, and therefore "I spake," see also believe, and therefore speak, is knowing that He who raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise death; 'life,' as before, is both physical and spiritual. ἐνεργεῖται, 'is active.' Comp.

for the sense 1 Cor. iv. 8—10.

connected with the preceding clause. But though there is this contrast between our death and your life, yetaill we go on confidently with our work, trusting that in your life we shall share, which will be the property of faith as the Palmirs, which suits better the recurrence of the word frierween in the quotation, but furnishes an awkward to the property of the p of the word lesiencese in the quotation, but furnishes an selvant construction. Or (3) with the construction. Or (3) with the Corribtians; i which gives an easy construction, and sgress with the union between himself and them, expressed in verses 13 and 14, but is without any point of construction with the words of of connection with the words of of connection with the words of output of the construction from the theory of construction from it. I. It should have been either figurer or writing a figure of the construction of the control of the control of the construction of the control of the

The quotation is from Ps. exvi.

10 (LXX. exv. 1), and was probably suggested by the context of the previous verses: 'Thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eves from tears, and my feet from falling. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living. I believed, and there-fore have I spoken.' The Apostle connects it with his argument by using the words of the Psalmist in the sense which applied best to his own case. έπίστευσα, which, in the Psalm, seems to be, 'I trusted that God would save me,' is here used more precisely for 'I trusted in the unseen future goodness of God;' as in v. 7, 'we walk by faith, not by sight. ἐλάλησα, which in the Psalm seems to refer to the speech of the Psalmist following, is here used for the preaching and teaching as of the Apostle; as in ii. 17; I Cor. iii. 1, xii. 3, xiii. 1, xiv. 2, 34, 35. According to the meaning of ro abro, sai hueic may be either. ' we as well as the Psalmist,' or 'we as well as you.'

14. εἰδότες ὑμῖν. For the general sense see Rom. viii.
11. For this sense of εἰδότες, 'being convinced,' see Rom. v. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 58. The passage forms an exception to the grengral forms an exception to the grengral ήμας "σὺν Ἰησοῦ ἐγερεῖ καὶ παραστήσει σὺν ὑμῖν. 13-τὰ γὰρ πάντα δι ὑμας, Για ή χάρις πλεονάσασα διὰ τῶν πλειόνων τὴν εὐχαριστίαν περισσεύση εἰς τὴν δόξαν τοῦ θεοῦ. 18-διὸ οἰκ ἐγκακοῦμεν, ἀλλ' ἐι καὶ ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρω-

* διὰ Ἰησοῦ,

up us also 'with Jesus and shall present us with you.

15 For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace may 'on account of' the thanksgiving of 'the many 'abound

16 to the glory of God. For which cause we faint not, but expectation of the Apostle (i. 13, 14; 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52; i. 7, 8; 1 Thess. iv. 15), that he and his converts should live till the time of the Lord's coming—an exception caused, probably, by the strong anticipation of death from which (i. 8) he had but just recovered.

σὺν Ἰησοῦ is not necessarily 'in company with,' but 'sharing His condition.' Comp. xiii. 4.

παραστήσει σὺν ὑμῖν, 'will make us share the light which you even now seem to enjoy, and will present us both to Christ.' Compare 1 Thess. iv. 17.

15. τὰ γὰρ πάντα δι' ὑμᾶς,
'He will present us with you;
for all things, whether life or death, or things present or things to come (comp. 1 Cor. iii. 22)

nre for you."

The h Xper in order that God's goodness, which, through the prayers of the greater part of You. has become greater to of You.

The you has been greater to prove the greater than the better that the provent of the greater than the better than the greater than the officer tha

The construction requires that περισσεύη should be transitive (as in ix. 8; 1 Thess. iii. 12; Eph. i. 8).

πλιονάσασα is used with a reference to δια τῶν πλιείνων and εὐχαριστίαν to χάρις, 'that more may produce more,' that grace may produce gratitude.' Comp. Phil. i. 19, 'I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer. 16. He now resumes the assertion of his determination to bear up against his trials, which he had begun to unfold in iv. 1: and, as in the preceding verses (10-15), he had gradually passed from his daily troubles to the consideration of death itself, so here he passes gradually from the daily dissolution of his outward frame by long hardships and infirmities, to its total dissolution by death (iv. 16-18, v. 1-10). Every vestige of selfdefence or attack vanishes, and we have in this passage the fullest expression of the Apostle's individual hopes and fears with regard to the future world.

The contrast here drawn between the 'outward' and 'the inner man,' though illustrated by the contrast in Rom. vii. 22 between the 'law of the memπος διαφθείρεται, άλλ' ὁ ἔσω * ημών ἀνακαινοῖται ήμέρο, καὶ ἡμέρα, "τὰ γὰρ παραντίκα ἐλαφὸρὰ τῆς θλίψεως ἡμῶν καθ ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολὴν αἰώνιον βάρος δόξης κατεργάζεται ἡμῶν, "μὴ σκοπούντων ἡμῶν τὰ βλεπόμενα ἀλλὰ τὰ μὴ βλεπόμενα τὰ γὰρ βλεπόμενα πρόσκαιρα, Łowbie.

though our outward man 'is destroyed', yet the inward man 17 is renewed day by day. For our light 'trouble which is but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding 18 eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen but at the things which are seen seen the things which are seen are temporal, but the things

bers' and 'the inner man,' and in Eph iv. 22; Col. iii, 9, between 'the old man' and 'the new man, is not precisely the same. Those contrasts relate to the difference between the sensual and the moral nature, 'the flesh' and 'the spirit;' this, to the difference between the material and the spiritual nature, 'the body' and 'the soul.'

άνακαινούται, 'is made new, receives new powers.' Compare Col. iii. 10; Rom. xii. 2; Tit.

Gen. xxxix. 10, &c.

17. Each word here is studiously set against the other.
παραντίκα is 'for the present moment'—often found in classical writers (see Wetstein, ad loc.), but here alone in the N. T.—opposed to alώνιον, 'for the lasting prosed to alώνιον,' for the lasting future.'

το έλαφρόν is used as a substantive (compare τὸ γνήσιον, viii.
8; τὸ μωρόν, τὸ ἀσθενές, 1 Cor. i.
25); and is opposed to βάρος, as τῆς 9λίψως το δόξης. βάρος is used with $65a probably from the fact, that 729 is both 'to be heary' (Job vi. 3; Gen. xviii. 20), and 'to be glorious' (as in Isainh Ixvi. 5), the substantive 7429 always having the meaning of 'glory' or 'bonour'. (Comp. grawites, in Latin.) See a similar use of the Hebrew metaphor and the Greek werd corresponding, in howest and mercies,' Phil. in καθ' ἐπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολῆν cannot be fixed precisely to an one word in the succeeding clause. It is a Hebraism,—a translation, so fur as the Greek idiom would allow, of TND TND 'exceedingly, exceedingly.' (See note on ii. 16.)

The construction of this passage even in detail (compare especially the use of the neuter adjective for a substantive) is like Thucydides.

18. μὴ ὅκοπούντων, 'so long as we do not fix our attention upon,' (Phil. ii. 4) τὰ μὴ βλεπόμενα; comp. Heb. xi. 1, 'the evidence of things not sean' (οὐ βλεπομέτων). The use of μἡ in this passage, and οὐ in Heb. xi. 1, is merely from the Greek.

τὰ δὲ μὴ βλεπόμενα αἰώνια. V. ¹οιδαμεν γὰρ ὅτι ἐὰν ή ἐπίγειος ἡμῶν οἰκία τοῦ σκήνους καταλυθή, οἰκοδομὴν which are not seen are eternal. v. For we know that if our earthly house of "the tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, usage, which requires μή after the article, and ob where the article is not used. The expressions of the shortness of the visible world might be applicable to any age, but are no doubt strengthened here by the expectation of the coming of the Lord. πρόσκαιρα, 'for the temporary season of this life."

αιώνια, 'for the successive ages of God's kingdom."

V. 1. 'I am indifferent to the decay and wearing away of my present outward frame; because I know that another and higher organisation is awaiting me hereafter, a higher life which shall not extinguish my present being, but give me new powers engrafted upon it.' His language may apply to the change of death generally; but it has especial reference to his feeling (as in 1 Cor. xv. 53) that he shall probably be one of those who will be alive at the coming of Christ: hence the wish expressed in verse 4, that he might not lose his present body, but have it expanded into something higher-a wish at any time natural, but which receives its peculiar expression from the feeling just described. Hence also the doubt in v. 1, 'if the house be destroyed.' The explanation of this abrupt transition The babifrom the figure of a tation of a house or tent to that tabernacle.' of a garment, may be found in the image, familiar to the Apostle, both from his occupations and his birth-place, of the tent of Cilician haircloth, which might almost equally suggest the idea of a habitation and of a vesture. Compare the same union of metaphors in Ps. civ. 2, 'Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment: who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain of the tent .

The word 'tent' (σκῆνος) lent itself to this imagery, from being used in later Greek writers for the human body, especially in medical writers, who seem to have been led to adopt the word from the skin-materials of which tents were composed. (See Wetstein, ad loc.)

In philosophical language it retained the idea of transitoriness, like our word 'tenement;' and hence the original meaning would at once be elicited, as in the case of all the words in iv. 7-9. Compare 2 Pet. i. 14, 'the laying aside of my tabernacle (σκηνώματος) is at hand; Wisdom ix. 15, (γεωδες σκήνος) 'earthly tabernacle.

ολεία του σκήνους. The genitive is to define the nature of the habitation.

έπέγειος, i. e. (not 'of earth,' =χοϊκός, but) 'upon the earth.' Compare 1 Cor. xv. 40, 'bodies terrestrial,' opposed to 'from the heavens.'

καταλύω is used especially of the destruction of a house. See Matt. xxiv. 2, xxvi. 61; Gal. ii.

έκ θεοῦ ἔχομεν, οἰκίαν ἀχειροποίητον αἰώνιον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. ἀκαὶ γὰρ ἐν τούτφ στενάζομεν, τὸ οἰκητήριον

2 eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our rhabitation which is

18. The Vulgate (from a false primoleyical seventy) translates it disolventur; a slight departure from the original meaning, which the word nervest to the Vulgate—"dissoluted," has still further videncel; the word havens of break, which was once attached to it both Latin and English. (Compare 2 Peter III. English. (Compare 2 Peter III. has perhaps originated the word dissolution, for 'death.)

eizoθριβν. The word retains its usual active signification so far as to make the words it Seoïdirectly dependent upon it; 'a subuilding which grows up from the hand of God.' Compare Heb. xi. 10, '"the "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.'

iyομιν, i. e. 'the moment that our present house is destroyed, that very moment a new habitation awaits us in hearen. 'A cocording to the representation in 1 Cor. xv. 51, 'we shall all be changed in a moment; '1 Thess. iv. 17, 'we shall be caught up in the clouds' άχιφονοίμτον, 'Not like the tents, in which I live, and which I make with my own hands.' In this, as in the next expressions, adiabuse μ role objective, he speaks rather of a habitation into which he is to enter, than of a body which he is to assume. The expressions' made' or 'not made expressions' made 'or 'not made with hands,' and 'in the heavens,' could not properly be applied to a body.

Kal γάρ is more an explanation, than a reason, of the preceding. See. iv. 10, 11.

"Eν τούτφ, i. e. σκήνει, 'in this my tenement,' pointing, as it were, to his own body, as in Acts xx. 34, 'these hands.' See note on 1 Cor. xv. 54.

στενάζομεν, 'we groan,' i. e. 'with longing to be free.' Compare Rom. viii. 23, 'we groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of the body.'

το ολεητήριον. The word is used instead of σεήτος, to get rid of the notion of instability.

εξε οδραγού. Here again the idea of the actual body is lost in the idea of a habitation or vesture descending, like the sheet of Peter's vision (Acts x. 11), or 'the new Jerusalem, coming from God out of heaven,' Rev. xxi. 2.

irrelieasea, 'to be clothed, as with an upper or over garment.' So terviering for the 'fisher's coat,' John xxi. 7. He uses the word instead of ireliease purposely, from the strong expectation that he in his outward bodily form might still be alive at the end; although it would apply also to the general hope of a restoration after death.

hope of a restoration after death.

3. There are two variations in the text here:

εἴπερ, Lachmann, with B.
 E.F. G. and εἔγε Rec. Text, with J. K. The usage, however, of ήμων τὸ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἐπενδύσασθαι ἐπιποθοῦντες, ³εἴ *περ καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι οὐ γυμνοὶ εύρεθησόμεθα. *καὶ γὰρ οἰ dre.

from heaven, if so be that being clothed we shall not be 4 found naked. For we that are in the tabernacle do groan, these two words in the New Testament is not sufficiently precise to affect the general sense of this passage. It is a confident expectation expressed with 'that degree of uncertainty which naturally belongs to the future, especially to the future life. Had he been speaking of a certain matter of fact, he would have said, not είνε καί but καὶ νάο, as in the next clause. Kai (whether sixto or tiye be adopted) serves as a connecting particle between this and the previous clause. 'If in fact,' or 'since in fact,' like og καὶ ἐκάνωσεν in iii. 6, and δ καὶ doug in v. 5. For the half-doubt expressed compare Phil. iii. 11, 'if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.'

(2) irθυσάμενα, Lachmann and Rec. Text, with B. C. D³. E. J. K. and the Versions; icclusiquevo, Griesbach, with D³. F. G. and the Fathers. But the latter is probably a correction to avoid the apparent contradiction between ircura/μενο and γυμνοί.

The sense would be much the same whichever reading were preferred. If ictorofupres, it would be 'in the hope that, after laying aside our present garment, we shall not be left naked.' If itorofupres, 'in the hope that, after having put on our heavenly garment, we shall be found, not naked, but clothed.' it-to-ofupres, would be used instead of irrevieword to the same products of the sa trasting, not one state of clothing with another, but simply a state of clothing with a state of nakedness; because he is thinking, not, as in verse 2, of the survival, but of the possible extinction of his present body by the assumption of the heavenly body. The expression 'naked' (yuproi) naturally follows from the metaphor of the whole passage. But there is a peculiar propriety in it, suggested by the use of the figure in Greek writers for disembodied spirit. (See Wetstein.) And in later times of the Christian Church, naked figures, both in painting and poetry, are (perhaps from this passage) the usual representation of souls in purgatory. Compare the story in Herodotus, v. 92, of the Corinthian queen, who appeared to her husband after death, intreating him to burn dresses for her as a covering for her disembodied spirit; and also the practice of offering garments on the tombs of the Platean heroes. (Thucyd. iii. S8, and Arnold's notes.) The figure of a vestment for the soul was often used by the Rabbis, but in the sense of the (mornal) times of Col. See Sabilitron.

image of God. See Schöttgen, Hor. Heb. ad loc. It is clear from 1 Cor. xv. 35—

54; 1 Thess. iv. 13—17, that from the strong clothed, additional impulse given by the first Apostolic preaching to the belief in a future state, and from the near expecόντες εν τῷ σκήνει στενάζομεν βαρούμενοι, εξή ῷ οὐ θέλομεν ἐκδύσασθαι, ἀλλ' ἐπενδύσασθαι, ἴνα καταποθῆ τὸ θνητὸν ὑπὸ τῆς ζωῆς. εδ δὲ κατεργασάμενος ἡμῶς εἰς ἐπειδή for ἐφ' φ̄.

being burdened, not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that "mortality may be swallowed up "by life. 5 Now he that "wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who tation of the end of the world, there rose in the minds of the early Church various difficulties about the manner in which the great change would take place, One apprehension was, lest those only who were alive at that day would share in its glory (1 Thess. iv. 13). Another, that the actual body would have to pass into the unseen world (1 Cor. xv. 35). A third, a fear lest in the transition all connexion with the present life would be lost. It is this which comes across the Apostle here. Intense as was his yearning to be delivered from his burden of the worn-out perishing frame, and to be at home with Christ in a new and heavenly mansion, yet he still clung to the past and present, as the links to connect him with the future. And in this case, the feeling would be increased by the belief that from the near approach of the coming of Christ he might even hope to escape death altogether, not losing his bodily existence, but finding it transfigured into something higher. There is the same conflict of feeling in Phil. i. 21, 22, 23, 24, 'to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. ... what I shall choose I wot not ... for I am in a strait betwixt two. having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.' Therefore, after having described his desire for the new habitation. the curtains of the new tabernacle, in which to envelope himself, he adds: 'I desire this, in the fond, the confident, hope, that when the time comes, as come it will, for this change of earthly for heavenly garments, I shall not be left a naked disembodied spirit; for the groans which I utter in the tabernacle of the body, are uttered, not so much because of the oppression of this outward frame (βαρούμενοι), not so much from a wish to be entirely freed from the mortal part of our nature, as from the hope that it will be absorbed into a better life. έφ' φ, 'because,' as in Rom. v.

έφ ψ, 'because,' as in Kom. v 12.

καταποθή. So 1 Cor. xv. 54, 'Death swallowed up.' Probably he refers to the same passage, Isa. xxv. 8.

5. He concludes his argument by referring the great change to God, according to the frequent practice by which he runs all things up to their Highest Source. Compare 1. 21 (where the expressions are nearly the same as here); iv. 6; also 1 Cor. iii. 23, and xv. 28.

κατιργασάμενος, 'worked us up.' The word always expresses an elaborate effort as if against difficulties.

εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, i. e. 'for the αὐτὸ τοῦτο θεός, ὁ δοὺς ἡμῶν τὸν ἀρραβῶνα τοῦ πνεύματος, Θαρροϋντες οὖν πάιτοτε, καὶ εἰδότες ὅτι ἐνδημοϋτες ἐν τῷ σώματι ἐκδημοῦμεα ἀπό τοῦ κυρὸυν 'διὰ πίστεως

γὰρ περιπατοῦμεν, οὺ διὰ είδους, 'θαρροῦμεν ἐκ καὶ εἰδοκοιμεν μὰ λλον εκδημήσια το τοῦ κομματος καὶ ἐκδημήσια πρὸς τὸν κύριον 'θλὸ καὶ φιλοτιμούμεθα, είτε ἐνδημοῦντες είτε ἐκδημοῦντες είτε ἐκδημοῦντες τὸς ἐκδημοῦντες ἐκδημοῦντες τὸς ἐκδημοῦντες ἐκδημοῦντες τὸς ἐκδημοῦντες ἐκδημοῦν ἐκδημοῦν

6 "gave unto us a the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always "bold, and know' that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord: for we walk by shith, not by sight, "but we are 'bold and are 'pleased rather to be absent from the body, and to be 'at home' swith the Lord. Wherefore we 'are eager, 'whether 'at home toor 'abroad, to be acceptable to' Him. For we must all 'be made manifest' before the judgment seat of Christ; that change from mortal to immortal.' For ἀρραβών see i. 22. Com-

For ἀρραβῶν see i. 22. Compare Rom. viii. 11, 'He shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His spirit that dwelleth in you.'

6. The following verses (6-10) are intermediate, both in this and the succeeding section, 6—8 being the conclusion of the thoughts contained in v. 1—5, as 9, 10 form the prelude to what follows in 11—14.

3αρρούντες ... 3αρρούμεν is an anacoluthon. The image is still of a habitation (ἐνδημεῖν and ἐκδημεῖν, 'to be at home' and 'ahroad'), passing into that of a country, as in Phil. iii. 20, γιων γάρ το Φολίτενμα ἐν οὐμαιοῖς. Heb. xi. 13, ξένοι καὶ παρεπέδημοι ἐκὶ τῆς γόξα.

διά, as in ii. 4, 'in a state of.'
 διδικ. 'outward sight' nearly εἶδος, 'outward sight,' nearly as in Luke iii. 22, σωματικῷ εἴδει. περιπατοῦμεν, 'pass our life,' 'versari,' though possibly the original metaphor of walking, is brought out to continue the idea of travelling conveyed in ἐκδημεῖν, 'our pɨlgrimage or journey is on trust, and not because we see our home.'

 πρὸς τὸν κύριον. Compare πρὸς τὸν θεόν, John i. 1. It implies close union.

 Here a new idea is introduced, to be afterwards more fully developed; not merely that of encouragement under his troubles, but of incitement to his duties.

φιλοτιμεῖσθαι is 'to place one's honour in getting an object performed.' So in Rom. xv. 20; 1 Thess. iv. 11.

For the phrase, 'whether at home or abroad' (i. e. 'in the body or out of the body, alive or dead, at Christ's coming'), compare Rom. xiv. 8; Phil. i. 20; 1 Thess. v. 10.

10. τοὺς γὰρ πάντας, 'I am anxious to be well pleasing to Him; for I as well as all of you shall have my secret thoughts ματος τοῦ χριστοῦ, ἴνα κομίσηται ἔκαστος τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, πρὸς ἃ ἔπραξεν, εἶτε ἀγαθὸν εἶτε κακόν.

reach one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he rdid, whether good or bad.

made known.' For φανερωθήναι, see note on following verse. κομίσηται, ' reap the fruits of.'

soμiogras, 'reap the fruits of:

'τὰ của τοῦ σώματος properly,
'through the means of the body;' but probably with less precision here than in the classical usage. It connects this with άτ τοῦ σώματος in verse 8.

The Vulgate reads propriat, i. e.
'cla ofo τὰι.

πρός, 'in consideration of.'

είτε κακόν. Tischendorf (with C. and some of the Fathers) substitutes φαῦλον for κακόν B. (e sil.) D. E. F. G. J. K.

The chief characteristic of the judgment here brought out, is that of the complete revelation of the deeds of man, as in 1 Cor. iv.

1—6. Comp. Rev. xx. 12, 'the books were opened.'

The image of Christ on the judgment seat, is the same as that in Rom. xiv. 10 (where, the judgment seat MSS. it is 'the seat of Christ.' God'); and the expression is peculiar to these two passages, being taken from the tribunal of the Roman magistrate as the most august representation of justice which the world then exhibited. The 'Boma' was a lofty seat, raised on an clevated platform, usually at the end of the Basilica, so that the figure of the judge must have been seen towering above the crowd which thronged the long nave of the building. So sacred and solemn did this seat and its platform appear in the eyes, not only of the heathen, but of the Christian society of the Roman empire, that when, two centuries later, the Basilica became the model of the Christian place of worship, the name of βημα (or tribunal) was transferred to the chair of the bishop; and this chair occupied in the apse the place of the judgment seat of the prætor. In classical Greek, the word βημα was applied (not to the judgment seat, which did not exist in Grecian states, but) to the stone pulpit of the orator. In the LXX. it is used twice for a 'pulpit,' Neh. viii. 4; 2 Macc. xiii. 26; elsewhere, as in Acts vii. 5, for 'a step.' In the N. T. (with the exception of Acts vii. 5) it is always used for a 'judgment seat.'

The more usual figure for The Judgment, is a 'throne' ($póroc). Compare Matt. xxv. $1, 'the shall sit on the throne of His glory;' Rev. xx. 11, 'a great white throne; 'Dan. vii. 9, 'His throne was like a fiery flame.'

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, IV, 7-V. 10.

Such is the mission which I have received, so important, and so open and unreserved; and, as God in his mercy has entrusted me with it, I cannot faint or grow weary under it, I cannot faint, though there is much reason why I should. In order to show that this extraordinary work is Divine and not human, I am encompassed with all outward infirmity, which thus becomes a proof, not of my weakness, but of God's power. My worn-out fragile frame is like an earthenware vessel enclosing some costly treasure. Whichever way I turn, I am pressed by difficulties; but a passage of escape opens before me. I am bewildered in my course, but I find my way again, I am pursued by the enemy, but not left behind as a prey to his attacks. I am trampled under foot, but not to death. I carry with me, at every moment of my course, the marks of pallor and torpor and lifelessness as from the corpse of the Lord Jesus: but it is only that I may show forth more clearly the same ' life in death' that He showed in rising from the grave : for my whole life, from beginning to end, is perpetually given up to death for the sake of Jesus, in order that in this perishable framework of corruption the living power of Jesus may be shown. Death works his will in me, whilst life works her will in you; you are safe, because I am in peril; you live, because I die. But in spite of this contrast between my death and your life, I am sustained by the faith which is described in the Psalm. 'I believe,' I have faith in the unseen Saviour. ' and therefore I speak' the message of the Gospel, with the full confidence that, however different our positions now, the time will come when the resurrection of the Lord Jesus will extend to me as well as to you: when you will receive the best proof that all which is done by and for me is done by and for you; when the gift of life given to me through your united prayers will call forth a still fuller burst of thankfulness from you to the glory of God. With this confidence, as I said before, 'I cannot faint;' there is a nature, a being, a man, in my outward frame, which is gradually decaying; but there is another being in my inner self, which is day by day restored:

there is a pressure of affliction; but it is overbalanced a hundred thousand fold by the heavy weight of glory, which lasts. not like the affliction for a short passing moment, but for an immeasurable future ; for I fix my view, not on what is visible, but on what is invisible, knowing that the visible is temporary, the invisible belongs to the ages of God. The habitation in which I now dwell on the earth, is like the tent which I travel with, or which I made with my own hands; like the tent, to which the human body is so often compared, it may be taken down and destroyed: but there is another habitation, a solid building. whose builder and maker is God, made by no art of hands, like the tent of human tentmakers, but belonging to the ages of God, awaiting me in the regions of heaven. In this my present tent I grown under the heavy weight of the longing desire for that new habitation which will envelop me within its curtains from above. Not that I wish to leave this present life with its vesture of human affections and thoughts; but I fondly trust, that this old vesture will receive a new vesture over it, that this mortal frame will only cease by being swallowed up in a higher life. And the ground for my trust is, that He who has fashioned and worked out my existence for this termination, is no less than God Himself, who has given a clear pledge of the future, by that earnest of the life-giving Spirit of which I before spoke.

With this confidence, therefore, and feeling that our whole journey through life is sustained by trust in what we do not see, not by the presence of what we do see, I am well please to think that the time is coming when this boatshment from my true heavenly home will be ended, and when I shall be with the Lord at home for ever.

And the thought of this future home, not only gives me confidence, but impresses upon me my auful duty. For the time is coming when I, with all of you, must be made completely known before the judgment seat of Christ, in order that each may receive the reueard of the acts done in the earthly habitation, and through the instruments of the body.

THE APOSTLE'S PROSPECT OF DEATH.

This passage stands alone in the insight which it gives us into the Apostle's feelings, under the sense of approaching decay and dissolution. The burst of triumphant exultation over the power of death, in Rom. viii, 30-39 and 1 Cor. xv. 51-58, is more an expression of the sense of God's love through Christ, than of any personal expectation for himself. The description of the coming of the Lord, in 1 Thess, iv. 15-19, is for the comfort of his readers, not of himself. The two passages which most bear comparison with this-2 Tim iv. 6-8; Phil. i. 20-24, whilst expressing the Apostle's personal feelings respecting his end, represent his calm expectation of an event brought on by external circumstances, as a soldier on the eve of battle, rather than his contemplation of death in itself as the natural termination of the exhausted powers of nature. It is this last view which in this section is brought before us. Whatever may have been the precise nature of the deep depression which marks the opening of this passage, it is evident that all the mournful feelings which crowd upon the mind under the pressure of anxiety, of sickness, of hardship, were now heavy on the Apostle's heart. He is 'in the valley of the shadow of death.' He had been 'pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired even of life: ' he 'had the sentence of death in himself:' he had been just 'delivered from a great | death : ' he had ' no rest in his 2 spirit : ' he felt that he was a 'fragile earthen 'vessel:' he was like a soldier in battle, 'pressed into a corner,' 'bewildered,' 'pursued,' 'trampled 'down:' he was 'a living corpse,' always 'delivered up to 'death,' his 'outward man 'perishing,' the 'earthly house of his tabernacle' might at any moment 'be destroyed.' Two feelings emerge from this horror , His of great darkness.' First: It is instructive to observe shrinking the Apostle's shrinking from the disembodied state from beyond the grave, and his natural sympathy with death.

³ i. 8, 9, 10. ⁵ iv. 11. ² ii. 13. ⁶ iv. 16. ⁸ iv. 7. ⁷ v. 1. ⁴ iv. 8, 9.

the are with which many good men have regarded the advance and process of death. There is no Platonic doctrine of a vague and impalpable immortality; no Stoic affectation of rising above the ordinary feelings of humanity. It is (on a lower scale) the same picture which is presented to us in the agony of Gethsemane, 'Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.' It is the Christian and Apostolical expression of the feeling described in the well-known lines of Gray—

For who, to dull forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resigned?
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing lingering look behind?

And, secondly, there is the confidence that he will pass into a beginning to the second of the secon is a world around him which he does not see, but which he believes to exist; a habitation, a vesture awaiting him in heavenly regions; a home with the Lord, where he will arrive when his journey is ended. And, finally, there is a judgment seat, where he will be rewarded or punished. The thought of the Judgment seat blends with the thought of home, as in the Paalms the rock on which the spirit of the Psalmist reposes is not so much the mercy as the justice of God. Even in these moments of earnest longing for rest, Christ is still, not only the Friend, but the true and faithful Judge, at whose hands the Apostle is content to receive that which is his due.

St. Paul's Motive for his Service.

Chap, V. 11-VI, 10.

11 Εἰδότες οὖν τὸν φόβον τοῦ κυρίου ἀνθρώπους πείθομεν, θεῷ δὲ πεφανερώμεθα· ἐλπίζω δὲ καὶ ἐν ταῖς συνειδήσεσιν ὑμῶν πεφανερῶσθαι. 12 οὐ *πάλιν ἐαυτοὺς συνι-

· Add γέρ

11 Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord we persuade men, but we "have been' made manifest unto God; and I trust 12 also "to have been' made manifest in your consciences. On We

11. The Apostle, in the preceding verses, after describing the support which in his troubles he received from the prospect of a better life hereafter, was carried on to speak of the energy which this prospect imparted to his labours (verse 9). In order to reach that home for which he longed, he, with all the rest of the world, must pass before the judgment seat, where every thought would be disclosed to Christ Himself (verse 10). And now the thought of that hour brings before him the insinuations of concealment and dishonesty, which he kad before answered (iii. 1-iv. 6), and he once more protests the sincerity of his conduct (11-13), appealing, first, to the overwhelming motive which impelled him (14 -21); secondly, to his own selfdenying conduct (vi. 1-10). It is the climax of the first part of the Epistle.

εἰδότες οὖν τὸν φόδων τοῦ κυρίου, 'knowing that there is this fearful aspect of the Lord, I proceed on my task of winning over men; but whilst I do so, it is to God that my thoughts are manifested, as clearly now as they will be at the judgment, and as I trust they are manifested clearly before your several consciences' (συνειδήσεσεν). For the phrase ανθρώπους πείθομεν comp. Acts xii. 20, Gal, i. 10, where it is used in a bad sense, which illustrates its use here, 'I am devoted, as they say, to making friends of men, and hence the immediate antithesis, 'No: it is not man, but God, whose approbation I seek.' In classical Greek the addition of μέν would have cleared up the obscurity.

περατερώμεθα refers to φωτρερώθησε in reess 10. Observe the tense, 'Our manifestation to God has already taken place.' For its connexion with the words συνείδησες and συνεστάσυμεν compare v. 2: τη φωτρερώτει τη δαληθείας συνεστάστες ἐαυτούς πρός πάσων συνείδησεν ἀπθρεώτων ἐνάπων τοῦ δεοῦ. For the general sense sec 1 Ocr. iv. 5

12. The mention of their doubting his sincerity recalls what he had already said in iii. 1, iv. 2, about the commendatory letters,—the charge that, instead of bringing commendations from στάνομεν ὑμῖν, ἀλλὰ ἀφορμὴν διδόντες ὑμῖν καιχήματος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, ὑτα ἔχητε πρὸς τοὺς ἐν προσώπῳ καιχομένους καὶ ˙μὴ ἐν καρὰφι. ¹¹ἐτε γὰρὰ ἐξέστημεν, θεῷ· ͼἶτε σωφρονοῦμεν, ὑμῦν. ¹⁴ἡ γὰρ ἀγάπη τοῦ χριστοῦ

* sal où sapila.

commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion "of boasting' on our behalf, that ye may have somewhat to answer those who "boast in "face, and not in heart. For 13 whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God: "o whether tawe be sober, it is "to you". For the love of Christ con-

others, he was always commending himself. 'My object is not to commend myself, but to give you an opportunity of boasting in my behalf against my opponents.' He assumes, with something of an ironical tone, that all that they wished was to vindicate him. (After ἔχητε, supply καύχημα.) This is the most explicit mention of his opponents in this part of the Epistle, and is to be compared with the more open attacks of x. 2, 7, xi. 18, 'They pride themselves not on any deep sympathy such as lies at the bottom of my heart for you (iii. 2, iv. 5, vi. 11), but on their outward pretensions, their dignified appearance, as contrasted with my weak presence (x. 10), their Jewish descent (xi. 22), their commendatory letters (iii.

13. It is impossible to determine precisely the allusions in litiers, up. 19. Mark iii. 21) and eudporeüpus? ('we are of sound mind, comp. Acts xxvi. 25). The 'madness' may allude, either to the extravagant freedom, as it was thought, with which he spoke of his own claims (see xi. 1, 16, 17, where he himself calls it by the name of 'folly'), or more worldliness, from devotion to man.

14. $\tilde{\phi}\ pi\ a\phi\ a\phi\ συνέχει is always used of some strong outward pressure, as of a crowd (Luke viii. 45), 'Con- or of anxiety and sick-ness (Phil. i. 23; Luke is 38, viii. 37; Acts xxviii. 3).

συνέχει ήμας, 15 κρίναντας τοῦτο, ὅτι* εἶς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν άρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων straineth us, because we thus rjudged, that on one died for 15 all: then all rdied: and He died for all, that they who which Christ has shown by that great example of love in His death, constrains us to forget ourselves, and to devote ourselves to God and to you; because at our conversion we came to this decision, that He died, He alone and once, for all.' That Christ's death was the great proof of His love, compare John xv. 13, 'greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.' That & γριστός is the nominative case to απέθανεν, and είς ύπερ πάντων is in apposition with it, seems proved by the consideration that else o sic would have been the more natural expression, and also by the parallel passage, 1 Pet. iii. 18, Χριστός άπαξ περί άμαρτιών ημών απέθανεν, δίκαιος υπέρ άδικων, where ἄπαξ corresponds to είς, περί άμαρτ, ήμων to ύπερ πάντων, and the construction of δίκαιος ύπ. άδίκων to είς ύπ. πάντων. al is omitted in B. C2. D. E.

15. κρίναντας τοῦτο, ' the love

F. J. K., some Fathers, and most versions. It is retained in C1. and some Fathers, and may possibly have been omitted, either from offence at the hypothetical character of the statement, or from confusion with sic. The sense is the same in both readings ὑπέρ πάντων has the same For all, ambiguity as the Engbrie, duri, lish 'for,' 'in behalf of,' but the idea of service and protection alwavs predominates. Wherever, in speaking of Christ's death, the idea of substitution is intended, it is under the figure of a ransom, in which case it is expressed by αντί. Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45. Wherever the idea of 'covering' or 'forgiving' sins is intended, it is under the figure of a sin offering, in which case the word used is mepi apapriag or αμαρτιών, as in Rom. viii. 3; 1 Pet. iii. 18; 1 John ii. 2, iv. The preposition περί as thus used has partly the sense of 'on account of,' - but chiefly the sense of 'covering,' - as if it were 'He threw his death "over" or "around" our sins.

άρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον. άρα has in the New Testament the same force died. as in classical Greek (where, however, it has always the second place in the sentence, never as here the first), 'therefore,' ipso facto, 'by the terms of the argument. οί πάντες. The article refers back to ύπέρ πάντων. 'All those for whom he died.'

άπέθανον may either be 'died' (as in Rom. vi. 10, ἀπέθανεν έφάπαξ), or 'are dead' (as in Col. iii. 3, άπεθάνετε γαρ, και η ζωή, κ. τ. λ.).

The sense thus produced will suit either of the two main interpretations of this passage.

(1) 'If Christ died for all. then it follows from this, that all those for whom He died, would ἀπέθανεν, ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες μηκέτι ἐαυτοῖς ζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷ live should not henceforth live to themselves, but to also have died themselves [else there would have been no necessity for his dying for them?." Compare Rom. v. 15, 'if by the offence of one many died (antibaror), much more the grace of God, and the free gift, by grace of one man, Jesus Christ, abounded to them all; and 1 Cor. xv. 22, 'as in Adam all die (ἀποθνήσκουσι), so in Christ shall all be made alive.' This is the interpretation adopted by all the Fathers and Schoolmen. there are against it these difficulties: (a) Although the words will admit of such a conditional sense of ἀπέθανον (to which Gal. 21. άρα γριστὸς δωρεὰν ἀπέθανεν. is to a certain extent a parallel); vet it is by a strain which would hardly have been used, unless the context made it clear. (b) Although there would thus be an approximation to the meaning of the Apostle's words elsewhere, yet it would be by a precision of logical argument, which is not in his manner. What he elsewhere declares is, that the universal death introduced into the world by Adam's sin, is set aside by the universal life introduced into the world by Christ's obedience. What he would here declare, if this interpretation were correct, would be that the universal effect of Christ's death proved that all mankind were before in a state of death; a position implying a degree of speculation on the cause of Christ's death which is foreign to the New Testament. (c) It would be an introduction of an abstract proposition, without regard to the context, which goes on to speak, not of the deliverance of man from the curse of context of the context of the duced in the lives of those of duced in the lives of those of whom he speaks. A proposition of the kind thus ascribed to the Apostle, would abour under the same unapostolical character as the abstract statement of the doctrine of the Trinity contained in the spurious verse I John

(2) There remains, therefore, the interpretation now almost universally adopted: 'If Christ died for all, then it follows that all for whom He died died [to sin, with Him].' It is borne out by the words, and agrees both with the Apostle's statements elsewhere, and with the context. It is the same in substance as in Rom. vi. 1-14, which throughout agrees with this passage in representing the death of sin, and of the old nature of man, through and with Christ's death, as the necessary prelude to the newness of life, to which there, as here, he is urging his hearers. Compare also Rom. xiv. 7, 'no man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. Whether we live, we live unto the Lord, or whether we die, we die unto the Lord. . . . For, for this cause Christ died, that He might be Lord both of the dead and the living.' Col. iii. 3, 'ye are dead (απεθάνετε), and your life is hid with Christ in God.'

The omission of σῦν αἰνῷ may be accounted for by the close connexion with the preceding, implied in ἄρα. The generalising ύπὲρ αὐτῶν ἀποθανόντι καὶ ἐγερθέντι. 16 ὤστε ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν οὐδένα οἴδαμεν κατὰ σάρκα· εἰ *καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν

b el 8è mal,

6 Him who 'died and rose again for them.' Wherefore 'we henceforth know' no 'one after the flesh: 'even though of the whole passage by oi πάντες, may be compared to the similar expressions in 1 Cor. xv. 22.

καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, ἵνα έγερθέντε, This goes on to state more expressly the object of Christ's death, - 'that all might live a new life.' 'He died and rose thus, in order that for the future all who are alive might live to Him.' ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν must be taken with both; as in Rom. iii. 25. There is the same identification of the natural and the spiritual life as in iv. 11, 12. έγερθέντε is inserted with a view to Cwoir, 'we live to Him who is alive."

The Apostle's mind is full of two things: first, his own sincerity, as contrasted with the insincerity with which he was charged by his opponents, and the insincerity with which he believed that they were justly chargeable; and, secondly, his elevation above the local, personal, national grounds on which they endeavoured to commend themselves. Accordingly there is the same union of self-vindication, and of the assertion of the superiority of Christianity to Judaism here as in iii. 1-18; the point of superiority was there the absence of mystery and concealment; here its freedom from local and visible re-He was confident in his sincerity; because he knew that the love of Christ pressed him forward, and that in Christ's death he and all had died to their former sins, and now lived only for Him who now lived for them. But this leads him on to the thought of the immense chasm in all respects which the death of Christ and his own conversion had made between his former and his present life. The whole of his past life was vanished far away into the distance. And first out of this feeling arises the thought that all local and personal ties, even with Christ Himself, all local or human grounds of authority and recommendation, such as his opponents insisted upon, and for the absence of which they taunted him, had no longer any hold upon him.

ήμετς, 'we, whatever my opponents may say or do.'

ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, 'from the present time.' Compare the use of νῦν in vi. 2.

16. οἴδαμεν, 'we recognise.' κατὰ σάρκα, 'by lineal or outward claims.' Compare for the use of the same expression with regard to the same opponents, x. 3, xi. 18; Gal. vi. 12.

εί καὶ ἐγνῶκαμεν, 'even though I have known;' 'granting that I have known.'

γινώσκομεν, i. e. κατὰ σάρκα, 'henceforth we know Him no longer [after the flesh].' κατὰ σάρκα χριστόν, ἀλλὰ νῦν οὐκέτι γινώσκομεν.
¹⁷ ὤστε εί τις ἐν χριστῷ, καινὴ κτίσις· τὰ ἀρχαῖα

we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now ° know we 17 Him no more. Therefore if any rone be in Christ, he is οιδαμεν and ἐγνώκαμεν are probably here, as in 1 'Knowing Cor. ii. 8, xiii. 1, merely more after the variation of the the flesh.' word without variation of meaning, after the Apostle's manner.

He must be here alluding to those who laid stress on their having seen Christ in Palestine (comp. note on 1 Cor. ix. 1), and on their connexion with Him or with 'the brothers of the Lord' by actual descent. (Comp. note on 1 Cor. ix. 5.) And if so, they were probably of the party 'of Christ.' (See notes on x. 7; 1 Cor. i. 12.) But the words imply that something of this kind might once have been his own state of mind, not only in the time before his conversion (which he would have condemned more strongly), but since. If so, it is (like Phil. iii. 13-15) remarkable as a confession of former weakness or error, and of conscious progress in religious knowledge.

The feeling which he here describes as that at which he had permanently arrived, is of importance in enabling us to understand the almost total absence in the apostolic age of local and personal recollections in relation to our Lord's life and death. (See Essay on the Epistles and the Gospel History). Prom this thought of the Tory's Prom this thought of the

 From this thought of the destruction of all local ties, he passes into a wider sphere. Not these feelings only, but all that belongs to our former life passes away, and a new creation rises in its place; and now he seems to be thinking, not so much of his relations to his converts, as of their relations to God. In speaking of the Corinthians before in this Epistle, he had feared their estrangement from him, and their following his opponents; but here, for the first time, is any indication of their estrangement directly from God. Possibly he may have been thinking of the defilements of the Gentile Christians, of which he afterwards speaks in vi. 15-vii. 1. Possibly he may have formed so strong an opinion of the evil teaching of the false teachers, as to consider the Corinthians to be already in a state of sin, from which they required to be turned to God; and hence the point of transition from the covert condemnation of those teachers in verse 16, to the direct mention of the sin here. For similar expressions concerning the effect of this teaching, compare ii. 16. iv. 3. 'those that are lost' (apparently in allusion to such); xi. 3, 'I fear lest as the screent tempted Eve, so your minds be corrupted from the simplicity which is in Christ; 'Gal. iii. 4, 'have ye suffered so much in vain?' iv. 11, 'I fear lest I have laboured in vain; ' iv. 19, 'I am in travail with you again; ' and

v. 4, 'ye are fallen from grace.'
Whatever be the explanation, the fact is clear that he here παρῆλθεν, ίδοὺ γέγονεν καινά.^{2 18}τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ ² Αδά τὰ πάντα.

a new creature: "the ancient' things are passed away; 18 behold "A they' are become new. And all things are of speaks of the Corinthians as having so fallen away (compare especially verse 20, be ye reconciled to God; ' and vi. 1, ' that ye receive not the grace of God in vain'); and his object is to show that not only their former life before conversion, but also their recent sins have been forgiven, and that God in Christ is still ready to receive them. Compare, for similar expressions used to Christians already converted, 1 John ii. 2, 'if any man sin, we have 'a comforter' with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous: and He is the propitiation for our sins.'

σστε. The connexion may be either immediately with the preceding, 'if even with Christ we have no previous bond, much more are other previous bonds removed;' or, with verse 15, treating 16 as parouthetical, 'live for Christ, and not for yourselver; and therefore remember that all is new.'

is new.'

'Whosoever is brought into connexion with Christ, is a new creation.' ἐν χριστῷ, 'in Christ.' 'Union with Christ does not (as you urge) maintain, it rather dissolves, former ties.' Compare x. 7. καινή κτίσις, see Gal. vi. 15. It was a common expression among the Rabbis for a proselyte's conversion. See Wetstein, ad loc. τὰ ἀρχαῖα. Either an-'Ancient things are passed away.' as of sins. The use of the word ἀρχαῖος, instead of παλαιός, points rather to the former; it is the same as the difference in English between 'ancient' and 'old.'

ίδού. This transfers the reader as into the sudden sight of a picture. 'The moment that a man is a Christian, a new creation rises up : the ancient world passes away as in the final dissolution of all things, and behold! a new scene is discovered; the whole world has in that instant be-come new.' (For this use of παρελθείν, see Matt. xxiv. 35, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away;' and 2 Pet. iii. 10, 'the heavens shall pass away.') For the sense compare Isa. xliii. 18, 19 (LXX.), τὰ ἀρχαῖα μή συλλογίζεσθε ' ίδου έγω ποιώ καινά. and the imitation of it in Rev. xxi. 4, 5, 'the former things are passed away ' (τὰ πρῶτα ἀπῆλθον); and He that sat on the throne said, "behold, I make all things new" ' (καινά); in which passage of the Apocalypse the idea of the change and regeneration of the individual passes, as here, into the idea of the end and regeneration of the world, as in the use of παλιγγενεσία in Matt. xix. 28. The Rec. Text with D3, E. J. K. inserts, Lachmann with B. C. D. F. G. omits, rà πάντα after καινά. If the insertion is right, then the idea of the world's regeneration is brought out more strongly. If the omission, then, though the idea is the same, the introduction of it is more abrupt-' old things are passed away, they are changed into new things.

θεοῦ τοῦ καταλλάξαντος ήμᾶς ἐαυτῷ διὰ °χριστοῦ καὶ δόντος ήμῦν τὴν διακονίαν τῆς καταλλαγῆς, ¹⁹ὡς ὅτι θεὸς ἦν ἐν χριστῷ κόσμον καταλλάσσων ἑαυτῷ, μὴ λο-

· Add 'Inσοῦ.

God, who reconciled us to Himself "through on Christ and 19 gave to us the ministry of reconciliation, "in that God was in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself.

18. τὰ πάντα is 'the new world' spoken of in verse 17:— 'the new world, no less than the ancient world, proceeds from God; from the love not only of Christ, but of God.'

Here there is the same reference to God as the ultimate author of all, which occurs so frequently; e. g. v. 5, i. 21, iv. 6; 1 Cor. iii. 23, xv. 28, 'that God may be all in all.'

τοῦ καταλλάξαντος ἡμᾶς ἐαντῷ διὰ χριστοῦ. This great change in man's moral nature Reconcilia- effected by his contion of man version to Christianity, is expressed here, as in Rom. v. 10, 11; Eph. ii. 16; Col. i. 20, 21, by the words καταλλάσω, καταλλάσω, ταnslated 'reconcile,' reconciliation,' with the exception of Rom. v. 4. where it is rendered 'atonement.

As in verses 16, 17, the Aposite himself was the primary subject of the argument, so he is still. As it was especially true of him, that in his conversion all worldly bonds had been snaped anunder (ver. 16), and all ancient associations passed away (17) so also of him it was especially true that of the head of the conversion of the true that of the head of the conversion of the Christ, and still more, that God had entrusted him with the task of making this reconciliation known. The more personal meaning of spine ("us"), in the first clause, is fixed by the recurrence of spire ("to us.") in the second, where it must signify the Apostle. But already, in 'verse 15, and in the general form, 'if any man be in Christ,' in 17, the thought of others was included; he was beginning, here, as in he was beginning, here, as in 1 Cor. iv. 4, and Rom. vii. 7—25, to 'transfer to himself in a figure' what belonged to the whole world, especially to the Corinthian world which he was addressing.

Accordingly he now advances to unfold the general truth, with the delivery of which he was entrusted as his especial 'task' or 'mission,' and which, up to this point, he had described as his own peculiar possession.

For this sense of the word δισκονία, compare iii. 9, ή διακονία τῆς δικαιοσύνης.

19. &c &rt, 'seeing that;' pleonastic for &rt, or a mixture of the con-'God in struction &c &roo &rroc Christ.' and &rt &rt &rt. as in

xi. 21.

The absence of the article from 3εός and κόσμος, and the position of δν, require the words to be translated thus: 'There was God in Christ [i. e. no less than God] employed in reconciling facthing less than a whole γιζόμενος αὐτοῖς τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν, καὶ θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν τὸν λόγον τῆς καταλλαγῆς. ²⁰ ὑπὲρ χριστοῦ οὖν πρεσβεύομεν, ὡς τοῦ θεοῦ παρακαλοῦντος δὶ ἡμῶν not imputing to them their trespasses', and committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Therefore for Christ are we ambassadors', as though God were exhorting you by that in the death of Christ there was nothing more than Christ, nothing more than that single event. Yes: there was more. There was God, the Invisible, Almighty, dwelling and working in Christ, And the object of that working was to reconcile a world to Himself.' The 'world,' like 'all' in verse 15, means the whole race of mankind, though with a special reference to those whom the Gospel has reached and touched. Compare, for the sense of the whole passage, Col. i. 19, 20 'it pleased God that in Him should all fulness dwell . . . and by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself.' Also 1 John ii. 2, 'not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world.' μή λογιζόμενος . . . καταλworld to Himself.' As if he had said, 'You might have thought

Any Act and the proof of this reconciliation is, first, that He now forbears to charge the reconciled world witheir offences; separating trespasses, condly, that He placed upon me the responsibility of teaching the reconciliation. in gives the connexion.

Compare Rom. iii. 25, 'the remission (or passing over, πάρεσιν) of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;' also Rom. iv. 8, 'blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth (λογί-σηται) no sin;' and Col. ii. 13,

' forgiving our trespasses' (τὰ παραπτώματα).

The action of forgiveness is perpetual, and is therefore in the present tense; that of entrusting the Apostle with the charge of preaching, was once for all at his conversion, and is therefore in the past tense.

Siμενος iν hμεν, 'He placed in my hands, in my mouth.'
The word is selected, as being that which, though with a different construction (Serθαι etc. r or rινά), is used for the bestowal of gifts or offices in the Church, 1 Cor. xii. 28; 1 Tim. 12.

to jilin 12.

to jilin, here as in verse 18, means, not the Apostles generally, but St. Paul himself. The 'word,' or 'message' of reconciliation (compare à Aryen roi orrupoi, in 1 Cor. i. 18) was especially 'the gospel' or 'good tidings' of Paul; and as such here soeaks of it.

20. rip yourno ew prescriptoque. He now turns to the directly practical object which had been brooding in his mind since the 17th verse, the conversion — the second conversion — of the Corinthians themselves, from the sin, whatever it might be, which interrupted their rounion with God. The 'task' (verse 19) which he had received from God, found their natural fulfilment in this field. If the had spoken before of Clurist's love
spoken before of Clurist's love

δεόμεθα ύπὲρ χριστοῦ, καταλλάγητε τῷ θεῷ. 21 τὸν 4 μὴ γνόντα ἀμαρτίαν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀμαρτίαν ἐποίησεν, ἴνα us: we pray you "for Christ', 'be ye reconciled to God.' 21 ° He made Him 'who knew no sin to be sin for us', that we 'may become' the righteousness of God in Him.

* Tèr váo.

urging him forward in their behalf; he now comes before them as the representative of Christ (πρεσδεύομεν, . . . δεόμεθα).

"της expresses that he is both of representing Christ, and Christ. as one ving Him. And Christ. as on the only other passage where the same figure of an ambassador is used, Eph. vi. 20, "wip o" πρεσθείω, "in behalf of [not 'instead of'] which Gospel I am an ambassador." But as in the previous verses

God had been spoken of as the source of all that was done through Christ, so here also He is spoken of as the chief mover and object of the Apostle's address, ώς του θεού παρακαλούντος δι' ἡμῶν, 'as though God Himself were heard entreating you through my voice.' καταλλάγητε τῷ Θεῷ, 'my prayer in behalf of Christ—what God says to you through me-is this: 'Be reconciled to God.' The use of the imperative is most emphatic, as though he uttered the very words of the prayer which he addressed to them from Christ, and which. in all probability, they must have heard from his lips when he was τὸν μὴ γνόντα. This is the reason for the prayer, whether or not it be included in the actual words of it.

with them.

Observe the great abruptness of this sentence; γάρ (in D¹. E. J. K.) is a later correction, to soften this For the general truth, see Eom. viii 3, 'Ged truth, see Eom. viii 3, 'Ged truth, see Eom. viii 3, 'Ged truth, see Eom. viii 4, 'Ged truth, see Eom. v made (γενομένος) a curse for us.

πέρ, 'in behalf of.' See note on verse 15.

ημῶν, ἡμῷς here, as in verses

18 and 20, is used primarily of the Apostle himself, though with a reference to the world at large. ἀμαρτία is here used in the widest sense for 'sin.'

'He was enveloped, 'Christ made sin.'
lost, overwhelmed in sin, and its consequences, so far as he could be without Himself being sinful. This qualification is necessarily involved in the increase of the sinful property of the sinful part of δικαιοσύνη θεού. Here, as always, the object of Christ's sufferings is the moral restoration ήμεις *γενώμεθα δικαιοσύνη θεοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ. VI. ¹συνεργοῦντες δὲ καὶ παρακαλοῦμεν μὴ εἰς κενὸν τὴν χάριν τοῦ θεοῦ δέξασθαι ὑμᾶς ² (λέγει γάρ Καιρῷ δεκτῷ ἐπήκουσά

• γινώμεθα,

vi. 'As His fellow-workers, then, we' rexhort you also 2 that ye raccept not the grace of God in vain (for He saith 'I rheard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of man,— 'that man might, in Christ, be united to God in God's highest attribute of right-cousness.' The phrase ἐκαισσύνη θεων, as in Rom. i. 17, iii. 21, 22, includes the sense of 'acquittal.'

έν αὐτῷ, i. e. 'by union and conformity with Christ.'

VI. 1. He urges (for some reason unknown to us), with still more vehemence, the appeal he had made in verse 20; and now, as in iv. 7, the mention of his great mission recalls again to his mind the sufferings and troubles which he had undergone; and in the climax of triumph which the consciousness of his victory suggests, he closes this long digression. The almost lyrical and noctical character which belongs to this burst of feeling, may be fitly compared to Rom. viii. 31-39; 1 Cor. xiii. 1—13, which occupy, in a similar manner, the central place in those Epistles.

συτργούντες 'as fellow-workers with God.' That 3εφ (not χριστφ, or ψψίν) is to be supplied, is certain: (1) By the parallel of 1 Cor. iii. 9, συτεργοί του 3εσφ, (2) because the act in which he claims to be a fellow-worker, is that of exhortation (παραιαλούμεν), which, in ν. 20, had been ascribed to God.

παρακαλούμεν, here, as in v. 20, and i. 3-6, has the triple meaning of entreaty, exhortation. and consolation; and is here put forward as the chief part of the Apostle's function.

ph cir serbe rây gáper rol Seol 'ciácaden úpaja, 'that you should not receive the goodness of God in your conversion to no purpose. Here, again, as in v. 20, ignorance of the especial danger to which the Apostle alluídes. For the phrase 'in vain,' eic zerór, compare Gal. iv. 11 (ciej), in speaking of his converte; and Gal. ii 2; Phin. ii. 16; Thes. also note on v. 17, hinself. See also note on V. II., "γρ χάριν röö Seuö." The favour of God' is often used as here, simply for the 'goodness' of God shown in the conversion of men to Christianity; and is thus used as almost identical with the Christian faith. Compare Acts xiii. 43, 'they persuaded them to abide in the grace of God;' Acts xx. 24, 'the Gospel of the grace of God.

2. The quotation is from Issiah xlir. 8 (LXX.). In the criginal context God is speaking to the Messiah, the servant of His people; and it is possible that the Apostle preserves that sense, and intends to express by the critation the general fact that Christ, and that, therefore, He would receive the Corintian. But the words σου, καὶ ἐν ἡμέρα σωτηρίας ἐβοήθησά σοι. ἰδοὺ νῦν καιρὸς εὐπρόσδεκτος, ἰδοὺ νῦν ἡμέρα σωτηρίας), ³ μηδεμίαν ἐν μηδενὶ διδόντες προσκοπήν, ινα μὴ μωμηθῆ ἡ διακονία, of salvation I "succoured thee. Behold now is the "wellaccepted time, behold now is the day of salvation"), agiving no offence in anything, "lest the ministry be ἐπήκουσα, ἐβοήθησα, 'listened' and 'helped,' describe so much more exactly the relation of God to the Church and to mankind. than the relation of God to Christ, that they had better be so taken. The variation from the original sense may in this instance be justified by the identification of the Messiah and the people, which runs through the latter chapters of Isaiah. The passage was apparently suggested to the Apostle's memory by the word δεκτός, as connected with δίξασθαι: 'Let not your receiving of the favour of God be in vain, for the language of God [6 9:0c is the nominative case to \(\lambda\ell'\gamma\text{in}\) in the Prophet is true: 'In a time which I receive I heard thee,"' which is confirmed by the stress that he lays on the word, carrying it out and amplifying it in his own comment which follows:-'God has so spoken, and look! the present is the time which He so receives.' 'You ought to receive Him, for He has received you.' εὐπροσδεκτος is a favourite word of the Apostle; and as such, and also as being more emphatic, is substituted for the less familiar and less expressive term of the LXX. (Compare vii. 12; Rom. xv. 16, 31.) νῦν, 'now,' may be either generally 'now, in the Gospel dispensation' (which is confirmed by 'the acceptable year,' δεκτὸς ἐνκαντός. Luke iv. 19), or rather in reference to the peculiar need of his converts, 'Now, at this present moment, is the time for you to turn to God; waste no time in doing so.'

3. The quotation from Isain, with the Apostle's comment, had been parenthetical; and he now enlarges on his efforts to fulfil worthly his mission of exhortation to them, partly from the mere outpouring of feeling over the greatness of his work, partly from the wish to hold up his conduct as a model to his converta Comp. I Cor. ix. 18—27.

The participles &cévers, &c., oin on directly to everyoriers. The use of parketer and order, instead of oblequier and oblevi, indicates the connexion. 'I exhort you, inamuch as I give the best proof of my earnestness, by anxiety not through my means to throw any obstacle in the way of your receiving the message.'

προσκοπή, 'stumbling - block,' used only in this place for what is elsewhere expressed (1 Cor. wiii. 9; Rom, xiv. 13) by προσκομμα.

μωμηθη, 'have reproach cast upon it.' Compare the use of the word (where only else it occurs in the New Testament) in wiii. 20, possibly with reference to his refusing maintenance. See note on xi. 7.

ή διακονία, 'the task or ser-

⁴άλλ' ἐν παντὶ "συνιστάντες ἐαυτοὺς ὡς θεοῦ διάκονοι, ἐν ὑπομονῆ πολλῆ, ἐν θλώψεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, ⁵ἐν πληγαῖς, ἐν φυλακαῖς, ἐν ἀκαταστασίαις, ἐν

* συνιστώντες.

4 blamed, but in all things approving ourselves as o ministers of God, in much rendurance, in reroubles, in necessities, in 5 distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, vice of reconciliation' (v. 19), 'of righteousness' (iii. 8, 9).

4. συνστάντε Ιαννοές, 'commending mysel', not by commendintry letters (see on iii. 1), but as true servants and instruments, not of man, but of God, selves.' This is the sense of the nominative δάσονεν: had it been the accusative δασονεν, then the sense would be 'commending' or 'proving ourselves to be the sense of the commending or 'proving ourselves to be the sense would be 'commending' to province the commending or 'proving ourselves to be the sense would be 'commending' to 'proving ourselves to be the sense of the commending the commending of the commend

Observe that here συνιστάντες precedes ἐαυτούς, whereas in ii. 1, v. 12, where the sense required a stress to be laid on 'themselves,' ἑαυτούς precedes συνιστάνουις.

4—10. The following enumeration of the means whereby he commended himself, may be divided into four clauses, all any highing is παντί: (1) is iπομοτή πρατείαις. (2) is αγνόσητι ... δυνόμει 3τοῦ. (3) δια τῶν ὅπλων ... ἐψημίας. (4) ὁς πλάνοι ... πάντα ακτίχοντες.

(1) The first section is an expansion of iv troupoy noλhā, 'in' or 'by much endurance,' in three triplets of evils, each growing out of the last word of the other. (a) The first describes his hardships generally, 'In crushing afflictions (λλίψεταν), in pressure of difficulties (λνάγ- in pressure of difficulties (λνάγ- in pressure of difficulties (λνάγ-).

suc), in narrow straits (στεροχωρίας). The prevailing idea is of pressure and confinement: each stage narrower than the one before, so that no room is left for movement or escape. (3λτιμς, and στεροχωρία are often joined, iv. 8; Rom. ii. 9, viii. 35; 3λtμές and ἀτέγος, 1 Thess: iii. 7.)

(b) The idea of 'narrow straits' (στενοχωρίαις) suggests the thought of actual persecutions, of which he gives the three to which he was most frequently exposed-the 'scourgings' from Romans and Jews (for which see xi. 23-25); the 'imprisonments' (for which see xi. 23), which followed upon the scourgings, as in Acts xvi. 22, 23; the ' tumults and disorders' to which he was exposed, as in Asia Minor (Acts xiii. 50, xiv. 19), Greece (xvi. 19, xviii. 12), Jerusalem (xxi. 30). So the word is used in xii. 20: 1 Cor. xiv. 33: Luke xxi. 9; James iii. 16. It is possible, however (as most of these passages relate rather to inward than outward disorder), that the sense may be 'unsettlement of life,' as in agrarovuer, 1 Cor. iv. 11; and this would suit somewhat better with its position here, as it was the banishments which succeeded, the disorders which preceded the imprisonments.

Whatever be the meaning of akarasrasiasc, he naturally passes from troubles sustained κόποις, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις, ἐν νηστείαις, ⁶ἔν ἀγνότητι, ἐν γνώστε, ἐν μακροθυμία, ἐν χρηστότητι, ἐν πνεύματι ἀγίω, ἐν ἀγάπη ἀνυποκρίτω, ⁷ἐν λόγω ἀληθείας, ἐν δυνάμει θεοῦ, διὰ τῶν ὅπλων τῆς δικαιοσύνης τῶν δεξίων καί sin watchings, in fastings, in pureness, in knowledge, in long-suffering, in kindness, in the Holy Ghost, in love runfeigned, in the word of truth, in the power of God, by the weapons of righteousness on the right hand and on at the hands of others to voluntary or internal troubles.

"The labour" (córrec, as in xi. 28, 27, x. 15) refers both to his manual labour (1 Cor. iv. 12), and also to the general toils and anxieties (molestire) plus his life; the 'sleepless night' (άγρυντίνιες) and 'hungerings' ((γηντίνιες) refer to the privations imposed upon him, partly by his wandering life, partly by his refusal to receive support. See fusal to receive support. See note on xi 27; 1 Cor. iv. 11.

(2) The second section enumerates the virtues which accompanied these outward hardshins. They are arranged in two divisions, not so much by the meaning as by the form of the words; the first consisting of one, the latter of two words: as, for example, 'love' would naturally have followed on 'kindness;' but as he wished to accompany it with the epithet 'unfeigned.' he therefore puts it in the second division; and 'the Holy Spirit' would also, but for the same reason, have properly stood at the head of the whole section. For a similar regard to the sound rather than the sense of the words he was bringing together. compare Rom. i. 30, 31. Each word stands singly without any apparent connexion, as it came uppermost in his thoughts.

(a) hyrorns 'purity from sin' generally, as in vii. 11.

γνῶσις, 'knowledge' or 'intuition of Divine truth,' as in 1 Cor. xii. 8.

μακροθυμία, 'patience,' is joined with χρηστότης, 'kindness,' as in Gal. v. 22; so in Eph. iv. 2, μετὰ μακροθυμίας, ἀνεχύμενοι ἀλλήλων, and in Col. iii. 12, προύτητα, μακροθυμίαν.

(b) ἐν πνεύματι ἀγίψ, 'by the Spirit of God shown in various manifestations.' See 1 Cor. xii.

iv ἀγάπη ἀνυνοςοίτφ. The epithet (compare Rom. xii. 9) has determined the position of ἀγάπη in the sentence, as well as the consideration that it comes here with the 'Holy Spirit,' as the climax of the moral qualities which he enumerates.

The 'word of truth' (λόγψ ἀληθείας) is the 'word of simple unadulterated truth,' as in ii. 17, iv. 2. The 'power of God' (δυν. Θεοῦ) is the power visible in miracles (as in 1 Cor. ii. 4).

(3) In the third section the words are held together merely by the word διά, and by their antithetical form; διά in the case of διά τῶν δπλων expressing the means by which he made his way, διά without the article, in διά δοξης, διε. expressing the state through which he had to make his way. It is the same confusion of the two άριστερῶν, ⁸διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας, διὰ δυσφημίας καὶ εὐφημίας, ὡς πλάνοι καὶ ἀληθεῖς, ὡς ἀγνοούμενοι καὶ ἐποθνήσκοντες καὶ ίδοὺ ζώμεν, ὡς ἀποθνήσκοντες καὶ ίδοὺ ζώμεν, ὡς παιδευόμενοι καὶ μὴ θανατούμενοι, ¹⁰ ὡς λυπούμενοι ἀεὶ δὲ

s the left, by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good 9 report, as deceivers and true, as unknown and well known, as dying and behold we live, as chastoned and 10 not killed, as sorrowful yet alway rejoicing, as poor yet senses of διά, as in 1 Pet. iii. 20: ἐσώθησαν δι ὕζατος.

chi των δελων . . των δραστερικ, 'by the arms of the Christian's life of righteomases [the word taken in its wridest sense, as in taken in its wridest sense, as in sive, with the sword or spear in the right hand, and the shield in the left. This description of his weapons arises out of the mention of 'the power God' just before. The idea had been already present in a These fully developed in Egh. vi. 11, 12.

The words indicate (what we learn also from 1 Cor. iv. 12, λοιδορούμενοι — βλασφημούμενοι), that these false imputations constituted one of his severest trials.

(4) Hence the fourth section expands the words 'through evil report' into a long list of, the contrasts between his alleged and his real character, at once showing his difficulties and his triumph.

πλάνου, 'deceivers.' That such was alleged to be the Apostle's character is clear from ii. 17. iv. 2, and also from the expressions in the Clementines, Hom. ii. 17, 18, ixi. 35, where St. Paul is expressly described as a deceiver (πλάνος), and sowing error (πλάνογ): see p. 352.

καί in classical Greek would have been καίτοι οτ ἀλλ' ὅμως.

άγτοούμετοι, 'unknown,' i.e.
'obscure,' his real power not recognised (as in x. 10); yet amongst true believers recognised fully (as in iii. 2).

'Dying,' i. e. his énemies represented him as on the point of death, and so no more coming to Corinth; and yet, behold! at that very moment he is still full of life and energy. Compare iv. 10. παιδευύμενοι, 'chastised,' perhaps in allusion to the insimution that he was under God's wrath; but also under a sense that God was thus training him for his work: & losing the sense of 'quaci' and acquiring that of 'quippat'. The words seem to 'refer to Ps. crvii (czviii), 18: 'wate'swa' traitevel ut 5 kipsof, ut. Compare xii. 7—9 (the 'thorn in the flesh').

For the 'perpetual cheerfulness' (ἀεὶ δὲ χαίροντες) see
 Rom. v. 3, 'we boast in our afflictions;' and Philipp. iv. 4,

The 'poverty' alludes to the taunts against him for not receiving a maintenance; see note on xi. 7; 1 Cor. xi. 1. The 'riches' may refer to the conχαίροντες, ώς πτωχοὶ πολλούς δὲ πλουτίζοντες, ώς μηδέν έχοντες καὶ πάντα κατέχοντες.

making many rich, as having nothing and possessing all things.

tributions in viii. 9, but more generally to spiritual things, as in 1 Cor. iii. 22.

εχοντες, simply 'having;' καεχοντες, 'having to the full:'
see 1 Cor. vii. 29, 30.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, V. 11-VI. 10.

I have spoken of the awful time when every deed done in this mortal frame will be disclosed before that great tribunal, of which the judgment seat of the highest earthly judge is a faint figure. With this conviction, I try to win over and make friends of men; but it is from no human motives that I do so. My motives are disclosed to God now, as they will be hereafter at the judgment; and they are disclosed to you also, if you consult, each of you, his own innermost conscience. So I speak ; for even you thought before that I was commending myself to you, on my own authority. But this is not a self-commendation. This complete disclosure of all my heart to you enables you to vindicate me against those who rely on the testimony, not of their own hearts, but of commendatory letters, of lineal descent, of commanding presence. My disclosure before God shows that, if I am carried beyond the verge of soberness, it is in my zeal for Him; my disclosure before you shows that, if I restrain myself, and act as if under the dictates of worldly wisdom, it is in my regard for you. And the reason of this is, that, if you read my heart, you will find that I am pressed forward by one irresistible motive, the sense of the love which Christ has shown to all the world. That love drives me to the conclusion that if He, singly and alone, laid down His life in behalf of all, then all for whom He so laid down His life, have forfeited all claim to their lives. The very object of His laying down His life in their behalf was, that all who live through Him, all who are alive at all, should devote their lives to Him who, whether in His death or in the life to which He was raised, did all in their behalf.

A complete separation is thus made by the Christian faith between the present and the past. Whatever others may think, or I myself may once have thought, I cannot now rely on any outward or local association; even with Christ Himself my union now can never be, like that of my opponents, a lineal or natural connexion, but only moral and spiritual. And this is true, not only of myself, but of all. If any one has entered into fellowship with Christ, a new world has at once opened upon him: an old world has passed away, and he looks out as in the first beginning of creation, as in the days after the flood. as in the final dissolution of all things, on a new creation; and that new creation descends, not merely from Christ, but from God Himself, to whom the whole reconciliation is due, of which I am at once the chief example and the chief servant. For in that single life and death of Christ, was contained no less than a revelation of the Eternal God working out the reconciliation of a whole world to Himself. Therefore to them He forbears to impute their offences; to me He entrusted the utterance of the message of reconciliation, and in the fulfilment of this trust I address this message to you. I come as an ambassador from Christ. I come as the instrument through which God exhorts you to come to Him; and the words which I utter as from Him are, 'Be reconciled to God.' The object for which He made the Sinless One pass through the world of sin was, that I, and you with me, might, through and with that Sinless Onc, be drawn into the world of righteousness. In pursuance of this exhortation, I add my efforts to the efforts of God, and exhort you not to allow the goodness which He has shown to you to pass away without effect. Receive Him; for He, as we read in the Prophet Isaiah, has received and heard and blessed you : and the time of this reception and salvation is this very present moment. This mission, of which I am the instrument, must be above all reproach: it must rest, not on commendations from others, but on the commendations of my own deeds. It must be commended by the endurance of calamities which press me closer and closer in on every side, by flagellations, imprisonments, wild uproars: by toils and sleepless nights and hunger: by the moral force of pure character and deep knowledge, the winning effects of patience and gentleness, the holiness of the Spirit, and the reality of the Spirit's greatest gift, Love: by the preternatural power of miracles, and the simple utterance of truth; through the shield and sword of righteousness which God has placed in my hands, through all the obstacles of misunderstanding and suspicion, for in spite of my dishonesty I am honest, in spite of my obscurity I am famous, in spite of my death I live, in spite of chastisement I prosper, in spite of sorrow I am cheerful, in spite of poverty I am rich, in spite of destitution I am powerful.

THE RECONCILIATION OF THE WORLD BY CHRIST'S DEATH.

As the previous Section of the Epistle has in all ages ministered to the wants and feelings of individuals, so this Section has ministered to the wants and feelings of the Church at large. It contains one of the clearest statements in the Apostle's writings of the effect of Christ's death. That effect is here described to be The Reconciliation of Man to God. In later times this has been expressed in various modes, some of which have fallen below, some gone beyond, the Apostle's statement. The best mode of exhibiting a subject so complicated and so profound is, to confine ourselves to the Scriptural view, and to observe the precise force and intention of the words as originally written. Their sense may be thus summed up : - The world had been in a long estrangement from God: His dealings had awakened in the heart of mankind a sense of hostility and offence. Suddenly a great manifestation of Divine love was announced, which wherever the tidings were brought awakened feelings never known before. These feelings resolved themselves into two kinds: - The present was felt to be parted from the past, by a separation so complete as to be compared by the Apostle to a new creation. The whole world, not Jewish only but Gentile, was called, after long absence, to return to God.2

The Jewish nation was by this one event delivered from the yoke of the Levitical ritual. So, even in times of great human sorrow or joy, the burdensome ceremonial of social life is dissolved by a stronger and more universal sense of brotherhood:

'If ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why are ye subject to ordinances—"Touch not, taste not, handle not?"" (Col. ii. 20, 21.) The Jewish and Gentile classes were reconciled to each other, by the sight of this common love exhibited by Christ to both: 'He hath broken down the middle well of partition, having abolished in its flesh the entity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of teain one new man, so making peace, and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the Cross, having slain the enmity thereby' (Eph. ii. 14--16).

And finally, the great mass of the Gentile world were delivered by this Divine act of love from the slavery of the sins of their age, and country, and long contaminations of false morals and worship: 'You that were sometimes alienated and nemite in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconcited in the body of His flesh through death' (Col. i. 21); 'You hath He quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins' (Eph. ii. 1).

So far as this deliverance was not effected, the reconciliation was not complete; so far as the reconciliation was completed, the result was that both in Judaism and Heathenism, in nations and in individuals, 'old things passed away, all things bearing new,' In Christ's death Christians die; in Christ's life, Christians live

This is the substance of the Apostle's message. His statement of it is important in many ways.

I. It explains how it was that the proclamation of the glad tidings of Christ's death fell to the lot, beyond all others, of the Apostle of the Gentiles. To us, the Connection idea of the 'stonement' or 'reconciliation' of man to with the idea of the admission of the Gentiles, of the have ordinarily no connexion with each other. To St. Paul, the two ideas were inseparable. He could not imagine the death of Christ to involve less universal consequences than the reconciliation of the whole world. A well-known Christian poet of later times has beautifully said of the Redemption with regard to the previous generations of mankind—

Now of thy love we deem
As of an ocean vast,
Rising in tides against the stream
Of ages gone and past.

The Apostle's statement of it is equally true of all the existing, and, if he looked so far, of all the future generations of the world.

II. The Apostle's view of Christ's death—as throughout the New Testament—represents it as the effect and Effect of manifestation, not of the wrath or vengeance of God, the voice but of His love; of the love not only of Christ, but, of God, in the most emphatic sense, of God also. It was not God that was reconciled, and man that was thereby induced to love; but God that showed His love, and thereby brought back mankind from its long enmity with Him. It was not God that was to be appeased, and Christ that was to appease, but 'God was in Christ.' Man is not described as seeking after God, but God as seeking after man: "Be ye reconciled to God." He says not (thus writes Chrysostom on this passage), "reconcile God to yourself," for it is not God who is an enemy to you, but you who are enemies with God."

There was no contradiction or separation in the Divine Act. The Apostolical and the Evangelical representations exactly coincide. As here, so in the parable of the Prodigal Son, nothing intervenes between the loving father and the returning penitent. In the act of Redemption, above all others, it is true that 'Christ and the Father are One.' In the Apostle's own Epistles the love and forgiveness which the Death of Christ expresses is equally ascribed to God and to Christ-'God imputing not their trespasses to them' (2 Cor. v. 19); 'Christ . . . having forgiven you all trespasses' (Col. ii. 13; 'God in Christ (ἐν χριστῷ) forgave you' (Eph. iv. 32). In many passages of Scripture we hear of 'the wrath' and 'the indignation' of God against sin. But the frequency of these passages makes it the more remarkable that the expression never or hardly ever occurs in connexion with the death of Christ.1 'God,' 'the love of God,' 'the righteousness of God,' is always the source to which this event is ascribed: Rom. v. 8, 'God commendeth His own love towards us; 'Rom. viii. 31, 32, 'God spared not His own Son;' John iii. 16, 'God [not 'so hated,' but] so loved the world:' Rom. iii. 24, 'Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith, in His blood, to declare [not 'His wrath,' but | His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through [not 'the vengeance,' but] the forbearance of God.' 'Love' and 'righteousness' are joined, not as in opposition, but as in harmony with each other: 'that He might be just and the justifier.' The 'Reconciliation' and 'Propitiation' are not brought to Him, but are given by Him. Humble as in the eyes of the contemporary world that solitary Death might seem, it expressed and implied nothing less than the Universal Love of the Almighty.

In the one apparent exception (Rom. v. 9), 'We shall be saved from wrath through Him,' the consaved by his life.'

text immediately corrects any such erroneous impression: 'We shall be

III. It is to be observed how great a stress the Apostle lays on the solitary and unique nature of Christ's death,—'One for 'all.' Partly, no doubt, this arises in buman from the desire to exhibit the unity of mankind in bluezy. The redemption—'Not two Christs, but one allike for Jew and 'Gentile.' But partly also it arises from the consciousness of the preeminent greatness of that death above all others, and from the wish to bring out strongly the fact that this one single event was to extend its influence to the whole range of humanity: 'If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto Mo,' John xii. 32. There is no misgiving as to the vastness of the effects.

This falls in with the Apostle's stedfast declarations that the death of Christ was the turning point in the history of the human race. Had he foreseen distinctly that a new rae would be dated from that time; that a new society, philosophy, literature, moral code, would grow up from it over continents of which he knew not the existence; he could not have more strongly expressed his sense of the greatness of the event than in what is here said of 'old things passing away, and all things becoming 'new.' We regard Christiantly as belonging to the old age and ancient institutions; he regarded it as the seed and spring-time of a new world. His eye is fixed on the future. He is the Prophet of what is to come no less than the Apostle of what has been.

IV. We here see clearly the cause to which the Apostle ascribes his great exertions:—'The love of Christ Motive constrained him.' Of the reality of that Love his of the own life was and is the best proof and explanation. Apostle There had appeared on the earth (so we must emdeavour to conceive his feelings) an exhibition of love such as had never before been seen. Whatever influence the force of example or the sentiment of gratitude brings to bear upon the human mind, was now in the highest degree exercised upon the mind of St. Paul. To follow where Christ had gone before, to requite His love by earrying out His work, became the ^{&#}x27;The free gift of One man;' Rom. vi. 10, 'He died unto sin once.'

² Compare 1 Tim. ii. 5, 'One God who will have all to be saved . . . one Mediator . . . who gave Himself a ransom for all; Eph. ii. 14, 16, Who hath made both one . . . of twain one new man . . . that He might reconcile both to God in one body on the Cross."

⁸ v. 16, 17.

Apostle's master passion. The great event of Christ's death rose up as the background of his life. From that single point every thought diverged. The love which Christ had shown to him became the atmosphere in which he lived and moved and had his being. What he felt has been continued afterwards. We know that in the events of the Exodus we have found the first origin of the idea of the severe Law of an Unseen God. which became henceforward the inalienable possession of the Jewish race. So, but in a far higher sense, the Love of Christ roused in the minds of His disciples a sense of the reality and the power of love, which became the spring of a new life to them, and through them to the world; and, amidst manifold weakness and error, Roman Catholic and Protestant alike, in the zeal of Missionaries, in the benevolence of Sisters of Mercy, in the service of the poor and ignorant and afflicted, there have been thousands of acts and lives of self-devotion, which can be traced up to nothing lower than this self-same motive.

V. One portion of the Apostle's statement brings out more clearly than any other passage in Scripture the rerelation to lation of Christ to sin in the work of redemption: 'Him who knew not sin He made sin for us, that we might become the righteousness of God in 'Him,' To a certain extent the strength of the expressions is due to the antithetical form in which the Apostle so often couches his conviction of the entire sympathy and communion between Christ and His people, as in the passage, 'For your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might become 2rich.' But as there was a true sense in which He was poor for the sake of man, so also there is a true sense in which He became sin for the sake of man. To interpret the phrase as meaning merely, 'He underwent the punishment due to sin.' in the parallel passage would be no less inadequate than it would be to say that it only meant, 'He underwent the sufferings incident to poverty.' The punishment and the suffering of sin is doubtless included; but the whole meaning must be analogous to that in which St. Matthew takes the corresponding phrase of the Prophet- Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses' (Matth. viii, 17). As by His contact with human suffering in His mission of healing, He also suffered-so by His contact with human sin in His mission of redemption, He also, so far as His perfect sinleasness allowed, became conscious of sin. The sin of man, in its literal sense, is as much below the sinleasness of Christ, as the right-cousness of God, in its literal sense, is above the unrightcousness of man. But still in each clause of the sentence as near an approximation is implied as the nature of the case permits. We, in Christ, are to share in God's rightcousness, to be perfect as He is perfect, to be pure as He is pure; yet still compassed about with human infirmities, and feeling that we are unprofitable servants. Christ in our behalf is to descend into the abyss of sin, enduring its evil, assailed by its temptations, suffering from its consequences, but without partaking of it, and feeling it the more keenly from the very fact of His entire elevation above it.

In such a subject, it would be presumptuous to seek illustrations from any other source than the express facts of the Gospel history. Two striking illustrations of this kind may be given in the words of two modern writers; which, though they may appear to some exaggerated, to others inadequate, will serve to give the general image wrapped up in the Apostle's language:—

'There was a time in our Lord's life on earth, we are told, when a man met Him, "coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, whom no man could bind; no, not with chains." That man was "possessed by an unclean spirit." Of all men upon earth you would say that he was the one between whom and the pure and holy Jesus there must have existed the most intense repugnance. What Pharisee, who shrank from the filthy and loathsome words of that maniac, could have experienced one thousandth part of the inward and intense loathing which Christ must have experienced for the mind that those words expressed? For it was into that He looked-that which He understood; that which in His inmost being He must have felt, which must have given Him a shock such as it could have given to no other. He must have felt the wickedness of that man in His innost being. He must have been conscious of it as no one else was or could be. Now, if we have ever had the consciousness, in a very slight degree, of evil in another man, has it not been, up to that degree, as if the evil was in ourselves? Suppose the offender were a friend, or a brother, or child, has not this sense of personal shame, of the evil being ours, been proportionably stronger and more acute? However much we might feel ourselves called upon to act as judges, this perception still remained. It was not evaded even by the anger, the selfish anger and impatience of an injury done to us, which most probably mingled with and corrupted the purer indignation and sorrow. Most of us confess with humiliation how little we have had of this living consciousness of other men's impurity, or injustice, or falsehood, or baseness. But . . . we know that we should be better if we had more of it. In our best moments we admire with a faint admiration-in our worst we envy with a wicked envy-those in whom we can trace most of it. And we have had just enough of it to be certain that it belongs to the truest and most radical parts of the character, not to its transient impulses. Suppose, then, this carried to its highest pitch, cannot you, at a great distance, apprehend that Christ may have entered into that poor maniac's spirit, may have had the most inward realisation of it, not because it was like what was in Himself, but because it was utterly and entirely unlike? And yet this could not have been, unless He had the most perfect and thorough sympathy with the man whose nature was transformed into the likeness of a brute, whose spirit had acquired the image of a devil. Does the coexistence of His sympathy and of His antipathy perplex you? Oh! Ask yourselves which you could bear to be away, which you could bear to be weaker than the other. Ask yourselves whether they must not dwell together in their highest degree, in their fullest power, in any one of whom you could say, "He is perfect; he is the standard of excellence; in him there is the full image of God." Diminish by one atom the loathing and horror, or the fellowship and sympathy; and by that atom you lower the character; you are sure that you have brought it nearer to the level of your own low imaginations, that you have made it less like the Being who would raise you towards Himself. No other words but the Apostle's words, "He was made sin," could give us an impression of the sense, the taste, the anguish of sin, which St. Paul would have us think of as realised by the Son of God-a sense, a taste, an anguish of sin, which are not only compatible with the not knowing sin, but would be impossible in any one who did know it. The awful isolation of the words "Ye shall leave me alone," united with the craving for human affection, "With desire I have desired to eat the passover with you "the agony of the spirit which is fettered, in the words, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me," with the submission of the words, "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt;" above all, the existing for a moment even of that one infinite comfort-" Yet I am not alone. because the Father is with me," when the cry was heard, "My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken me? "-these revelations tell us a little of what it was to be made Sin: if we get the least glimpse into them, we shall not desire that the Apostle could have spoken less boldly if he was to speak the truth.'

In language less philosophical, and hardly warranted by the recorded facts of Scripture, but so powerfully expressed as to give a more distinct and lively impression of the idea intended to be conveyed, the same truth is given by another very different theologian, in a description of the Agony of Gethsemane:—

'There, in that most awful hour, knelt the Saviour of the world, opening His arms, baring His breast, sinless as He was, to the assault of His foe,-of a foe whose breath was a pestilence, and whose embrace was an agony. There He knelt, motionless and still, while the vile and horrible fiend clad His spirit in a robe steeped in all that is heinous and loathful in human crime, which clung close round His heart, and filled His conscience, and forced its way into every sense and nore of His mind, and spread over Him like a moral leprosy, till He almost felt Himself that which He never could be, and which His foe would fain have made Him be. His ears they ring with sounds of revelry and of strife; and His breast is frozen with avarice, and cruelty, and unbelief: and His very memory is laden with every sin which has been committed since the Fall, in all regions of the earthwith the pride of the old giants, and the lust of the five cities, and the obduracy of Egypt, and the ambition of Babel, and the unthankfulness and scorn of Israel. O who does not know the misery of a haunting thought, which comes again and again, in spite of rejection, to annoy if it cannot seduce? or of some odious and sickening imagination, in no sense one's own, but forced upon the mind from without? or of evil knowledge, gained with or without a man's fault, but which he would give a great price to be rid of for ever? And these gather round Thee, Blessed Lord, in millions now: they come in troops, more numerous than the locust or the palmer-worm, or the plagues of hail, and flies, and frogs that were sent against Pharaoh. Of the living and of the dead, and of the unborn, of the lost and of the saved, of Thine own people and of strangers, of sinners and of saints, all sins are there. It is the long history of a world, and God alone can bear the load of it: -hopes blighted, yows broken, lights quenched, warnings scorned, opportunities lost; the innocent betrayed, the young hardened, the penitent relapsing, the just overcome, the aged failing; the sophistry of misbelief, the wilfulness of passion, the tyranny of habit, the canker of remorse, the wasting of care, the anguish of shame, the pining of disappointment, the sickness of despair :- such cruel, such pitiable spectacles, such heart-rending, revolting, detestable, maddening scenes; nay, the haggard faces, the convulsed lips, the flushed cheeks, the dark brow of the willing victim of rebellion, they are all before Him now-they are upon Him, and in Him. They are with Him instead of that ineffible peace which has inhabited His soul since the moment of His conception. They are upon Him, they are all but His own.'

THE ARRIVAL OF TITUS, Chap. VI. 11-13, VII. 2-16.
INTERCOURSE WITH HEATHEN, Chap. VI. 14-VII. 1.

11 Τὸ στόμα ἡμῶν ἀνέφγεν πρὸς ὑμας, Κορίνθιοι, ἡ καρδία

11 'Our mouth is open unto you, Corinthians', our heart is

11. In the previous verses, the long train of digressions which had broken in upon the Apostle's argument in ii. 16, had been gradually drawing to a conclu-The reconciliation with God (v. 19-21) awakens the thought of their reconciliation with him; and the description of his own sufferings (vi. 4-10) prepares the way for throwing himself upon their sympathy. Here, accordingly, the under-current of deep affection which had been from time to time appearing above the surface in iii. 2, 3, iv. 12-15, v. 13, now bursts into sight, following almost in the same words as the similar passage in 1 Cor. iv. 14-16, on the account of his victory through sufferings. (Compare especially, 'I speak to you as to children,' in verse 13, with 1 Cor. iv. 14.) The veil, which had hitherto hung between the Apostle and his readers, is suddenly rolled away: we see them standing face to face; his utterance, so long choked by the counter-currents of contending emotions, is now, for the first time, clear and distinct ('our mouth is opened'), and for the only time in the two Epistles he calls them by their name (' Corinthians'). With the loosing of his tongue his heart opens also, that heart, which was 'the heart of the world,' opens to receive in its large capacities his thousand friends ('our heart is enlarged'): whatere narrowness of affection, whaterer check to the yearnings of soul between them might coist, was not on his part, but on theirs ('ye are not straitened in us'); the only reward which he claimed for his patternal tenderness was a greater openness from them, his spiritual children ('for a recompense, I speak as unto children, be ye also enlarged').

άτεργε expresses the present tense (as in 1 Cor. xvi. 9), and is thus distinct from ‡νουξειρεν το στόμα ἡμῶν, 'we spoke to you; 'whereas πετλάτενται expresses the perfect; the opening of his mouth follows upon the opening of his heart, 'Whilst my words find free utterance, my heart has meanwhile been enlarged.' (Comp. Matt. xii. 64 · Opening of the heart the mouth of the perfect of the heart the mouth of speaketh;' and Romans mouth. x. 10. 'with the heart man believeth, with the mouth confession is made.') The phrase 'to open the mouth' is in itself an ordinary expression for 'to speak' (as in the law, and la

ήμῶν πεπλάτυνται: 13 οὐ στενοχωρεῖσθε ἐν ἡμῶν, στενοχωρεῖσθε δὲ ἐν τοῖς σπλάχχνοις ὑμῶν: 12 τὴν δὲ αἰτην ἀντιμισθίαν (ὡς τέκνοις λέγω) πλατύνθητε καὶ ὑμεῖς. 11 μη γίνεσθε ἐτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις: τίς γαρ μετοχή

12 enlarged: 'ye are not straitened in us, but ye are strait-13 ened in your own 'inward affections': now for a recompence in the same, (I 'say it' as to children,) be ye also enlarged.

14 Bc ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers:

λόγος, έν ἀνοίξει τοῦ στόματός μου, έν παρρησία γνωρίσαι το μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. In like manner the use of the

'Enlargement of the heart.' expression ἡ καρδία πεκλάτωνται was probably suggested by its frequent occurrence in the

O. T. (LXX.) for 'joy,'-as in Ps. cxix. 32; joy being in this case the occasion out of which the enlargement of heart procceded. So in the Arabian Nights, 'my heart is dilated,' is the constant expression for sensations of joy. But its actual meaning here is shown by the succeeding expressions (στενογωρείσθε in 12, and xwphoure in vii. 2) to be not simply joy, but wideness of sympathy and intelligence, as opposed to narrowmindedness both moral and intellectual: in which sense the corresponding Hebrew phrase is used of Solomon, 1 Kings, iv. 29, who had 'largeness (רֹחָב) of heart like the sand that is on the sea-shore.'

Koρίνθιοι. This address by name is used besides only in Gal. iii. 1, ω ἀνόητοι Γαλάται, and in Phil. iv. 15, Φιλιππήσιοι.

12. σπλάγχνα. This passage is remarkable as speaking of the affections under the double metaphor of 'the 'heart' and 'the bowels,' of which the latter has, in modern languages, been entirely superseded by the former. Comp. a like use of σπλάγχνα and κέαρ in Æsch. Agam. 996, 999. σπλάγχνα expresses physically the whole interior structure of man, including specially the heart and liver as opposed to what are now technically called the bowels (εντερα). See Æsch. Agam. 1221, where the two are distinguished. In classical Greek the word is used for the feelings generally; and in Hebrew, from the root 'vacham, 'to foster tenderly,' is used for 'tender pity.' Hence its use in St. Paul: compare vii. 15; Phil. i. 8; Philem. 7, 12, 20. τήν αὐτήν άντιμισθίαν=τὸ αὐτὸ.

δ ἐστιν ἀντιμισθία, πλατύνθητε, 'open your hearts to the same love that I show to you, which love is my reward.'

14. We now arrive at a remarkable dislocation of the argument. On the one hand, the passionate appeal, begun in vi. 11, 12, 18, is continued, without even the appearance of an interruption, in vii. 2, where the words χωρόφεατ ημάς ('make room for us') are evidently the prolongation of the metaphor cxpessed in vi. 12, 13, by στεσχωρείσθε and πλατύθητ. On the other hand, the intervening passage vi. 14—vii. 1, whilst incoheres perfectly with itself, ihas δικαιοσύνη καὶ ἀνομία, "ή τίς κοινωνία φωτὶ πρὸς σκότος; ¹⁵τίς δὲ συμφώνησις "χριστοῦ πρὸς βελίαλ, ή τίς for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteous-15 ness? Aor what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath no connexion with the immediate context either before or after. It relates, not to the Apostle's dealings with the Corinthian Church in opponents, but entirely to their connexion with the heathen world, and, as would appear from the phrases used in vi. 16—vii. 1, especially to their contamination by the sensual rites and practices of heathenism.

This disconnexion with the context is the more remarkable, even in so abrupt an Epistle as this, because the subject, here treated is altogether out of harmony with the Apostle's present line of argument. It is a severe warning suddenly introduced into a strain of affectionate entreaty, a strong injunction to separation in the midst of exhortation to union, even with the offender who had been guilty of the very sins which he here denounces. As the agreement of the MSS, and the internal evidence of the style both forbid the supposition of interpolation, three possible hypotheses suggest themselves: (1) That heathen sensuality is the sin alluded to in vi. 1, a view slightly confirmed by the use of the word dicatogura both in vi. 14, v. 21, and vi. 7, as well as by the strong expression in vi. 1, μή εἰς κενόν τῆν χάριν δέ-Eaσθαι. If this be so, the renewal of the subject in vi. 14 might be explained, either by the supposition of a resumption of an interrupted argument (as, in a less striking manner, in the digression iv. 2-6), or by the conjecture of an actual transposition of the text, vi. 14-vii. 1, intervening between vi. 2 and vi. 3, and the participles of vi. 3-10, δεδωτες, συνιστώτες, &c., being continuations of έπετλοῦντες in vii. 1.

tions of ferenkeiver in vii. 1.

(2) That the passage really belongs to the First Epistle, with which its whole tone is in far closer accordance than with this. In that case, there would be a natural opening for it before 1 Cor.

2, where the allusion typoda more intelligible, if it could be supposed to refer to some such direct warning as is contained in this passage, rather than to the very general address in 1 Cor.

7, 8.

(3) That the continuous flow of the first part of the Epistle comes to an end at vi. 13, the impassioned appeal to the Corinthians immediately following on the account of his own sufferings; that then (for some reason unknown to us) he was interrupted in the course of his history, and resumed it in vii. 2 with ywongare huac ('receive us'), so as to carry on both the thought with which he had last been occupied, and also the general subject left in ii. 16. The indications of some such pause between vii. 2-16 and the previous chapters are: (a) The repetitions, in some cases almost verbal, of expressions and thoughts μερὶς ° πιστῷ μετὰ ἀπίστου ; 16 τίς δὲ συγκατάθεσις ναῷ * Lochm. Ed. 1. ποτοῦ.

16 hc that believeth with an "unbeliever? and what agreement in the earlier part, which would be more natural if an interval or interruption of some kind had intervened, e. g. γωρήσατε ήμας, vii. compared with πλατύνθητε, vi. 13; οὐδεμίαν ἔσχηκεν ἄνεσιν in vii. 5, with οὐς ἔσχηςα ἄνεσιν in ii. 13. (b) The change from the plural to the singular first person, which begins in vii. 3, and continues (intermixed with the other) through the remainder of the Epistle. (c) The expression προείρηκα in vii. 3, which is more natural if referring to what might be viewed as a distinct portion of the Epistle. In that case, the insertion of the paragraph vi. 14-vii. 1. might be caused by a reflection in the interval between the two parts of the Epistle, venting itself on the moment in this short warning.

14—16. ἐτεροζυγεῖν is formed 'Unequally ζυνος in Lev. xix. 19, yoked.' (LXX.) = 'an animal of different breed.'

Hence the verb, which is not cleswhere used, must mean (not 'to be unevenly yoked, one bearing the yoke more heavily than the other,' but) 'to be joined with a wrong yokefellow,' as ôpo@vyetu's 'to be joined with a right yoke-fellow.'

In the five contrasts which follow, there is a continual transition from ness and lawlesances, the abstract to the concrete. 'Righteousness' and 'lawlesances' (Eccaparin and droyale) are opposed, as the two moral aspects of Christianity and beatherism generally.

reference, as in this place, to sins of sensuality. Light. and 'darkness' (per Lightend and serice), point still darkness.* more directly to the deeds of shame which shun the light, as in Rom. xiii. 12, 13, and more especially in Eph. v. 7–13. In the antitheses between 'Christ and Belial,' he passes from abstractions to persons. The word is variously written 'Be-

Comp. Rom. vi. 19 (with a special lial' (בְּיִעְל = worthless), 'Belial.' which is in no uncial MS...

or 'Beliar' (which is in B. C. J., according to the Syriac corruption, as 'Sychar' for 'Sychem, in John iv. 5), or Beliam and Belian (D. E. K.), or Beliab (F. G.). It is here employed (like Beelzebub in Matt. xii. 24), merely as a synonyme for Satan. It corresponds in Hebrew to the same notion of wickedness as is expressed in Greek by πονηρός, in Latin by nequam, in old English by naughty, and is therefore the most contemptuous name for 'evil,' or the 'evil spirit,' the 'Little Master' in Sintram (see Arnold's Life, p. 684), as contrasted with Satan in the Paradise Lost. Our associations with the word are coloured by the attributes ascribed to 'Belial' by Milton ('Par. Lost,' Bk. 11.). which he founds on the few and exceptional passages in the Old Testament (Jud. xix. 22, xx. 13; 1 Sam. ii. 12), where the word is used for sensual profligacy. The fullest description of a man of Belial in the O. Test. is in Proverbs vi. 12-15: 'A naughty θεοῦ μετὰ εἰδώλων; "ήμεις γὰρ ναὸς θεοῦ "ἐσμὲν ζῶντος, καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ θεὸς ὅτι ἐνοικήσω ἐν αὐτοῖς καὶ ἐμπερι-· ôµeîs, l êove.

hath the temple of God with idols? for have are the temple of the living God, as God raid that 'I will dwell in person ("Adam-Belial"), a wicked man, walketh with a froward mouth, '&c. It never occurs as a proper name in the LXX, but is found once in Theodotion's Version (Jud. xix. 22), and frequently in the Apocryphal Teatament of the Twelve Patriarcha. (See Fabricius, Codex Pseudepigr. N. T. i. 587, 619.)

The contrast of 'heathen' and 'Believer and unbeliever,' and ἄπιστος (compare 1 Cor. xiv. 22), here: Irings the opposition more closely home; and in the antithesis of 'God's temple' and 'an idol,' he gives the ground for this contrast, the society of bolievers being regarded as 'the temple' (according to 1 Cor. iii. 16, vi. 19), and the 'idol' being suggested by the natural association of the sins of sensuality with the idolatrous rites.

 ναὸς Θεοῦ. He insists on this the more, because the thought of the Christian community as God's temple is especially opposed to lis desceration by mostly to list desceration by mostly to list desceration by mostly the property of the community of the community of the community of God as opposed to the dead descent of the comp. 2 Thess. i. 9), and the living, as opposed to the dead stones of the temple (comp. 1 Pet. In the community of t

16. ὑμεῖς ἐστέ, Rec., Text with C. D³. E. F. G. K. ἡμεῖς ἐσμέν, Lachmann, with B. D¹. J. The confusion is occasioned by the likeness of pronunciation.

likeness of pronunciation.

The first quotation which follows is from Lev. xxvi.

 11, 12: καὶ Θήσω τὴν Threefold σκήνην μου ἐν ὑμῖν καὶ quotation.
 οὐ βὸἐλύἔεται ἡ ψυγή μου

θμάς καὶ έμπεριπατήσω έν ύμιν, καὶ ἔσομαι ύμῶν θεὸς καὶ ύμεῖς ἔσεσθέ μοι λαός. The verbal likeness is very great, especially in the word έμπεριπατήσω, not elsewhere occurring in the New Testament. Θήσω την σκήνην μου is changed to ένοικήσω. probably with the view of avoiding the collision of metaphors, which would else result between the Tabernacle and Temple; and the second person is changed to the third, perhaps from a reminiscence of the parallel passage in Ezekiel xxxvii. 26: iorai n κατασκήνωσίς μου έν αύτοῖς, καὶ ξσομαι αὐτοῖς Θεὸς καὶ αὐτοῖ μοι ξσονται λαός.

The next quotation is from πατήσω, καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτῶν θεός, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔσονταί *μου λαός. "Ροίο *ἐξέλθατε ἐκ μέσου αὐτῶν καὶ ἀφορισθητε, Αόγει κήρος, καὶ ἀκαθάρτου μη ἀπτεσθε· κάγὰ εἰσ-δέξομαι ὑμᾶς, ¹⁸ καὶ ἔσομαι ὑμᾶν εἰς πατέρα, καὶ ὑμαῖς ἔσεσθε μοι εἰς νίοὺς καὶ θυγατέρας, λέγει κύριος παιτοκράτωρ. VII. ταὐτας οῦν ἔχοντες τὰς ἐπαγγελιας, ἀγαπη-κράτωρ. VII. ταὐτας οῦν ἔχοντες τὰς ἐπαγγελιας, ἀγαπη» μοί,

them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they trshall be my people. Wherefore come out from 'the milet' of them and be separate, saith the Lord, and touch not is the unclean thing: and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, I saith the Lord Almighty! VII. Having therefore these pro-

Isa. lii. 11, 12, referring to the return from Babylon: amograns. άπόστητε, έξέλθατε έκειθεν καὶ άκαθάρτου μη άψησθε, έξέλθετε έκ μέσου αὐτῆς, ἀφορίσθητε οἱ φέροντες τα σκεύη κυρίου, ὅτι οὐ μετά ταραχής έξελεύσεσθε, οὐδὲ φυγή πορεύσεσθε προπορεύσεται γάρ πρότερος υμών κύριος καὶ ὁ ἐπισυνάγων υμάς θεὸς Ίσραήλ. The first part contains no further change than is required by the change of the special reference to Babylon into a general reference to the heathen, the words ακαθάρτου μη άψησθε being exactly the same in both. In the second part the detailed description of the return, as unsuitable to the present application, is exchanged for the general phrase κάγω εἰσδέξομαι ύμᾶς, again from a corresponding passage in Ezekiel (xx. 34), sal eloδέξομαι ύμᾶς.

The last quotation is from 2 Sam. vii. 14: tyb longate drip ele warfow and advice terral µos ele vior. Here again there is no further change than is necessary to transfer the application from David to believers generally. The introduction of Seyarfore ('daughters,' from Isainh xliii.

6) shows how strongly present to the Apostle was the extension of the Divine blessings to every individual of the society. Compare Acts ii. 17, 18 ('your sons and your daughters, your servants and hand-maideus').

b εξέλθετε.

In each case the distinct question is marked by the mode of reference. In the first, easily else yellow for the first by 30 feet from to tryle sipue. So ship sipue, in Lev. Xxvi 1. In the second, Aryte sipue refers to the same words, in Isa. Iii. 3, 4, 5, In the third, Aryte sipue refers to the same words, in Isa. Iii. 3, 4 feet simply refers to the same words. In the third, Aryte sipue concept refers to the same words. In 2 Sam. vii. 8, which is the capt in the Apocalyse, never occurs in the Apocalyse, never occurs in the N.T.

VII. 1. From this stern warning he descends into an affectionate entreaty. The word dyargraf, 'beloved,' seems to be introduced with this intendent. It occurs nowhere else in this epistle, except in a somewhat similar context, xii. 19. Compare its like occurrence in 1 cor. xv. 58, x. 14.

τάς ἐπαγγελίας, the promises contained in the foregoing quotations. τοί, καθαρίσωμεν έαυτοὺς ἀπὸ παντὸς μολυσμοῦ σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος, ἐπιτελοῦντες άγιωσύνην ἐν φόβω θεοῦ.

²Χωρήσατε ήμας οὐδένα ήδικήσαμεν, οὐδένα ἐφθείραμεν, οὐδένα ἐπλεονεκτήσαμεν. ⁸ πρὸς κατάκρισιν οὐ

Οὐ πρὸς κατάκρισω λόγω, mises, ° beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of ° flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

2 "Make room for us: we "wronged no "one, we "corrupted sno "one, we "defrauded no "one. I "say not this to con-καθαρίσωμεν, as becomes those who are the Temple of God. Compare 1 Cor. vi. 19.

παντός μολυσμοῦ, 'not this or that particular pollution, but all;' not ceremonial and outward only, but inward and spiritual pollution also. Compare 1 Pet. iii. 21, on baptism.

έπιτελοῦντες, 'by completing.' αγιωσύνην. The word is used in connexion with the preceding phrases of 'purification' and 'pollution.' But as these phrases in Christian language acquire a moral and spiritual, instead of a ceremonial meaning, so also does 'holiness.' Although the adjective ávoc has a more general signification, yet the substantive, whether expressed under the form of ayuaguos, as in Rom. vi 19, 22; 1 Thess. iv. 3, 4, 7; 1 Tim, ii. 15; Heb. xii. 14, and 1 Thess. iii. 13, or αγιωσύνη as here, especially implies purity as opposed to sensual defilement. έν φόδω θεού. 'In the atmosphere of awe and fear.' Compare the same connexion of ideas in 1 Pet. iii. 15, 'sanctify (ἀγιάσσατε) the Lord God in your hearts . . . with gentleness and fear' (φόδου).

2. See note on vi. 14. The

See note on vi. 14. The argument there interrupted is now resumed. χωρήσατε, 'make room for us,' =πλατύνθητε in vi. 13. Compare Matt. xix. 11, for this use of YWOELV. οὐδένα ήδικήσαμεν οὐδένα έπλεονεκτήσαμεν. These words relate probably to the charges brought against him, which, if true, would have destroved the confidence between himself and his readers, and the tense seems to refer them to some precise time in the past. The first is general; the two next, particular. ἐπλεονεκτήσαμεν alludes to the charge noticed in xii. 16, that he extorted money from them. Compare also ii. 17 (καπηλεύοντες). What can be intended by έφθείραμεν, it is difficult to say. But compared with τὰ κρυπτά τῆς αἰσχύνης, in iv. 2, and acabapsias in 1 Thess. iv. 6, there seems no reason why it should not bear its natural meaning (as in 1 Cor. xv. 33) of the pollution of sensual sins, against which, either as imputed to himself, or as practised by his opponents, the Apostle protests. If not, it must be simply 'injured,' or 'ruined,' as in 1 Cor. iii. 17, and with έπλεονεκτήσαμεν. 'defrauded,' is an explanation of ηδικήσαμεν.

For a similar disclaimer of sinister motives, see Acts xx. 33. λόγω προείρηκα γλη ότι ἐν ταις καρδίαις ήμων ἐστὰ εἰς τό συναποθανεῖν καὶ ἐσυνίξην. ⁴πολλή μοι παρρησία πρὸς ὑμῶς, πολλή μοι καύχησις ὑπὰρ ὑμῶν πεπλήρωμαι τῆ παρακλήσει, πετρπερισσεύομαι τῆ χαρᾶ ἐπὶ πάση τῆ θλύψει ἡμῶν. ἐκαὶ γὰρ ἐλθότστω ἡμῶν εἰς Μακεdemn you: for I have said before that ye are in our shearts to die and live with you. Great is my 'plainness of speech toward you, great is my 'boasting of you: I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our 5'trouble. For when we were come into Macelonia our

· συζήσ

'It is not to condemn you that I speak.' This, like the similar phrase, 1 Cor. iv. 14, refers not so much to what he has actually expressed, as to the feeling in his mind.

προείρηκα γάρ, 'You cannot doubt my love; for I have before said in this Epistle, that you are deep in my heart,' referring to iii. 2, v. 12, vi. 13.

εἰς τὰ συναποθανεῖν καὶ συνζῆν.
For this close sympathy of life and death between himself and the Corinthiaus, compare i. 5, 6,
vi. 12.

Possibly there may be an allusion to some proverbial expression as in Hornee: "Tecum vivere anome, tecum obeam libens," and to the passionate feeling of the time which induced friends (as Horace for Mecenna), to offer to kill themselves on the death of their Mecenna of the death of their with the second of the contraction of the contract of the contraction of the contraction

4. Here, for the first time in this Epistle, the plural first person is exchanged for the singular in speaking of himself, and from this time to the end the two are intermixed. See note on vi. 14. He now pours forth the joy, occasioned by the arrival of Titus, which had partially burst out in ii. 14, vi. 11, 13; and sums up in a few words the various feelings which have sprung out of it.

πολλή παροησία, 'freedom' or 'openness' of speech (see iii. 12), the subject of the whole passage, iii. 1—iv. 5, and again vi. 11, 12. πολλή εαύχησες, 'boasting of your good conduct,' as in i. 14.

your good conduct,' as in i. 14, iii. 2. πεπλήρωμαι . . . ὑπερπερισ-πεπληρωμα: ... υπεπτερασείορια. Both words are characteristic of the Apostle's bursts of feeling all through this Epistle: 'I am filled to the brim, I overflow.'

παράκλησις in all its senses of 'consolation' (which is especially meant here) and 'exhortation,' is also eminently characteristic of this Epistle. See i. 4, 5, 6, vi. 1. χαρφ. For the 'joy,' see ii. 2—14.

The article before παρακλήσει and χαρά shows that he refers to the special event of the arrival of

Titus.

ἐπὶ πάση τῆ Ͽλίψει, ' on the top of my affliction, of whatever kind it may be,' see ii. 12. This sums up the whole feeling of iv. 7—12, vî. 2—10. δονίαν οἰδεμίαν "έσγεν ἀνσυν ή σὰρξ ἡμῶν, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι "ἔξωθεν μάχαι, ἔσωθεν φόβοι. "ἀλλ' ἐν δι παρακαλών τοὺς ταπευούς παρεκάλεσεν ἡμῶς ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῆ παρουσία Τίτου "οὐ μόνου δὲ ἐν τῆ παρουλήσι ἀπου, ἀλλά καὶ ἐν τῆ παρακλήσει ἢ παρεκλήσι ἐψ ὑμῶν, ἀκα ἀν τῆ παρακλήσι ἢ παρεκλήσι ἐν ὑμῶν όδυρμόν, τὸν ὑμῶν ζὴνον ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, ἄστε με μάλλον χαρήσια. "ὅτι εἰ καὶ ἐλύπησα ὑμῶς ἐν τῆ ἐπιστολῆ, * ξσχηκεν άνεσιν; Lachm. Ed. 1. άνεσιν ξσχεν, flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side:

owithout, fightings; within, fears. Nevertheless 'He, who comfortesh those that are cast down, even God', comforted rus by the coming of Titus: and not by his coming only, but 'also by the 'comfort wherewith he was comforted 'concerning you, when he told us your 'longing, your mourning, syour 'zeal towards me, so that I 'rather rejoiced. For though I made you sorry with 'the letter, I do not 'regret. 'Alκαὶ γάρ, i. e. the reason both for the mention of 'his affliction' and 'consolation.'

 He carries on the narrative of his journey a little further than in ii. 13. There he had spoken of his troubles at Troas, here he describes them as still continuing on his arrival at Macedonía.

ἡ σάρξ merely expresses 'my weak mortal nature.'

For arear, see ii. 13.

ἔσχεν, Lachmann with B. F. G. K; ἔσχηπεν, Rec. Text with C. D. E. J.

ἔξωθιν μάχαι. The precise allusion cannot be determined. Probably opponents of some kind. Compare ἐθηριομάχησα, 1 Cor. xv. 32.

isωθεν φόδοι. Probably anxieties for the Corinthian Church, see ii. 12. For the union of the two, and the gloomy feeling produced, see i. 8, xi. 27, 28.

Now, for the first time, he describes the joyful event, which is the ground of the whole of the first part of the Epistle—the arrival of Titus. So joyful was it, that he can refer it to nothing short of the goodness of God Himself.

δ παρακαλῶν τοὺς ταπεινούς.
'He that comforts the downcast.' ταπεινός, in ταπεινός.

downcast.' ταπεινός, in ταπεινός. the N. T., has never the meaning of 'humble,' except in metaphors.

ἐν τῷ παρουσία Τίτου, 'by the coming and presence of Titus;'

as in the frequent use of the word to describe the Advent of Christ.

7. τη παρακλήσει, 'the comfort which he received from you was a comfort to me.' ἐπιπόθησιν, 'longing for me.' ὁλυρμόν, 'wailing that you had ζῆλον, 'zeal, to do my will.'

μᾶλλον χαρῆναι, 'more even than by the arrival of Titus.'
See verse 13.

offended me.'

ἐλύπησα, see note on ii. 4.

°ού μεταμέλομαι. εί °καὶ μετιμελόμη», βλέπο (γάρ) δτι ή έπιστολή έκείνη εί καὶ πρόε ώρω έλιπησεν ύμας, °νῦν χαίρω, οὺχ ότι ἐλυπήθητε, ἀλλὶ ὅτι ἐλυπήθητε εἰς μετικούριε ἐξ πμών. "ἢ γὰρ κατά θεών, ἴνα ἐν μηθεύ ξεημωθήτε ἐξ ἡμών. "ἢ γὰρ κατά θεὸν λύπη μετάνοιων οὐ μεταμέλομαι, εἰ καὶ μετεμελόμη» βλέπω γὰρ . . . ἐλύπησεν ὑμᾶς λεchm. Ed. 1. εἰ δὲ καὶ μετεμ. βλέπω δτι.

though I did regret, for I perceive that the same Epistle 9 made you sorry though but for a season, yet now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye "were made sorry" to repentance: for ye were made sorry "towards God", to that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For sorrow

έν τῆ ἐπιστολῆ, i. e. 1 Cor. v. Lachmann, in his second edition, has adopted the reading of the Rec. Text, el saí (not el de καί), and γάρ after βλέπω. But, whereas the Rec. Text joins εἰ καὶ μετεμελόμην with οὐ μεταμέλομαι, with a full stop at έλύπησεν vunc, Lachmann has a full stop at μεταμέλομαι and a comma at υμας, whilst Tischendorf takes the punctuation of the Rec. Text at μεταμέλομαι, and of Lachmann at vuac. This last is almost required by the expression, el sail πρὸς ώραν έλύπησεν: 'Even though I did grieve you in my Epistle, I do not regret it, even though I did regret it : for I see that even though that Epistle did grieve you for a time, now there is occasion for me to rejoice in the result of your grief.1 In this manner, si καί preserves the same sense throughout, which else it would lose in the third place of its occurrence; and yap is then the reason for his ceasing to mourn. He had possibly meant to say βλέπω γάρ ότι ή έπιστολή έκείνη έλύπησεν είς μετάνοιαν: and then changed this construction into the present ver xaipu, equivalent in sense, though different in words. And it is this confusion which has led to the variety of reading.

 νῦν χαίρω, 'now that Titus is come, and that I know the whole state of affairs, I, not only do not regret, I rejoice; but the reason of my rejoicing is,' &c.

tic peravolar. This passage shows how inadequate is our word 'repentance.' peravola.

'Ye were grieved so as to change your mind.' 'Your repentance amounted to a revolution of mind.'

sarà Stév 'in regard to God.' See xi. 17; Rom. viii. 27. It was a sorrow not merely towards man, but towards God, as in the model of true penitence in Ps. li. 4, 'against Thee only have I sinned.' Bengel.—'Animi Doum spectantis et sequentis!

In a in underi. . . 'the effect of your sorrow has been that you received no loss from my severity: '-- 'My severity was attended under God's guidance with happier consequences than I could have anticipated.'

Δμεταμέλητον, either: (1) with σωτηρίαν, 'salvation which cannot be repretted,' as in Rom. xi. 29; or (2) with μετάνοιαν, by a play on the word. In είς σωτηρίαν ἀμεταμέλητον ^{} ἐργαζίςται, ἡ δὲ τοῦ κόσμου λύπη θάνατον κατρογάζεται. ¹¹ἰδού γὰρ αὐτὸ τοῦτο τὸ κατὰ θέὸν λυπηθήγαι ^{} πόσην κατευργάσατο ^{}[ἐ] ὑμῶν σπουδήν· ἀλλὰ ἀπολογίαν, ἀλλὰ ἀγανάκτησω, ἀλλὰ φόβον, ἀλλὰ ἐπιπόθησω, ἀλλὰ ζήλον, ἀλλὰ ἐκδίκησω. ἐπ πωτὶ τονεστήσατε ἐαυτοὺς ἀγνοὺς εἶναι [ἐ] τῷ πράγματι. ¹²ἀρα εἰ καὶ ἐγραψα ὑμῶν, οἰχ ^{}ἐνεκεν τοῦ ἀδικησαυτος ^{} οὐδὲ ἐνεκεν τοῦ ἀδικηθέντος, ἀλλ^{}ἐνεκεν τοῦ φανερωθήναι τὴν σπουδὴν [†]ὑμῶν τὴν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν πρὸς κατεργάζεται.

 λυπηθήναι ύμῶς.
 Com. ἐν. ⁴ εἴνεκεν in the three places.
 * Lachm. Ed. 1. adds ἀλλ*.
 * σπουδήν ήμῶν towards God' worketh repentance to salvation not to be regretted, but the sorrow of the world worketh death. 11 For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed 'towards God', 'how much 'carnestness it wrought in you! yea clearing of yourselves, yea indignation, yea fear, yea 'longing, yea zeal, yea revenge! In 'everything ye 'commended 12 yourselves to be 'pure in the matter. Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his 'sake that had done wrong nor for his that suffered wrong, but that 'your 'earnestness for 'ass might be made 'manifest unto you 'in the word ἀμεταμέλητον he refers back to μεταμέλομαι in 8. ἡ τοῦ κόσμον λύπη. The opposite of ή κατὰ θεὸν λύπη. 'The grief which only regards the world.'

world.'

9άνατον, Death, in the highest sense, as opposed to σωτηρίαν, as in Rom. v. 21.

11. He proceeds to point out in all its details the good effects of this sorrow, and, therefore, of icov, 'for look at the picture you presented to Titus.'

his Epistle.

σπουζήν, 'earnestness' or 'seriousness,' is expanded into the remaining part of the verse, which exhibits their conflict of feelings.

άπολογία, 'self-defence' for their sin. άγανάκτησις, 'self-accusation against it.'

φόδον, 'fear of Paul's arrival.' ἐπιπύθησιν, 'longing for it.' ζήλον, 'zeal against the offender.'

ἐκδέκησεν, 'punishment of his έν τῷ πράγματι, 'in the affair of the incestuous person.' For this mode of referring to a painful subject, compare 1 Thess. iv.

έν in B. omitted in C. D. G. 12. εἰ καὶ ἔγραψα, 'even though I did write to you severely.'

τοῦ άδικήσαντος, the incestuous person.

τοῦ ἀδικηθίντος, 'the father of the offender, whose wife he had taken.' See 1 Cor. v. 1.

When he says that he wrote, ύμας ενώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ. ¹⁸διά τοῦτο παρακεκλήμεθα· ἐπὶ ^{}δὲ τῆ παρακλήσει ^{}ημῶν περισσότρου μλοιο ἐχάρημεν ἐπὶ τῆ χαρὰ Τίτον, ὅπι ἀναπέπαυται τὸ πεύμα αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ πάυτων ὑμῶν, 'ἔστι εἰ τι αὐτῷ ὑπὸρ ὑμῶν κεκαύχημαι, οἱ κατησχύνθην, ἀλλὶ ὡς πάντα ἐν ἀληθεία ἐλαλήσαμεν ὑμῶν, οὐτοις καὶ ἡ καύγοτις ^{*}ὑμῶν ἡ ἐπὶ Τίτου ἀληθεια ἐγευήθη, ¹⁸καὶ τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ

Om. δέ.
 δμῶν.
 Add δέ.
 ἡμῶν ἡ ἐπὶ Τ. Lachm. Ed. 1. όμῶν ἐπὶ Τ.

13 the sight of God? Therefore we 'have been comforted', 'but in 'our comfort the more 'abundantly joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit 'has been refreshed 16 by you all, for if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I 'twas not ashamed, but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so 'your boasting which I made before Titus I's 'became truth, and his inward affection is more abundant not on account of the offender or the injured person, but for the manifestation of the zeal of the Corinthian Church, he speaks of the chief object as the only object; and also of the object which was effected by Providence, as if it had been his object. Comp.

Rec. Text, with B. (e sil.), ἡμῶν τ. ὑπ. ὑμῶν. G. ἡμῶν τ. ὑπ. ἡμῶν. D¹. F. ὑμῶν τ. ὑπ. ὑμῶν. Lachmann, with C. D². E. I. K., ύμων την ύπερ ήμων. In such a confusion of readings (occasioned by the like pronunciation of v & h, and extending as far as verse 14), the sense is the only guide. On the one hand, the 'manifestation of your zeal for us' agrees better with the general context and with the previous use of σπουδή in speaking of the Corinthians, in verse 11. On the other hand, 'the manifestation of our zeal for you' is simpler, is borne out by the parallel of ii. 4, and suits πρός υμάς, which, though tautological if we adopt this reading, is unintelligible with the other. ἐνώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ, 'In the sight of God,' also agrees better with a protestation of the Apostle's zeal for them, than with an allusion to theirs for him. Compare v. 11. 13, 14. Additional force is given to the argument by Lachmann's reading (B. C. D. G.) of δέ and ἡμῶν; 'for this that I have mentioned, namely, the effects of my Epistle, I have been comforted. But with this comfort before me, I was still more rejoiced by the joy of Titus.' It is a stronger expression of what he had already said in 6 and 7. and is the same protestation of the truth of his teaching, as in i. 18-21, ii. 17, iv. 2, in little things as in great.

Observe the liveliness of the perfect tense, 'we have been comforted; he has been refreshed; I have boasted.'

άπὸ πάντων, 'refreshed by your presence.' 15. ἀναμιμνησιομένου, 'recallἀναμιμησκομένου, 'recalling to himself.'

 Θαρρῶ ἐν ὑμῖν. Not 'I περισσοτέρως εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐστὶν ἀναμιμνησκομένου τὴν πάντων ὑμῶν ὑπακοήν, ὡς, μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου ἐδέξασθε αὐτόν. ¹⁶χαίρω, *ὅτι ἐν παντὶ θαρρῶ ἐν ὑμῖν.

Add oby.

toward you whilst he remembereth the obedience of you 16 all, how with fear and trembling ye received him. I rejoice on that in reverything I ram bold in you.

have confidence in you' (which bold through your encouragewould be πέπωθα), but 'I am ment.'

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. VI. 11-VII. 16.

And now the full current of my words finds unrestricted utterance. my own Corinthian converts; for the gates of my heart, of my rejoicing heart, are open wide to receive you. If there be any narrowness, it is in your affections, not in mine. [Here begins the digression without connexion with what either precedes or follows.] Do not make ill-suited unions with heathens, which compromise the difference between righteousness and lawlessness, light and darkness, Christ and the author of evil, Christian and heathen, God's temple and false idols. You are the living temple, not of a dead statue, but of a living God, of that God who in the Law, the History, and the Prophets of the old dispensation, declared that He would dwell with His people, and commanded their separation from impurities, and announced His readiness to receive them all. Therefore every pollution must be abandoned, not ceremonial only, but moral, in order to attain a purity not ceremonial merely but moral. [Here the main argument is resumed.] Make room for me in your hearts; I have made room for you in mine. When I was with you, I did no wrong or injustice to any one; and I say this, not to taunt you, but from my love to you. I have again and again said that you are in my heart for life and death. I have no restraint with you; I am proud of your excellence; I am filled to overflowing with the comfort and the joy which after all my trouble awaited me from you in Macedonia. There, after all my anxieties, both from without and from within, I, at last, met Titus; and at once the comfort which I received from him was so great that I thankfully ascribe it to God the author of all comfort, not only the comfort which he gave me himself, but the comfort which you gave him, and which through him was transmitted to me. He told me of your affection for me, and of your sorrow for your faults; and this at once made me cease my regrets for my severity in my First Epistle. I see now that your sorrow was not mere worldly remorse, which has no good end; but sorrow as in the sight of God, which issues in a change of heart and life that tends to your highest welfare. Look only at the picture of your sorrow and its effects, its deep earnestness, showing itself in your self-defence and self-accusation, your fear and net your longing for my arrival, your zeal and your severity towards the offender. This fear, more than any actual punishment or reparation of the crime, was the result which I sought to produce by my Evistle; and, therefore, I am now completely satisfied. And the joy of Titus shows me that I had not overstated your excellences to him; that in my communications with him as well as with you. I had told him the truth: and therefore he now loves you as truly as I do.

THE APOSTLE'S DELIGHT IN HUMAN INTERCOURSE.

THIS passage gives in the most lively form the human personal sympathies of the Apostle. His great consolation, after that which he derived from communion with Christ, was the restoration of confidence towards his converts and intercourse with his friend. A parallel passage, though less strongly expressed, may be seen in his description of the feelings with which he waited for the return of his other confidential friend, Timotheus, with tidings from Thessalonica (1 Thess. iii. 1—8). Such touched distinguish Christianity from Stoticism and from fanaticism; and also give a counterpoise to other passages which describe the calls of the Gospel as severing all human ties. 'To be left at Athens alone,' and 'to have no man likerminded with him,' to have 'only Luke with him,' 2 bear 'only Luke wi with the Ephesian elders who 'would see his face no more,' 1 are spoken of in that plaintive strain which, even more than direct expressions, implies that solitude, want of sympathy, estrangement or bereavement of friends, were to the Apostle real sorrows. The unfeigned pleasure which he manifests at the restoration of intercourse, the enumeration of the names of his friends in the frequent salutations, the joy with which his heart was lighted up at his meeting with the brethren at Appii Forum, 'whom, when he saw, he thanked God and took courage,' 2 indicate the true consolation he derived from the pure spring of the better human affections. His life is the first great example of the power of Christian friendship. It is also (without passing a harsh judgment on the ascetic fervour called out by peculiar times and circumstances) a perpetual protest against the seclusion from all human society, which, in a later age, was regarded as the highest flight of virtue. It is impossible to imagine the 6th and 7th Chapters of this Epistle proceeding from the pen of Simeon Stylites.

¹ 1 Thess. iii. 1. ² Phil. ii. 20. ³ 2 Tim. iv. 11.

- ¹ Acts xx. 25. ² Ibid. xxviii, 15.
- ³ The writers of the 4th and 5th centuries have not unnaturally, from this point of view, missed the true cause of the Apostle's anxiety in the absence of Titus. Jerome, characteristically, supposes that it arose from the fact that Titus was his interpreter, and that without such aid he could not preach.

THE COLLECTION FOR THE CHURCHES IN JUDZEA.

Chap. VIII. 1-IX. 15.

In the close of the First Epistle' the Apostle had given directions that the collection for the poor Christians in Judos, which he had ordered before, should proceed as rapidly as possible, in order to be ready for his arrival. On his meeting with Titus he learned that the collection was not yet completed; whilst, at the same time, his stay in Macedonia impressed him with the greater zeal of the Churches in the north of Greece, although under greater difficulties from their inferiority in wealth and civilisation. Under these circumstances he had charged Titus to resume the mission which he had confided to him in the First Epistle (xvi. 11), and to hasten the completion of the work; and he proceeds himself to urge upon them the same duty.

That this part of the Epistle, though more clearly connected with the first part $(i--v_1)$ than with the third part $(x--x_1)$, is independent of both, appears from various points:—1. The plural, for the singular, first person is uniformly used, instead of the mixture of the two which pervades the Chapters (vii. and x.) immediately preceding and succeeding. 2. The use of several words in a peculiar sense is peculiar to this Section, $\gamma dpis$, $\epsilon dvarqs$, $\delta casaoevin$, $\delta arh \delta vrys$. 3. The allusions to the prevailing topics of the two other portions are very slight.

The exhortation is enforced, first, by holding up to them the example of the Macedonian Churches (viii. 1—15); then by describing the nature and purpose of the mission of Titus (viii. 16—23); lastly, by suggestions as to the spirit in which the collection should be made (ix. 6—15).

¹ See notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 1-4.

(1) THE EXAMPLE OF THE MACEDONIAN CHURCHES.

Chap. VIII. 1-15.

MACEDONIA included, at that time, under four divisions, all the Roman province of Greece north of Thermopylis. The part, however, to which the Apostle here chiefly refers, must be that through which (Acts xxi, xxii.) he had himself travelled, and which corresponded to the ancient Macedonian kingdom. By 'the Churches' or 'congregations' 'rais' šecky-ráus') of Macedonia, he means those Christian congregations of which one was to be found in each of the cities where he had preached; namely, Philippi, 'Thessalonias,' Bercaa'.

Two points are noticed in these congregations: (1) their Poverty of the Mace βάθουν πτωχεία, viii. 2; the Mace βάθουν πτωχεία, viii. 2; the Mace δτάρ δόνεμαν, viii. 3). This poverty was probably deminas, shared by them in common with all other parts of Greece, except the two great Roman colonies of Patre and Corinth; the latter especially since its revival by Julius Cessar.

^{&#}x27; 'The condition of Greece in the time of Augustus was one of great desolation and distress. It had suffered severely by being the seat of the successive civil wars between Casar and Pompey, between the triumvirs and Brutus and Cassius, and, lastly, between Augustus and Antonius. Besides, the country had never recovered the long series of miseries which had succeeded and accompanied its conquest by the Romans; and between those times and the civil contest between Pompey and Cæsar, it had been again exposed to all the evils of war when Sylla was disputing the possession of it with the general of Mithridates. It was from a view of the once famous cities of the Saronic Gulf that Servius Sulpicius derived that lesson of patience with which he attempted to console Cicero for the loss of his daughter Tullia. Ætolia and Acharnania were barren wastes, and the soil was devoted to pasture for the rearing of horses. Thebes was hardly better than a village. Epirus was depopulated and occupied by Roman soldiers. Macedonia had lost the benefit of its mines, which the Roman government had appropriated to itself, and was suffering from the weight of its taxation. The provinces of Macedonia and Achaia, when they petitioned for a diminution of their burdens in the roign of Tiberius, were considered as deserving of compassion that they were transferred for a time from the jurisdiction of the senate to that of the Emperor [as involving less heavy taxation].¹³

¹ Acts xvi. 12-40. ² Tbid. xvii. 1-9. ³ Tbid. xvii. 10-15.

(2) Their extreme generosity. So in the Church of Thessalonica2 the Apostle's converts are warned against and their indiscriminate bounty. So from the Church of Phi- genelippi, contributions were sent to support the Apostle rosity. both on his travels through Macedonia,3 and afterwards in his imprisonment at Rome.4 And in this Epistle5 he speaks of the support which was brought to him from Macedonia during his residence at Corinth: a circumstance which would impress on his Corinthian converts, in a livelier form, his present argument. Some, also, of the Macedonian Christians gave, not merely their money, but 'themselves' to his service as constant companions; amongst whom were Sopater, Secundus, and Aristarchus,7 Epaphroditus, who 'regarded not his life' in the Apostle's service,8 and perhaps the author of the Acts, who remained at Philippi's when the Apostle went forward, and was now about to rejoin him. And the number of these Macedonian converts is the more striking, when compared with the few who came from the Churches of Southern Greece, none of whom, except Sosthenes,10 appears as a permanent companion.

```
    Arnold's Roman Commonwealth
    in pp. 382, 383.
    Thess. iii. 10, 11.
    Phil. iv. 15.
    Ibid. ii. 25, iv. 16, 18.
    xi. 9.
```

See viii. 5.
 Acta xx. 4, xxvii. 2; Col. iv.
 Phil. ii. 30.

Acts xvi. 10—40, xx. 6.
 1 Cor. i. 1.

VIII. ¹Γνωρίζομεν δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοί, τὴν χάριν τοῦ θεοῦ τὴν δεδομένην ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Μακεδονίας, ²ὅτι ἐν πολλῆ δοκιμῆ θλίψεως ἡ περισσεία τῆς γαρῶς

1 "Now, brethren, we "make known to you' the grace 2 of God bestowed "in the churches of Macedonia; how that in a great "trial of "trouble the abundance of their joy and

" Or 'proof.'

VIII. 1. Γνωρίζομεν. See note on 1 Cor. xv. 1. δέ is merely the opening of a new subject, as in 1 Cor. vii. 1, viii. 1, xv. 1. την χάριν. This word is used in these chapters (viii. 1, 4, 6, 7, 19, ix. 14) as in 1 Cor.

xdps. xvi. 3, in the peculiar sense of a 'gift' or 'contribution.' In almost every other part of the New Test. it is used for 'favour,' 'goodness,' generally speaking, of God; and here also the two ideas are blended together. Compare the use of εὐλογία in

ix. 6. την δεδομένην, 'which has been given.'

έν ταῖς ἐκκλησέαις. See p.

2. The sense of what follows is clear: 'their poverty made their liberality more striking.' The construction and the words may be either: (1) to make is vaporate and if wraying the nominative case to irespersive, according to the regular order; or rather (2), to suppose an anacopose that their affliction was contrasted with their joy, and then that their poverty was contrasted with their wealth; so that the sentence should have been either δτι ἡ πολλή δοιτμή 3λιψ. ἐπερίσσενωτν εἰς τῆν χαράν αὐτῶν, καὶ . . οτ ἐν πολ. δοκ. 9λιψ. ἡ περίσσε. τ. χαρᾶς αὐτ. ἐγἐνετο καὶ ἐν τῆ κατὰ βαθ. πτωχείψ ἡ περισσεία τοῦ πλούτους, κ. τ. λ.

δοκιμή, 'trial,' as in Rom. v. 4: ή ὑπομονὴ δοκιμὴν κατεργά-ζεται.

3λίψεως may either refer to some such persecutions as those which had taken place in those Churches five years before, Acts xvi. 20, xvii. 5; 1 Thess. i. 6, 14, or merely to 'distress,' such as arose from the discountenance of their heathen or Jewish neighbours, as when joined with στενοχωρία and ἀνάγκη, vi.

 4.

ή περισσεία τῆς χαρᾶς αὐτα;
'Their joy overflowed. It appeared greater by reaJoy,' in an of the distress in liberality.
flourished, and it exceeded that distress, became insignificant in comparison. It is mentioned from the connexion which always exists in the Apostle's mind between in the greates and between the connexion which always exists in the Apostle's mind between the connexion which always exists in the Apostle's mind between the connexion which always contain the connexion which are the conne αὐτῶν καὶ ἡ κατὰ βάθους πτωχεία αὐτῶν ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς *τὸ πλοῦτος τῆς ἀπλότητος αὐτῶν, *ὅτι κατὰ δύναμιν

• τὸν πλοῦτον.

their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their li-3 berality, *how that' to their power (I bear record) and

 'he that showeth mercy, in cheerfulness' (λαρότητι).
 'The Rabbis said that he who gave nothing, but received his friend with a cheerful countenance, was better than he who gave all with a downcast countenance.' See Wetstein on ix. 7. The word xapá is used in connexion with yápse.

This sentence would run more naturally έκ τῆς κατά βάθ. πτωγείας έπερίσσευσε τὸ πλούτος. Its present form is perhaps owing to the 'oxymoron,' by which poverty, instead of restraining liberality, is described as overflowing into it; as though Christian poverty were of itself a treasure which never failed. Compare the story of the widow's mite, Luke xxi. 3, 4, 'she hath thrown in more than they all: they all of their abundance (έκ τοῦ περισσεύοντος), she of her need ' (νστερήματος).

κατὰ βάθους, 'reaching deep down.'

rλούτος, 'wealth,' here comlines the literal enea with the metaphorical sense, in which he so often uses it to express any kind of excess: 'their great liberality,' Here, and in Eph, ii. 7, iii. 8, 16; Phil. iv. 19, and Col. ii. 2, the best MSS. read το πλούτος for δ πλούτος, as in Romanic, of which the teadency is to substitute neuter for meaculine and feminine nounts. So τό λοκο in LXX. (See Winer, Gram, p. 64.)

άπλότης in Eph. vi. 5; Col. iii.

22; and in 2 Cor. i. 12 (Rec. Text), xi. 3, is 'simplicity, 'sincerity.' But &πλότης. throughout these two

Chapters it is used for 'liberality' or 'munificence,' by the same ambiguity as is attached to the word 'liberality' in English. See ix. 11, 13. ἀπλοῦς may be so used in Prov. xi. 25, where the verse which is rendered, 'the liberal soul shall be made fat,' is in the LXX, ψυχή εὐλογουμένη πάσα άπλη, which must be 'every liberal soul is blessed,' or, 'every blessed (i. e. rich) soul is liberal.' It seems to be so used by Josephus, Ant. VII. xiii. 4, where David admires the ἀπλότης and μεγαλοψυχία of Araunah. The context of Matthew vi. 22 suggests that ὀφθαλμὸς ἀπλοῦς in that passage may bear this meaning.

3-5. From ότι κατά δύναμιν to θεοῦ in verse 5, is a sentence which has been entirely shattered in passing through the Apostle's mind. If restored to order it would be: ότι κατά δύναμιν, καί παρά δύν., οὐ καθάπερ ήλπίσαμεν, την χάριν [των χρημάτων] άλλ έαυτούς αὐθαίρετοι ἔδωκαν. The verb to which αὐθαίρετοι is attached, and by which την χάριν is governed, is really ἔδωκαν. But, when he comes to express their spontaneous ardour (αὐθαίperos), he enlarges upon it by describing that it was done not at his request, but at theirs; and this induces him to insert mera (μαρτυρώ) καὶ "παρὰ δύναμεν, αθθαίρετοι, "μετὰ πολλής παρακλήστων δεόμενοι ήμών την χάριν καὶ την κοινωνίτα τής διακονίας τής εἰς τοὺς ἀγίους," δκαὶ οὺ καθώς "ηλπίσαμεν, αλλ' ἐαντοὺς δύοκκαν πρώτον τῷ κυρίω καὶ 'ημίν διά θελήματος θεοῦ, "εἰς τὸ ἀπαρακαλέσαι ἡμάς Τίτον, 'ὐα ὑπέρ, Lochm, Ed. 1. ἡλπίπαμεν.

b Add 84faobai huns.

4 beyond their power, *of their own accord', praying us with much *exhortation, *a for the *rgrace and the *communits of the ministration to the saints,—and not as we *trusted, but 'themselves they gave first' to the Lord and to us by the will of God, insomuch that we *exhorted Titus,

πολ. παρακλ. δεόμτοις, which, in turn, attaches την χάρων to itself, so as to make it 'asking for the favour' (τήν χαρίν, by its double sense suiting this construction); and then he explains it further carrier, namely, 'the favour of sharing in the ministration to the saints.' The construction thus lost, is recovered in the next verse by οἱ καθύς ἐλνίσωμες κίδασθω μήκα, which would each the construction, is a later insertion.

αὐθαίρετοι, which in the N. T. occurs only here and in verse 17, is a common word in later Greek (see Wetstein) for εκοντες.

For the connexion of παράκλησις and διόμενος, see v. 20, 21, vi. 1, x. 1, 2. τὴν χάριν, as observed on verse

1, has here the double sense of 'gift' and 'favour,' and so also κοινωνίαν of 'communicating' and 'participating.'

ειακονία, except in this Section, where χάρις is so often used instead, is the ordinary word in the N.
T. for a charitable contribution

T. for a charitable contribution to the wants of others; and hence the technical sense of διάcore; in Phil. i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 8, 12; Rom. xvi, 1, and in ecclesisatical Greek, for the administrators of such bounty, whether male or female. Compare ix. 1, 13; Rom. xv. 31, with regard to this same matter; also Acts vi. 1, xi. 29, xii. 25.

rοῦς ἀγίους. The Christian poor in Judæa. See note on 1 Cor. xvi. 1.

 ἡλπίσαμεν, 'expected;' in the N. T. always in a good sense. ἡλπίσαμεν, Rec. Text with C. D. E. F. G. J. K.; ἡλπίκαμεν, Lachmann. 1st edition, with B.

έαυτούς, 'themselves as companions.'

πρώτον τῷ κυρίφ καὶ ἡμῖν. In classical Greek this would have been expressed by τε and καί. Here, as in Rom. i. 16, ii. 9, 10, it is not priority of time, but of importance, that is meant.

διά θελήματος θεοῦ is partly that their complete surrender of themselves was the work of God, as in the phrase τῆν χάριν τοῦ θεοῦ in verse 1; partly that they consented to go with him, if God so permitted. See I Cor. xvi. 7; James iv. 15.

παρακαλέσαι is the word he always uses in speaking of the καθών "προενήρξατο, ούτους καὶ ἐπιτελέτη εἰς ὑμᾶς καὶ τὴν χάρω ταὐτην. Τὰλλ' ὥσπερ ἐν παντὶ περισσεύετε, πίστει καὶ λόγω καὶ γνώστει καὶ πάση σπουδή καὶ τῆ "ἔξ ὑμῶν ἐν ἡμῶν ἀγάπη, ινα καὶ ἐν ταύτη τῆ χάρτι περισσεύητε. δοἱ καὶ ἐπτατηλ λέγω, ἀλλὰ δὶ ἀλ τῆς ἐτέρων σπουδής καὶ τὸ τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀγάπης γνήσιο δοκιμάζων γίνωσκετε γλα τὴν χάρω τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν δοκιμάζων γίνωσκετε γλα τὴν κυρίου τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν διαθεί ἐν τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν διαθεί ἐν τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν διαθεί ἐν τοῦ ἐν τοῦ ἐν τοῦ ἐν τοῦ ἐν τοῦ ἐν τοῦ ἐν τοῦν ἐν τ

* Lachm. Ed 1, ἐνήρξατο . . , . ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐν ὁμῶν.

that as he had begun 'before, so he would also finish in 'you the same grace also. 'But as ye abound in every thing, in faith and "word and knowledge and all 'carnestness and 'love from you to us', that ye 'may abound in this grace also. I 'say this 'not by commandment, but 'through the 'carnestness of others and to prove the 'genuineness of your love (for ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus two missions of Titus. See viii. 17, xii. 18; 1 Cor. xvi. 12. προενήρξατο refers to the interest which Titus had taken in this contribution on his first mission to Corinth with the First Epistle, xii. 18; 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 12. καὶ τῆν χάριν ταύτην. 'That kai την χάριν ταύτην. 'That he may complete this contribution, as well as the general good work of zeal and repentance' described in vii. 13, 14.

7. The sentence grows out of the proceeding, tra depending on παρακαλέω, supplied from παρακαλέσα. 'I have entreated Titus; now I entreat you to show the same exuberance of spiritual attainments in this, as in other points.'

For πίστει, λόγφ, γνώσει, see 1 Cor. xii. 9.

For σπουδή see note on vii. 11. Here, as in vii. 12, the readings vary between ἡμῶν and ἡμῶν, ἡμῶν ἐν ἡμῖν in C. D. E. F. G. J. K. and Rec. Text, and Lachmann; ἡμῶν ἐν ἡμῖν Β., and Lachm. 1st cit. It will thus be either, 'the love awakened by you in me,' or 'by me in you.' The latter suits better in the general tone of the Epistle (com; 1. 6, vi. 11, 12).

Epistle (comp. i. 6, vi. 11, 12).

For this general description of the gifts of the Corinthians, compare 1 Cor. i. 5.

8. o'x car' israrqy'n Afyn, 17 speak not to command you. Comp. the same expression in 1 Cor. vii. 6, where, however, the meaning is not quite the same. There it is, 'I have no commandment of Christ to give.' Here it is, 'I have no commandment of more not better the command, and his off-vice; here, between his own command, and his off-vice; here, between his own command, and his own advice.

διὰ τῆς ἐτίρων σπουδῆς, 'making use of the zeal of the Macedonians to stimulate you.' See viii. 1—5.

čοκιμάζων, 'in order to try.' τὸ γεήσων, 'the genuineness.'

τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀγάπης refers to τῆ ἀγαπῆ in verse 7.

9. 'If your love is genuine, you will make yourselves poor for 'Ιησοῦ "χριστοῦ, ὅτι δι' ὑμᾶς ἐπτώχευσεν πλούσιος ὤν, ἴνα ὑμεῖς τῆ ἐκείνου πτωχεία πλουτήσητε), 10 καὶ γνώμην ἐν τούτῳ δίδωμι. τοῦτο γὰρ ὑμῶν συμφέρει, οἴτινες οὐ μό-

* Lachm. Ed. 1. Omit xpιστοῦ.

Christ, that 'for your sakes He became poor, though He was rich', that 'ye through His poverty might be rich), 10 and herein I give my advice. For this is expedient for you, the sake of others, after Christ's example; for you know the favour that He gave to us (χάριν is used for the sake of allusion to χάριν in verses 6, 7); for He, when he might have been rich, became subject to poverty for you; that you, through His poverty, might become rich in goodness.

It is difficult to determine in what sense the Apostle whete sakes He became poor. Plied to our Lord. Probably, whilst ἐπτῶ-yeure is taken entirely in the literal sense, πλούσιος ών, though taken in the literal sense to a certain extent, yet has also the more general meaning implied in πλουτήσητε in the next clause. as is so often the case in St. Paul's metaphorical use of the word 'riches' (πλοῦτος). For a similar use of the present participle in exactly similar pas-sages, compare John iii. 13, the Son of man who is (o or) in heaven,' and Phil. ii. 6, 7; 'Who being (ὑπάρχων) in the form of God. åc.

Whether ἐπτώχευσε signifies 'He was poor,' or 'He became poor,' is doubtful. 'When all power, and wealth, and greatness, earthly and Divine, were His, He yet led a life of powerty, not merely for the world in general. but for you, that you might gain in spiritual wealth (compare 1 Cor. i. 5, ἐπλουτίσθητε, iv. 8, πλουτέτε) ' by His human poverty.' ἔὶ ὑμᾶς is emphatic by position.

10. So completely parenthetical had been this appeal to Christ's example, that he continues the sentence from verse 8 as if nothing had intervened, excepting only that in consequence of the interruption he uses sai, where we should else have expected &\(\text{A}\tilde{\text{d}}\) or &\(\tilde{\text{c}}\)!: If ye you no command, but only advice. In what follows (10—15) are two points, which he finds it meedful to urge on the Corinthians:—(1) He is anxious to impress upon them that they are not to give by restraint, or because he orders it, but willingly. (2) He is afraid, lest by his commendation of the Macedonian Churches, he should make them suppose that his object was to relieve the Macedonians at their cost.

roors yan value oungefort, 'I give my advice, and not my command; for this (advice instead of command) is expedient for men who, like you, have shown so much zeal.' The second accords better with circure (the Latin quippe qui), and with the general strain of the argument. Compare especially ix. 1, 2.

He then commends them for νον τὸ ποιήσαι ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ θέλειν προενήρξασθε ἀπὸ πέριστ: ¹¹υννὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ ποιήσαι ἐπιτελέσατε, ὅπως κα ἀπός η προθυμία τοῦ θέλειν, οὖτεκ καὶ τὸ ἐπιτελέσαι ἐκ τοῦ ἔζειν. ¹²εἰ γὰρ ἡ προθυμία πρόκειται, καθὸ ἐὰν who 'began before not only to do but also to be 'willing 11 a year ago: now therefore perform the doing of it, that as there was 'the readiness to will, so there may be a per-12 formance also out of that ye have. For if there be first their zeal, in having anticipated $(\pi\rho\sigma\iota^{\mu}\dot{\rho}\xi\sigma\sigma\theta\iota)$ the Maccdonian Churches, in the time when they began their collection; and in the spontaneous eagerness with which they had undertaken it.

It is clear from 1 Cor. xvi. 1. that the collection is not there announced to them for the first time, but as something well known. Whenever it was that they had begun it, he here intimates that it was not on the mere fact of their having begun that he lays stress; but on the readiness with which they had done so, apparently without order from him. That they had anticipated the Macedonian Churches appears from ix. 2, 'Achaia was prepared a year ago, and your zeul provoked many,' agreeing with 1 Cor. xvi. 1, where the order to Galatia is mentioned. but none to Macedonia

3έλεν here, as elsewhere in the N. T. means, not merely 'will' or 'wish,' but 'eager purpose.' Comp. John vi. 21, ἤθελον λαβείν αίνόν. 'You anticipated the Macedonian Churches not only in your act, but in the purpose which preceded the act.'

āπὸ πίρνσι is in the N. T. used only here and in ix. 2. It is derived from περάς, and may possibly be the dative plural from an obsolete word πέρνες, meaning 'in past times,' and then by usage restricted to 'the past year.'

11. νυνὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ ποιῆσαι ἐπιτελέσατε, 'you did, and you were eager to do this, a year ago; now is the time for finishing, not merely your eager wish, but also your doing what you wished.'

12. '1 say, "according to the means you posses; "for if, as in your case, there is a ready zeal, it is accepted by God in its contributions, by comparison, not with some imaginary standard of wealth, but with what it really has." For this construction, by which a whole sentence is made to hange on a single word in the oblung of the oblung of the oblung of the oblung of the oblunction, in the oblunction of the oblunction of πρόεειται, 'is at hand.' It cocurs again in Heb. vi. 18, xii. 1, 2; Jud. 7, speaking of 'examples' or 'rewards.' ή προθυμία is the nominative case to έχη and to εὐπρόσθεστος, 'zeel' being personified here, as 'love' in 1 Cor. xiii. 4.

καθὸ ἐἀν (for ἀν) ἔχη, 'according as it may have.' ἔχη*, εὐπρόσδεκτος, οὐ καθὸ οὐκ ἔχει. 13 οὐ γὰρ ἴνα ἄλλοις ἄνεσις, ὑμ 15 θλ 16 μις, ἀλλὶ ἐξ ἰσότητος· ἐν τῷ νῦν

* Add ret. b Add 86.

"the ready' mind, it is "well accepted according to that a 13 man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For I mean not that the other men be eased, and ye "troubled,

13, 'For the object of the contribution is, not that others should be relieved and you have the burden, but that each party should contribute its proper share.' By 'others' (ἄλλοις) he might possibly intend the Christians in Judæa, who were to receive the contribution, as in the parallel passage with regard to this contribution in Rom. xv. 27: 'If the Gentiles had been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister to them in carnal things.' But the context and the probabilities of the case make it more likely that he alludes to the Churches of Macedonia. The Corinthians might ascribe his zeal to his affection for the Macedonian Christians and wish to ease them of their burden, and it is this illusion which he wishes to dispel.

āvæç is, in this case, not simply 'relief,' but (what suits its etymological meaning better) 'relief from overstrain,' as in ii. 12, vii. 5; Acts xxiv. 23, as opposed to 3λūψc, which must in this pasage, as probably in viii. 2, refer, not to persecution, but to poverty.

tν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, 'at the present time,' requires, in the second clause, some word meaning 'at a future occasion.'

'Do you help the Macedonians now, and then they will help you in like case hereafter.' 'They are poor now, and unable to bear the whole burden; perhaps, at some future time, you will be poor, and then they may be rich enough to meet your wants.

For the use of the word ὑστέρημα in the sense of poverty, see ix. 12, xi. 9; Luke xxi. 4.

έλαττονεῖν is used in LXX. for the earlier Greek έλαττοῦν.

The sentence contains three peculiarities of the Apostle's style:—

(1) The structure of the sentence, rò bisòr repiereysa iç re ketivor veripiqua, ira sol rò ketivor repiereysa eiç rò bisòr veripiqua, is an instance of the Apostle's turn for balancing two ends of a sentence against each other, as in Gal. ir. 12: yireole he ryu, or caybo et yireole raybo et vigue.

(2) The argument from equality and reciprocation in this passage is singularly like that of Aristotle, especially in Eth. V. έξ Ισότητος, περίσσευμα, υστέρημα (in Aristotle's language τὸ πλέρν and το έλαττον) όπως γένηται loorns. The resemblance is unconscious, but not the less shows the natural affinity of thought. A remarkable coincidence of a similar kind has lately been pointed out between Gal. v. 23, and Rom. ii. 24, and Aristotle, Pol. iii. 13. Such a phrase would not have occurred in the O. Test.

(3) In the quotation with which this classical thought is καιρῷ τὸ ὑμῶν περίσσευμα εἶς. τὸ ἐκείνων ὑστέρημο, ¹ινα καὶ τὸ ἐκείνων περίσσευμα γένηται εἰς τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα, ὅπως γένηται ἰσότης, ¹٥ καθῶς γέγραπται 'Ο τὸ πολὸ οἰκ ἐπλεόνασεν, καὶ ὁ τὸ ὀλίγον οἰκ ἡλαπτόνησεν.

14 but by an equality: that now at this time your abundance may be for their want, that their abundance also may be 15 for your want, that there may be equality, as it is written, 'he that had much had nothing over, and he that had little had no lack'.

supported, the account of the manna gathering (Exod. xvi. 17, 18) is applied to the peculiar circumstances of the Corinthian Clurch. The original words of the LXX. are slightly different: τον ἐπλεύναστες ὁ τὸ πολύ, από ὁ τὸ ἐλαττον οἰκ ἡλαττόνησε. This is the Vatican MS. The Alexandrian MS. has $\tilde{\phi}$ το πολύ $\tilde{\phi}$ το δλίγον. The Apostle cites just enough to remind his readers of the passage from which the words are taken. Before πολύ, understand πολλίζας. The words απός τ/γραττα must in this case be simply, 'to use the words of the Scripture'.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. VIII. 1-15.

Now comes my task of amouncing to you the goodness of Ged.
which I found manifested in the goodness of the congregations of Macedonia. They were plunged in deep distress and powerty, but this only screed to make them more auxious to show their cheerfulness and generosity. And not only so, but even beyond their power they contributed; and, yet more, it was voluntary;
and at their own cager request they gave, not only their money, but themselves to Christ and to us, to help the Christians elsewhere. The result of this sca, that I entreated Titus to return to Corinth and complete this sign of goodness in you, as well as those other good works and feelings which he had begin to promote in the visit from which he has just returned; and truly it becomes you who have such exuberance of other great gifts and sinns of Gods coodness to be extherant in this after

I do not command, I only advise it; because of the zoal which others have shown, and to prove the genuineness of your love to men for Christ's sake, acting to them as He acted to you, in exchanging riches for powerty in your behalf, that you, through His powerty, might enjoy His riches. I give nothing but advice; and this is in fact all that you need, for alrevily in the past year, not only the act of your collection, but the aggresses with which you prepared for it, was apparent; and all that you have to do is to complete the act, in order that the unit may correspond to the cargerness of the intention. And even in the act, remember that it is to be proportioned to your means; for it is not the amount, but the intention which is regarded in a gift. This is so always; and in this case there is no wish that you should be heavily pressed for the relief of others. There must be a fair equality. If you contribute not, they must contribute aftersacrds; so that in your deeds of liberality the saying will be fuffilled which we read in the account of the manna gatherers, 'Much was not too much, and little was not too little.'

THE POVERTY OF CHRIST.

WHATEVER general instruction may be gathered from this portion of the Epistle has been sufficiently expressed in the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 1. But one passage, although entirely parenthetical, needs to be considered on its own account. 'For your sakes He became poor that ye through His poverty might become rich' (viii. 9).

The passage is remarkable on many accounts: (1) It is a striking instance of the Apostle's frequent mode of allusion to the most solemn truths of Christian Revelation, in the midst of arguments referring to what may almost be called the every day business of life.

(2) By directly alluding to the ordinary trials and humiliations of our Lord's life, it bears witness to the accuracy of the Gospel narrative. The word (arraycave) ought not indeed to be pressed to its strictly classical sense of 'beggary', because in the New Testament it almost seems to have superseded the common word for 'poverty' (wwwia, wwwip). And our Lord's life, as described in the Gospels, included the home at Capernaum, the maintenance from the richer Galileans, and the common purse by which He and the Apostles were supported. Still there were times when the Apostle's expression was realised; as when He spoke of 'not having where to lay His head' (Matt. viii. 20). And the implied assertion that this poverty was a voluntary choice, agrees with the account of the offer and rejection both of the kingdoms of the world in the Temptation (Matt. iv. 9), and of the kingdom of Judæs (John vi. 15). Of a like character are the general expressions, 'No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself' (John x. 18); 'Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and He shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels' (Matt. xxvi. 53); 'The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it' (John xxiii. 11). The peculiar form in which the contrast is here expressed, 'being rich He was poor' ('Hrm\u00fcyuru' πλούσισ ω'), as though He were rich and poor at the same time, agrees with the whole tone of the Gospels, by which more than by any direct expressions, we infer the indissoluble union of Divine power and excellence with human weakness and sufferinz.

(3) This text, from bringing forward prominently the fact of our Lord's poverty as an example, gave rise to the mendiant Orders, as founded by St. Francis of Assisi, who in this respect believed himself to be following the model of our Saviour's life. Such a result is doubly curious. It shows how a parenthesis, incidentally introduced, in an appeal, for a temporary purpose, to the generosity of the Corinhian Church, has given birth to an immense institution, at one time spread over the whole of Europe. It shows how much of the extravagance of that institution might have been checked by acting less on the letter, and more on the spirit, of the passage in which the text occurs; a passage of which the general tendency is the very opposite to that which could reduce the feelings of generosity to a definite and uniform system.

At the commencement of the 14th century, the whole interest of theological controversy was centred in the question suggested by the Apostle's words—namely, whether Christ was absolately a mendicant, and whether it was the duty of Christians to imitate His absolute abnegation of property. On one side were the spiritual Franciscans, the great Schoolman William of Ochkun, and the Bull of Pope Nicholas IV.; on the other side, the moderate Franciscans, the Dominicans, and the Bull of Pope John XXII.¹ The moderate party prevailed; and it is certain that their victory was borne out both by the facts of the Gospel, which imply that our Lord and His disciples were never in absolute want, and by the language of the Apostle, who implies that the distinctions and counterbalancing duties, hopes and fears of rich and poor were to continue amongst his converts.

Milman's 'Latin Christianity,' vol. v. book xii. c. 6.

THE MISSION OF TITUS.

Chap. VIII. 16-24.

THE Apostle had already sent Titus with one or more Christians from Ephesus, charged with the duty of Mission of communicating the First Epistle, and of stimulating the Corinthians in the matter of this contribution (xii, 18: 1 Cor. xvi, 12). He now sends him again with the Second Epistle; and whereas, before, the contribution had in comparison of the greater interests at stake, been a secondary consideration, it was now to be the chief object of his mission. With him he joins two other Christians, whose names are not mentioned, but who, for that very reason, we must suppose to be well known to the Corinthian Church, and therefore to be, either one, or both, the same as he had sent before (70) άδελφών, xii. 18; των άδελφων, 1 Cor. xvi. 12). As in the case of the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, we can only say with certainty who they are not. They are subordinate to Titus: and, therefore, can hardly be any of the Apostle's more equal companions, Barnabas, or Apollos, or Silas. They are distinguished from the Macedonian Christians (ix. 4); and, therefore, cannot be Aristarchus, Sopater, or Secundus (Acts xx. 4), or Epaphroditus (Phil. ii. 30).

If it were worth while to hazard a conjecture, it would be that one of the two may have been Trophimus.

Trophimus was, like Titus, one of the few Gentiles who accompanied the Apostle; an Ephesian, and therefore likely to have been sent by the Apostle from Ephesus with the First Epistle, or to have accompanied him from Ephesus word; he was, as is implied of 'this brother,' 'whose praise was in all the Churches,' well known; so well known that the Jews of Asia Minor at Jerusalem immediately recognised him; he was also especially connected with the Apostle on this very mission of the collection for the poor in Judea. Thus far would appear from the description of him in Acts xxi. 29. From Acts xx. 4, it also appears that he was with St. Paul on his return from this very visit to Corinth. And the mention in this last passage of his companion, might further suggest that the other nameless 'brother' in viii. 22, was "rychicus. Tychicus. He also was an Ephesian ('of Asia,' Tychicus. Acts xx. 4; 'sent to Ephesus,' 2 Tim. iv. 12; Eph. vi. 21). He is mentioned amongst the few names which occur in the Epistel to Titus (iii. 12). He is spoken of in Eph. vi. 21; Col. iv. 7, as 'a beloved brother,' 'faithful minister and follow-servant in the Lord,' 'knowing the Apostle's affairs,' which agrees well with the description of 'our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved earnest in many thinse' viii. 22).

These three men he now proceeds to commend to their attention.—Titus, merely by expressing his own confidence in him, the other two more formally, as if not equally well known.

THE MISSION OF TITUS.

¹⁶ Χάρις δὲ τῷ θεῷ τῷ διδόντι τὴν αὐτὴν σπουδὴν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐν τῆ καρδία Τίτου, ¹¹ ὅτι τὴν μὲν παράκλησιν ἐδέξατο, σπουδαιότερος δὲ ὑπάρχων αὐθαίρετος ἐξῆλθεν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. ¹⁸ συνεπέμψαμεν δὲ μετ ἀὐτοῦ τὸν ἀδελφόν, οῦ ὁ

16 But "grace" be to God who "putteth the same earnest 17 care 'for you 'in the heart of Titus', for indeed he accepted the exhortation, but being more "earnest, of his own 18 accord he went "out unto you. And we "sent with him the

* Or 'thanks.'

16. He begins by expressing his gratitude to God, for the earnestness of Titus, in this particular matter, as he had before for his earnestness in behalf of the Corinthian Church generally, ii. 14, vii. 6, 7, 15, 16.

τῶ διδόντι, 'who is giving,' as τῷ διδόντι, 'who is giving,' as though the Apostle saw before his eyes the working of Titus's eagerness.

την αυτήν σπουδήν υπέρ υμῶν,
'the same earnestness in your bchalf that I feel myself, and that I have just expressed' (in verses 8—15).

iν τῆ καρδία Tírou, 'not merely in the words or deeds, but in the very heart of Titus.' The word (not then familiarised by use) is probably always to be taken in an emphatic sense in these Epistles.

17. δτι τὴν... σπουδαιότιρος δέ, 'inasmuch as, whilst he did indeed receive the charge from me, yet he was more earnest of himself to go.'

παράκλησιν. Properly, 'eager exhortation,' see viii. 6.

σπουδαιότερος, either: (1)
'more earnest than myself,' or
(2) 'more earnest than he was

g before,' or (3) 'very carnest,' - like δεισιδαιμονεστέρους, in Acts - xvii. 22.

ύπάρχων, instead of ων, expresses that this was the cause of his departure;—'because he was already so earnest, before I entreated him.' See xii. 16, ὑπάργων πανούργος. αὐθαίρετος. See note on viii. 3. ἐξῆλθεν, 'left the province of Macedonia for that of Achaia.' The word, when used absolutely, seems always to have an emphatic meaning of this kind. See ii. 13. The past tenses here and throughout this pas-sage, συνεπέμψαμεν, ἔπεμψα, may imply that the events described had taken place before the Apostle wrote. But the whole strain of the passage so clearly indicates a present mission, that the past tense must be ascribed to the forms of ancient epistolary communication, according to which the most recent events are represented in the light in which they will appear to the persons who receive the letter: as though he said, 'You will find that Titus departed.'

18. συνεπέμψαμεν δε μετ' αὐεπαινος εν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διὰ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν 19(οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ καὶ χειροτονηθεὶς ὑπὸ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν brother, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the

τοῦ. The phrase μετ' αὐτοῦ is, properly speaking, superfluous. It is like saying, 'We sent him with Titus as his companion. For the person here meant see remarks on verse 16.

τον άδελφόν, 'the brother whom you know,' so xii. 18, where probably the same person is meant.

οῦ ὁ ἔπαινος, 'who has his praise.' Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 5;

Rom. ii. 29.

ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, 'in the preaching,' or 'the sphere of the glad tidings of Christ,' like ἐν γριστῷ. So x. 14; Phil. vi.

3; 1 Thess. iii. 2.

διά πασών τών έκκλησιών, 'through the whole range of congregations through which I have passed.' Compare 'the care of all the Churches,' xi. 28. These words are applied to St. Luke, in the longer version of the Ignatian Epistles, and by Jerome, in his commentary on the Epistle to Philemon, and his catalogue of 'Illustrious Men,' alluding expressly to the written Gospel. But this is a misunderstanding of the words έν τῷ εὐαγγελίω. The error was first pointed out by Grotius. 19. οὐ μόνον δέ, 'and not only is he generally praised' (for the abrupt construction comp. viii. 5; Rom. ix. 10), 'but he was specially selected for the very purpose of the contribution.'

χειροτονηθείς. χειροτονείν in classical Greek is properly 'to vote by show of hands,' then

'to elect by show of hands,' as χειροτονεῖν τινὰ στρατηγόν, Xen. Hell. vi. 2, 11; and hence used, in the passive voice especially, in contra- χειροτονεῦν.

especially, in contra- χειροτονεῖν.
distinction to λαγχάresp, 'election by lot.' χεφοτονηθείς ή λαχών, Plato, Pol. 300, α. From this meaning of 'deliberate' as distinct from 'chance selection,' it came to signify 'election' or 'choice' of any kind, whether by show of hands or not. Thus in Josephus, passim, as Ant. VI. iv. 2; xiii. 9, ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ βασιλεύς κεγειροτονημένος (see Wetstein, ad loc.), and in the N. Test. as here and in Acts xiv. 23, of the choice of presbyters by the Anostles. Compare a similar transference of the ancient forms of political speech to Christian life, in the case of έκκλησία and έπίσκοπος in Greek, and 'ordo,' 'ordinatio,' 'diocesis,' in Latin. But from this use of the word in the Christian congregations, a new meaning sprang up in later Ecclesiastical Greek, of election' by imposition of hands, thus returning in some degree to its etymological sense. In this sense, probably, it is used in the subscriptions to 2 Tim. iv. 24; Tit. iii. 5, ἐπίσκοπον γειροτονηθέντα. ὑπὸ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, 'by the congregations in which he is praised,' referring back to πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν.

συνέκδημος ήμῶν, 'to be my fellow-traveller,' so Acts xix. συνέκδημος ήμων εέν τῆ χάριτι ταύτη τῆ διακονουμένη ὑφ΄ ήμων πρός τὴν "τοῦ κυρίου δόξαν καὶ προθυμίαν "ήμων), "στελλόμενοι τοῦτο, μή τις ήμας μωμήσηται ἐν τῆ άδρότητι ταύτη τῆ διακονουμένη ὑφ΄ ήμων ¹¹⁴ προνοοῦμεν γαρ καλὰ οὐ

* σύν, * Add αὐτοῦ. * ὑμῶν, 4 προνοούμενο: καλά.

the churches to travel with us with this grace, which is ministered by us to show the glory of the ^{aa}. Lord and ^our' or eady mind), avoiding this, that no man should blame us in 21 this 'plenty which is administered by us: ^for we provide'

speaking of Gaius and Aristarchus.
 τη τῆ χάριτι ταύτη, 'in the matter of their contribution. See viii. 6, 7.

τη διακονουμένη, which is now in the process of ministration.'

See viii. 4.

There were two purposes to be answered by the contribution:

(1) 'The glory of the Lord;' as we should say, the credit which would acrue to Christianity from the liberality of the Gentile Churches. Comp. Rom. xv. 16, 'ministering the Geograf of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable.' (2) The proof of the Aposte's zeal for the Jewish Christians and the Christians which is the same which I also was forward (terroziozav) to do.'

20. στελλόμενοι properly beστελλόμε longs to συνεπέμψαμεν, roi.

reason of the Apostic's sending the brother with Titus was to avoid cause for suspicion, two going instead of one. From xii. 18, it appears that he was charged with collecting money for his own purposes, through the means of his companions; and thus the 'brother' here mentioned was added, first by the Churches at his own request, as a companion to himself, to not as a check upon his own conduct; next by himself, as a companion to Titus, to act as a check on the conduct of Titus. erakhing the press prêre, drawing in, contracting this free indulgence of our feelings, as in classical Greek, for drawing in sails, irris µis verthaure, liad, i. 433; and as in the only other passes the conduction of th where the word occurs in a similar context.

έν τῆ ἀξρότητι ταύτη. ἀξρότης is properly 'thickness,' as of snow; then 'fulness, ripeness,' as of corn; then 'largeness' of any kind, chiefly of body. Hence acoc in

LXX. is used for the 'rich' or 'great,' 1 Kings i. 9; 2 Kings x. 6, 11, like 'procerus' in Latin.

In the N. Test. the word occurs only here, and is used in the sense of 'abundance,' as in Zosimus, quoted by Wetstein; in this passage, apparently to indicate the need there was for caution in dealing with a contribution so large as this promised to be.

 προνοοῦμεν γὰρ καλά ἀνθρώπων. These same words μόνου ἐνώπιου κυρίου, άλλὰ καὶ ἐνώπιου ἀυθρώπων. ¹² στασταμύραμε» δε αίτηοις τοὺ ἀδελφόν ήμιος ἡν ἐδοκιμάσιαἐν πολλοῖς πολλάκις σπουδαΐου ὄντα, νυνὶ δὲ πολλ σπουδαιότερου πεπουθήσει πολλή τὴ εἰς ὑμάς. ¹²είτε ὑπέρο Τίτου, κοινωνὸς ἐμὸς καὶ εἰς ὑμάς στωγορός «ἐτε ἀδελφοί for things 'good not only in the sight of the Lord, but also zin the sight of men. And we 'sent with them our brother, whom we 'many times in many things proved 'earnest,' but now much more 'carnest, upon the great confidence 25 felt in you. Whether [I speak] 'for Titus, he is my partner and 'fellow-worker concerning you: or our brethren, they are occur in Rom. xii. 17, in reference to the heathen world. προrοιῖσθαι is 'to take precautions for.' The words are taken from Prov. iii. 4 (LXX.): προνοοῦ καλὰ ἐνώπιον κυρίου καὶ ἀνθρώπων.

22. πεποθήσει πολλη τῆ εἰς ὑμᾶς is to be connected with σπουδαιώτερον: 'more earnest because of the confidence in you inspired by Titus's account.'

23. είτε ὑπὶρ Τίτου. He now winds up his account of the messengers, with a general recommendation of them to the Corintian Church. After Trow must be supplied some such phrase as λέγω. For the use of είτε with independent nominatives, see I Cor. xiii, 8: είτε γλώσσαι . . είτε γνώστε.

κοινωνός is generally so used as to express in what the person participates, but here and in Philem. 17, standing alone, it must be 'my intimate comnanion.'

καὶ εἰς ὑμας συνεργός, 'and especially my fellow-labourer towards you.'

ἐκτύστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν, 'they are messengers of congreἀπόστολοι gationa.' From the omission of the article, it is evident that the stress is laid on ἐκκλησιῶν, to express the authority with which they came; by which, therefore, both the nameless brothers were appointed.

This passage is one of the few where the word arborolog is applied to any besides the Apostles of Christ. In Phil. ii. 25, it is used of Epaphroditus, in Rom. xvi. 7, of Andronicus and Junia, and Acts xiv. 4, 14, of Barnabas.

δόξα χριστού. It is hard to say why this expression 'the' or 'a 'glory of Christ,' should be used so emphatically of these brethren. It evidently expresses the same thought as the phrase πρός την του κυρίου δόξαν, in verse 19, and δοξάζοντες τον θεόν, in ix. 13. This last passage seems to imply that the glory of Christ would in an especial manner be shown to the Jewish Christians by the zeal of the Gentile Christians in their behalf; and the same is implied in the narrative of the Acts xv. 3, 'the conversion of the Gentiles . . . caused great joy to all the brethren; and xxi. 19, 'when James and the elders had heard what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry, they glorified the Lord.'

ήμων, απόστολοι έκκλησιών, δόξα χριστού. ²⁴την οὖν ἐνδειξω τῆς ἀγάπης ὑμών καὶ ἡμών καυχήσεως ὑπὲρ ὑμών εἰς αὐτοὺς *ἐνδεικνύμενοι, εἰς πρόσωπον τών ἐκκλησιών.

· erbeifaobe, nat eis.

24 ° messengers of the Churches, the glory of Christ. Wherefore "display ye to them 'the proof of your love 'and of our boasting on your behalf, 'in the face of' the churches.

24. νην ενδειξιν, 'the dis- here marks play.' to a new su readiness.' What this 'boast' was, appears more clearly from ix. 1, 2, 3, and the mention of it here marks the point of transition to a new subject.

The construction of the participle for the imperative is frequent in St. Paul; see Rom. xii. 9-19; Eph. iii. 18; Col. iii. 16.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. VIII. 16-24.

Before I proceed I must thank God, whose goodness I see before my eyes in the earnestness, equal to my own, which has taken possession of the inmost being of Titus; for, though he received the entreaty which I made to him, yet it was from his own intense earnestness that of his own accord he determined to start on his journey to Corinth. As his companion, you will find the Christian friend who has his praise repeated in all the congregations where he has preached the glad tidings of Christ and not only so, but was chosen by those congregations to travel with me whilst I was collecting this contribution, the contribution which will redound to the glory of no less than Christ Himself, and will prove my zeal for the Christian poor in Judaa. This precaution has been taken, to avoid any imputation of misappropriation of so large a sum, and in the wish. as it is said in the Proverbs, to look forward for the exhibition of what is good, not only before the Lord, but before men. And with these two I have sent another friend, my own companion, whose earnestness I have proved often before, and now see to be yet more increased by his confidence in you. Remember, therefore, that Titus is my ocn intimate counsellor, and, as far as you are concerned, my active fellow-labourer;

and that the others are messengers of many Christian congregations, and are the glory of the name of Christ. Display to them, and in the presence of the congregations which have sent them, the truth of your love and of my boast of you.

Two points are remarkable in this account of the mission:-

First. The Apostle's worldly prudence, in securing 1. The Apostle's more of the Apostle's presence of constant companions. It exemplifies a predeces combination rarely seen, of common sense and sagacity with great enthusiasm, and as thus fulfilling our Lord's precept, 'be yo wise as serpents and harmless as doves.' He makes his printual voyage not with his sails full spread and filled, to catch every gust of his own impulse or of popular enthusiasm, but (as he here describes) 'drawn in' and 'furled.' Such was his conduct, as described in the Acts, when he argued with the Sanhedrin', and effected his escape from the conspiracy appread to the Emperor, and cheered the crew in the ship-wreck.'

Secondly. The insight which is afforded into the outward administration of the Early Church.

- (1) We find, in the expressions 'through all the 2. Admintence,' messengers of Churches,' a certain intercommunication between the different congregations. Church They are not independent of each other, on the one Church hand; and, on the other hand, they are not united to each - other by any external polity.

 (2) The officers of the Church are elected by these congregations. This agrees with the form of election of the chief officers—the Bishops,"—which continued down to the fifth century.
- (3) They are elected for specific purposes; in this case for the administration of the alms of the Churches for the Christian poor in Jerusalem, and to travel with the Apostle. With this

¹ Matt. x. 16.

Ibid xxv. 11.
 Ibid, xxvii. 10, 22, 34.

Acts xxiii. 6.
 Ibid. xxiii. 17.

agree the frequent indications in the Acts, that (to use the words of Jeremy Taylor1) ' there was scarce any public design or grand employment, but the Apostolic men had a new ordination to it, a new imposition of hands,"2

(4) This is the earliest detailed instance of the special missions on which the Apostle sent out his favourite and confidential companions at the head of other disciples, to arrange the affairs of a particular Church. What Titus does here at Corinth, is the same in kind as what he is afterwards charged to do at Crete,3 returning when his work is ended.4 And the same may be said of the charge to Timotheus at Ephesus.5 It is the first beginning of what in its permanent form became Episcopacy.

¹ Works, vii. p. 43. 4 Tbid. iii. 12.

² Compare Acts xiii. 1, xiv. 26, 5 1 Tim. iii. 1-vi. 21; 2 Tim. iv. ³ Tit. 1-5, ii. 15.

THE SPIRIT IN WHICH THE COLLECTION IS TO BE MADE. Chap. IX. 1-15.

ΙΧ. ¹περὶ μὲν γὰρ τῆς διακονίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἀγίους περισσόν μοί ἐστιν τὸ γράφειν ὑμῶν ²οἰδα γὰρ τὴν προθυμίαν ὑμῶν ἢν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν καυχῶμαι Μακεδόσιν, ὅτι ᾿Αχαΐα

1 For rabout the ministering to the saints it is super-2 fluous for me to write to you: for I know ryour readiness of mind of which I boast of you to the rthe Macedo-

The Apostle now once more turns back to the collection itself, but reluctantly, as if he was afraid that he should annoy them by importunity; and he therefore hangs what he has to say on the mission of the brethren, which he has just mentioned; and presses upon them (1) speed; ix. 1.—5; (2) readimess; ix. 6, 7; (3) bountly;

8-16. ΙΧ. 1. περί μέν γάρ τῆς διακονίας. This complication of thoughts is apparent in the construction of this first sentence. The sense required is, 'I have made a boast concerning you to the Macedonian Churches, which I trust will not be nullified by your lukewarmness. For this reason, though knowing your zeal, I sent the brethren beforehand.' Accordingly, the proper construction would be that &πεμψα δέ in verse 3 should have followed immediately on the men-tion of his 'boast' in viii, 24. But he wishes, after his manner, to state his approval of what they had done before he states his fear of what they were going to neglect: and therefore first expresses the confidence which had caused his boast. 'I speak of my boast and of my anxiety concerning it, for to urge upon you the contribution is needless.' For similar constructions see viii. 12; 1 Cor.

x. 1.

The parenthesis thus introduced continues to verse 2, and the original sentence is resumed in περιβια δή, in 3. μίν may either have a relation to this δέ, as though the sentence were περὶ δὲ τῶν ἀὲλρῶν οἱν περισσόν, or may stand by itself to limit his words to the contribution, as in I Cer. γ. 3.

τὸ γράφειν περισσόν, ' my writing to you is superfluous." γάρ gives the reason for περισσόν-'I say superfluous, for I know your readiness.' For the meaning of 'Ayafa, see i. 1. For the fact of the preparation of the Corinthian Church in the past year, see viii, 10. The tense of παρεσκεύασται, and the entreaty in the next verse that they would 'be prepared' ("ra παρασκευασμένοι ήτε), as though they were not now prepared, intimate that the Apostle in his over confidence had overstated the case to the Macedonians: and he now dwells on the fact of his having done so with the view partly of not giving a cause of complaint to the Macedonians, partly of delicately giving another motive to the Corinthians to complete their work. That he should have made an over-statement is παρισκεύασται ἀπό πέρυσι, καὶ 'δ 'ύμων ζήλος ἡρέθυσεν τους πλείονας: 'δετεμψα δὲ τοὺς ἀδελφούς, ἴνα μή τό καίγημα ήμων τό ὑπέρ ὑμῶν κενωθή ἐν τῷ μέρει τοὐτῷ, ἴνα καθὸς ἐλεγον παρεσκευασμένοι ἦτε, 'μή πως, ἐὰν ἔλθωσω σὰν ἐμοί Μακεδόνες καὶ εὖρωσω ὑμᾶς ἀπαρασκευάστους, καταισχωνθώμεν ἡμεῖς (ὑα μὴ λέγωμεν ὑμεῖς) ἐν

* Lachm. Ed. 1. τδ.

Þ Add ₹€.

nians, 'that Achaia 'has been prepared' a year ago, and syour zeal 'provoked' the greater part; 'but I 'sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this 'trespect', that as I said ye may be 'prepared, lest haply, if 'any Macedonians' come with me and find you unprepared, 'ce (that we way not ye') should be ashamed in this same not to be wondered at, if we consider his eagerness and his love for the Church of Corinth, and it is paralleled by the hasty exclamation about the High Priest in Acts xxiii. 3—5.

καὶ ὁ ὑμῶν ζῆλος ἡρίθισεν τοὺς πλείονας, 'and it was by your zeal that the majority of the Macedonian Christians were stimulated to their generosity,' τοὺς πλείονας being the principal word in the sentence.

ζηλος, 'zealous affection,' see xi. 1. Lachmann, in his first edition, read τὸ ζηλος, with B. (as in viii. 2, τὸ πλούτος).

The 'brethren' (viii. 16—24) were sent beforehand, to prevent the appearance of his having exaggerated the generosity of Corinth.

κενωθη, 'nullified.' It is also joined with καύχημα, in 1 Cor. ix. 15.

iν τῷ μέρει τούτῳ, 'in this matter,' as distinguished from those other matters in viii. 11—16, in which he knew that his boast would not be nullified.

ίνα καθώς έλεγον παρεσκευασμένοι ἦτε, 'that you might be prepared, as I said that you were prepared.'

Mακτδόνες, 'any Macedonians.' This shows that the 'brothers,' in viii. 17—24, were not Macedonians. It also agrees with the fact that Macedonians did accompany him to Corinth. See Acts xx. 4.

καταισχυνθώμεν, 'ashamed of having exaggerated.'

(γα μ) λέγωμεν ὑμεῖς. This, though put in parenthetically, is the real cause of this appeal, throwing upon them the responsibility of defending him.

it 'r j śrosrásez raśrp. The omission of rąś ewystesez (D-E). J. K. which probably copied them from xi. 17] in B. C. Di. F. G. The control of the control of τή ὑποστάσει ταύτη." δαναγκαίον οὖν ἡγησάμην παρακαλέσαι τοὺς άδελφούς, ἐνα προέλθωσω "πρὸς ὑμάς καὶ προκαταρτίσωσω τὴν "προεπηγγελιμένην εὐλογίαν ὑμῶν ταύτην ἐτοίμην εἶναι οὐτως ὡς εὐλογίαν καὶ μὴ "ὡς πλεο-

Add τῆς καυχήσεως.
 προκατηγγελμένην.

4 60xep.

5 "stedfastness. "A Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they "should go before unto you and make up beforehand your bounty "which was announced' before, that the same might be ready as a matter of bounty."

thing on which to take one's stand.'

5. παρακαλέσαι. See note on viii. 6.

προελδωσεν ... προεπηγείωσεν, i.e. * before the arrival of myself at Corinth.' προεπηγγελμένην, 'before my arrival in Maconia,' as in ix. 1, 2, 3. The word πρό is thus thrice repeated emphatically, as though he had said, 'my watchword is, Beforehand.' Compare the same sense of it in xiii. 2.

Ekkey/u is used in this Section (an nowhere less in the N. T.) in Ekkey/a, the poculiar sense of bleasing. A gift, like xáper: the gift, or the spirit of giving, is regarded by the Apostle both as in itself a gift and bleasing of God, and as calling down the blessing of God, and as calling down the blessing of God, so give than the control of the compare It is more bleasing of God, to give than to receive? (Acts xx. 35); and also,

also,
'It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.'

The LXX. employ it indifferently for 'gift' and 'blessing,' as in Gen. xxxiii. 11, of the gift of Jacob to Esau; as a translation of קריקה, a 'blessing.' In Prov.

xi. 25, 'a generous mind' is expressed by 725 50; 'a soul of blessing.' Originally the blending of the two ideas arose from the fact that every blessing or praise of God or man was in the East (as still to a great extent) accompanied by a grif (the modern bathatish); and every gift suggested the expectation of some other gift or advantage in re-

The Apostle with this new word opens a new subject, namely, the freedom of spirit in which the contribution should be made. In doing this he takes advantage of the especial sense which εὐλογία had now acquired as equivalent to evyapistia. (Compare the parallel passages ευγαριστήσας, Luke xxii. 17; εὐλογήσας, Mark xiv. 22; and see notes on 1 Cor. x. 16.) 'Your gift is called a "blessing or "thanksgiving," let it then be made as a free thank-offering from the abundance of the blessings which God has given, and not as a payment, which you covet, and which you grudge. the Divine blessing (εὐλογία) is identified with the ready gift, so human covetousness (πλεονεξία) is identified with the unwilling gift.

νεξίαν. ⁶τούτο δὲ (ὁ σπείρων φιαδομένως καὶ δερίστε, καὶ ὁ σπείρων ἐπ εἰδογίαιε καὶ θερίστε, καὶ ὁ σπείρων ἐπ εἰδογίαιε ἐπ εἰδογίαιε καὶ θερίστε) ⁷ἐκαστος καθώς ⁸προήρηται τῆ καρδία, μὴ ἐκ λύπης ἢ ἐξ ἀνάγκης ⁸ Ἰλαρόν γὰρ δότην ἀγπα ὁ θεός. ⁸Ἰλαντεί δὲ ὁ θεός πάσαν χάρω περισσύσται εἰς ὑμάς, Ἰνα ἐν παντὶ πάντοτε πάσαν αἰτάρκειαν ἔχοντες περισσύγτε εἰς πὰν έγρον ἀγαλθός, ⁸καθώς γέγραπται Ἐνοτοσύγτε εἰς πὰν έγρον ἀγαλθός, ⁸καθώς γέγραπται Ενοτοσύγτε εἰς πὰν έγρον ἀγαλθός, ⁸καθώς γέγραπται Ενοτοσία ⁸καθος ⁸κ

• процрейти.

b δυνατός.

and not of covetonsness. But "there is this' ('he that soweth sparingly, "sparingly shall he also 'reap, and he that 's soweth bountifully, bountifully shall he also 'reap'), every one according as he purposeth in his heart, not 'out of sorrow' or of necessity: for 'God loveth a cheerful giver.' And God is able to make 'every grace abound towards you, that ye 'at every time' having 'every sufficiency in 'every sthing may abound to every good work, as it is written, τοῦτο δέ. Understand φημί, as I Cor. vii. 29, 'this is what I mean.'

The metaphor of sowing and reaping is, in the Epistles, almost always applied to contributions and alms. See note on 1 Cor. ix. 11.

is' ελλεγίαις, 'on the condition of blessings,' or 'large gifts;' comp. I Cor. ix. 10, is' ελετίει άρατρων. 'These are the terms on which we give and on which he shall receive;' as in Luke vi. 38, 'Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down.'

ἔκαστος, i. e. ἐιδότω.
 προήρηται, 'has chosen freely,' according to its classical sense in Arist. Ethics, 'iii. 2.

τη καρέιη, 'in his own innermost being: 'see note on viii. 16. λύπης... ἀνάχνης. These two words explain πλεονεξίαν—' from a feeling of grief or of necessity,' as opposed to the cheerfulness which the Apostle always makes an essential part of alms-giving (see note on viii. 2; Rom. xii. 8), which he here justifies by a reference to Prov. xxii. 8: ἄπδρα ἰλαρὸν καὶ δότην εὐλογεῖ θεός (LXX.).

8. He expands the reason for giving liberally. ὁ θεός refers back to ὁ θεός in verse 7.

πάσαν χάριν, 'every gift.' It is used generally, both for what God gives to them, and for what they give to others, as εὐλογία in verse 6.

περισσεῦσαι, 'make to overflow.' For this active sense see on iv. 15.

The accumulation of πάσαι, ἐν παντλ, ἀνότοντ, πάσαι, πὰ is remarkable. The stress is on περισσεύφτα as connected with πέρισσεύφτα, — 'He can make your wealth overflow, so that having a sufficiency (αὐτάρκταν, see 1 Tim. vi. 6; Phil. iv. 11) for yourselves, you may overflow in good deeds to others'.

raθως γίγραπται, 'so as to exemplify the saying in Ps. cxii.

πισεν, έδωκεν τοις πένησιν, ή δικαιοσύνη αὐτοῦ μένει elς τὸν αίῶνα. ¹⁰δ δὲ ἐπιχορηγών "σπόρον τῷ σπείροντι καὶ ἀρτον els βρῶσιν "χορηγήσει καὶ πληθυνεί τὸν σπόρον ὑμῶν καὶ "ἀὐξήσει τὰ "γενήματα τῆς δικαιοσύνης ὑμῶν σπέρμα, αὐξήσαι,

Σορηγήσαι καὶ πληθίσαι.
 γεννήματα.

'he 'dispersed abroad, he 'gave to the poor, his righteoustoness remaineth for ever.' Now he that 'supplieth seed to the sower 'will both 'supply bread for o food, and multiply your seed o and increase the fruits of your righteous-

(LXX. cxi.) 9," 'The man who fears God gives bountifully, and yet has more to give always," the stress being thus eis τὸν αἰῶνα. laid on the last words, μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, 'abides for ever,' 'is never to be exhausted.' Compare Heb. vii. 16, 17, where the immortality of Mclchizedek's priesthood is argued in like manner from the expression 'for ever' (εἰς τὸν αἰāva) in Pa. ex. 4.

isospirace, "acattered," is the link with the context of the Apostle, as suggested by the image of sowing, begun in verse 6, and continued in 9; and shows that in the Apostle's mind, as well as in the Psalmist's, the nominative case is 'the liberal man.'

η δικαιοσύνη, 'righteousness,' δικαιοσύνη, here, and in 10, is used in the same sense as in the LXX., Psalm exi. 9, namely,
'beneficence.' See note on 1
Cor. xiii. Comp. the reading δικαιοσύνην for ἐλιημοσύνην, in Matt. vi. 1.

10. ô ô ê êrxxopnyw. He here resumes, after his quotation, the thought of verse 8: 'But, if you so scatter, He that supplies the wants of the sower and consumer in the natural world, will supply yours also.' έπχορηγών, from its primary sense of 'supplying the chorus,' is hence applied πχορηγών. mand, and in the N. Test. is always used of the help rendered by God to man. See Gal. iii. 5; Col. ii. 19; 2 Pet. i. 11.

σπόρον τῷ σπείροντι καὶ ἄρτον εἰς βρῶσιν are suggested by the use of these very words in the comparison of the word of God to the rain in Isa. Iv. 10 (LXX.). τὰ γενήματα τῆς δικαιοσύνης

^bμῶν ('the fruits of your righteousness' or 'beneficence') is suggested by Hos. x. 12, where the whole passage turns like this on the metaphor of sowing: σπεί-

par tauvoic sic δικαιουόγην, γρυγόφατα els caprob Lobis, γρυγόφατα els caprob Lobis, γρυγόφατα els caprob Lobis, γρυγόφατα els caprob caprob els crois high γρυγματα δικαιοσύνης μέρι. Από αντόρον refers to the harvest, γνύματα refers to the vintage, the word being used in later Greek, word being used in later Greek, (see Matt. xxv. 29, Mart. xy. 25), in the same collection of alms, form, xx. 28.

Compare 1 Cor. iii. 6: 'I planted; Apollos watered; but God gave the increase.' ¹¹ἐν παπλ πλουτιζόμενοι εἰς πάσαν ἀπλότητα, ἦτις κατροχάζεται δι' ἡμῶν εὐχαμοττίαν *[τφ] θεφι ¹¹ὅτι ἡ διακούα τῆς λειτουργίας ταὐτης οὐ μόνου ἐστὰν προσαναπληροῦσα τὰ ὀστερήματα τῶν ἀγίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ περισσεύουσα διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαμοττών τῷ θεφι ¹¹διὰ τῆς δοκιμής τῆς

Lachm. Ed. 1. εὐχαρ. δεφ̂ (δτι τῷ χριστῷ), καὶ διὰ.

11 ness. Being enriched in every thing to all 'liberality, which 12 'worketh through us thanksgiving to God that the 'ministration of this service not only 'is filling up' the wants of the saints, but 'abounding also by many thankgivings unto I God; 'thev by the 'proof of this ministration' glorifying

11. πλουτιζόμενοι may be connected with ἐχοντες and περιστόνητε in verse 8, but is rather an instance of the Apostle's free use of participles for indicatives or imperatives, as in viii. 24. ἐν ποιτί and εἰς πἄσιν are accumulated upon each other as in verse 1. ἀπλότητα, see note on viii. 2.

ήτις κατεργάζεται εξ΄ ἡμῶν εὐχαριστίαν βεψ, 'Your liberality by its contributions produces through us who administer it, thankfulness from those who receive it.'

τῷ θτῷ, 'towards God,' gives the religious turn which he immediately follows up in the next sentence.

12. § čascovía, see viii. 4.

Arrospría. Arrospyčie, Astrospyčie, 27, of this very contribution, and in Phil. ii. 30, of a similar one.
The sense is as in classical Greek of a 'public service,' but here restricted by list use to religition here with 'bhankegiring to God,' it may have a sense corresponding to the priestly service, performed in the Temple by the priests offering victims, in the Christian church by the people
Christian church by the poople offering good deeds and praise. Compare the same connexion of thought, Heb. xiii. 15, 'by this we offer continually the sacrifice of praise to God, that is, the fruit (comp. yeripara in verse 10) or lips, giving thanks to His name. But to do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.'

προσαναπληρούσα, 'supplying by addition,' only used here, and in xi. 9.

περισσεύουσα διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστιῶν τῷ 5εῷ. 'Overflowing beyond its immediate object of relieving want through the many thanksgivings which it causes to be sent up to God.'

Lachmann, in his 2nd Ed., reads rp 3ep (C. D. G.), in his 1st Ed. rp yeerp (B.); and on the same grounds, in his first retains, and in the second omits, can before 2sd in verse 13.

13. This sentence, like the one immediately preceding in verse 11, is without grammatical conexion: δοξάζοντες relates to πολλών, as πλουνιζόμινοι to ὑμῶν.

διὰ τῆς ἐοκιμῆς τῆς διακονίας, 'through the experience of this service.'

δοξάζοντες τὸν θεόν, see viii. 23.

διακονίας ταύτης δοξάζοντες τον θεον έπὶ τῆ ὑποταγῆ τῆς όμολογίας ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ εἰαγγέλιον τοῦ χριστοῦ καὶ ἀπότητι τῆς κοιωνίας εἰς αἰτοὺς καὶ εἰς πάντας, ¹⁴καὶ αὐτῶν δεήσει ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐπιποθούντων ὑμᾶς διὰ τὴν ὑπερβάλλουται χάρω τοῦ θεοῦ ἐξό ὑμῶν. ¹¹ χάρις * τῷ θεῷ ἐπὶ τῆ ἀνεκλιγήτρα ἀιτοῦ δωρεῷ.

God for "the subjection of your confession in regard to the gospel of Christ, and liberality of your communication 14 in regard to them and in regard to all, and themselves by their prayer for you 'longing after you because of the 18 exceeding grace of God [seen] "upon you. "Grace" be unto God for His unspeakable gift.

* Or 'thanks.'

in't rỹ tương ở rặc quaboying quab tệc rò charyyther roi ygerrö.

'They glorify God for the obedience which belongs to the confession of your faith, in regard to the Gospel of Christ.' For the use of gohovyin, in this sense, see 1 Tim. vi. 12; Heb. iii. 1, iv.
14, x. 23, in all cases used for the profession of Christianity.'

εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ χριστοῦ.

See ii. 12. It gives the religious ground of thankfulness, as εἰς αὐτούς in the next clause gives the human ground.

άπλότητι τῆς κοινωνίας (not 'the sincerity of their communion,' but) as in viii. 4, the liberality of their communication.'

είς αὐτοὺς καὶ εἰς πάντας, ' to the Jewish Christians, and if to them, then to all.' 14. καὶ αὐτῶν, . . . ἐψ' ὑμῖν. This an according the open and is another independent sentence, following out in sense, though not in grammar, the preceding: 'And they, with prayer for you, long to see you, because they hear of the exceeding gift which God has worked in you.'

In these four last verses, the Apostle throws himself forward into the time when at Jerusalem he should receive the thanks of the Jewish Christians for this contribution, and thereby witness the completion of the harmony between the Jowish and Gentile Churches. Hence the impassioned thanksgiving for what these seems an insequence occabes seems an insequence occation of the contribution of the contribution of the contribution of the transfer of the contribution of the c

1 Cor. xv. 57: Gal. i. 5: Eph.

iii. 20: 1 Tim. i. 17.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. IX. 1-15.

I have spoken of the boast which I made concerning you to the Macedonian Churches. I have urged you to receive the mission of Titus with Christian love. I might have urged upon you more directly the duty of preparing the contribution; but I have not done so; because the very ground of that boast was my confidence in your zeal, which led me to make the boast that even a year ago the contribution was prepared, on the faith of which the areat mass of the Macedonian collection has been made, Titus and his companions were sent for this very reason that you might be fully prepared; lest I should appear to have exaggerated what you had done, and lest any Macedonian Christians, who may accompany me to Corinth, should think that they have been deceived, and so I, or rather you, should have cause to blush for what I said. Therefore my injunction to the brethren was to be beforehand in arriving at Corinth, to be beforehand in preparing the contribution, as I have been beforehand in announcing it: remembering that, according to the language of the Old Testament, such a contribution is a blessing-a blessing both to the givers and receivers, and therefore to be given willingly and plentifully, as though it were something which you were glad to part with, not something which you were grasping to keep. What I mean is this :- That all contributions are, according to the well-known figure, like seed sown: if sown sparingly, there is a scanty harvest: if plentifully, as men shower down blessings, then there will be a harvest of blessings. And in such contributions let every one give according to the free choice of his own heart and conscience; as the Proverbs declare, it is only a cheerful giver whom God loves and blesses. And the God who so loves a cheerful giver. is able to make an overflowing not of one only, but of every kind of gift; so that, not in one matter only, but in every matter, not at one time only, but at every time, you may have for yourselves, not one kind only, but every kind of sufficiency; and that you may in your turn overflow, not in one kind only, but in every kind, of good work. As the Psalmist describes of the good man how he 'scatters, and gives to the poor, and yet his beneficence remains inexhaustible for all time; ' and, as Isaiah describes the word of God like the rain which always supplies ' seed to the sower and bread for food,' so He will surely supply and multiply the harvest of your good deeds, and the vintage of your benevolence; and thus you will have riches of every kind to spend on every kind of liberality. Thus the result will be a areat thanksgiving, not only in the sight of man, but of God : not only a necessary supply of the wants of the Christian poor, but an overflowing, as in a sacred service, of many thanksgivings to Christ: those who experience the benefits of this contribution will offer glory to God for your obedience to the confession which you made in the service of the glad tidings of Christ, for the liberality of your communication in the service of themselves and of all Christians : and in their prayers they will long to see you for the favour which God manifests so. areath to you and through you to them, and which calls forth in me one last thanksgiving for the gift, great beyond words to express, in the fulfilment of this mission.

In concluding this Section, two points are to be remarked:

I. The great stress laid by the Apostle on the Importcontribution of the Corinthian Church. He had ance of the warned them in the First Epistle 1 to have it ready; contribuhe had 'boasted' of their preparations, making the Corinvery most of it that he could to the Churches of thian Church. Macedonia: by that boast the Macedonian Churches had chiefly been stimulated to make exertions,2 which, by the time that he wrote this Epistle, had been very great, almost beyond their means.3 He now devotes a whole section of an important Epistle solely to this subject; he sends Titus, the most energetic and fervent of his companions, with the view of urging the completion of the collection; 4 he joins with him two Christians, distinguished for their zeal, known through all the congregations through which he had passed, tried by himself in many difficulties, messengers of many Churches, 'the glory of Christ Himself.'5 He heaps entreaty upon entreaty that they will be ready, that they will be bountiful. He promises the fulness of God's blessings upon them if they persevere: 6 he anticipates a general thanksgiving to God and Christ, and an ardent affection for them, from those whom they relieve: 7 he compares the contribution to no less than the gifts of God Himself, as though it were itself an especial gift of God, and could only be expressed by the same word ("grace," blessing') 8: he urges them to it by an appeal to the suffering life

¹ 1 Cor. xvi. 1-4.

^{2 2} Cor. ix. 2.

⁵ viii. 2, 3,

⁴ viii. 6, 17.

⁵ viii, 18, 22, 23, 6 ix. 4, 5, 6—10. 8 viii. 1, 7, 9, ix. 5, 6.

of Christ: I he utters solemn thanksgivings to God for the zeal which Time showed in the matter, and for the 'unspeakelle gift' itself.* Finally, when on arriving at Corinth, he found the gift completed, it determined his course to Jerusalem' in spite of his ardent desire's to visit Rome and Spain, and in spite of the many dangers and difficulties of which he was warned upon his road, for the sake of taking this contribution he was 'bound in spirit', he was 'ready to die for the name of the Lord Jesus; "and if he should succeed in finding that it was 'acceptable,' then, and not before, he could 'come with joy' and 'refresh himself' with the Christians of the West."

The reasons which invested this contribution with such importance, are probably to be found in the fact that he had been expressly charged, as a condition of his separate Apostleship to the Gentiles, with making this collection 8 for the Jewish Christians. Hence he would be doubly anxious to present it, especially that part of it which came from the capital of Greece, from his own chief and favourite Church, and the place of his longest residence in Europe. It was a proof of his influence over them, and was also a peace-offering 9 from the greatest of the Gentile Churches to the greatest of the Jewish, a recognition of the spiritual blessings which had proceeded from Jerusalem.10 His ardour in the cause thus belongs to the same impassioned love for his country and people, which shows itself with hardly less vehemence, though in a more general form, in the Epistle to the Romans: 'I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren's sakes.'11 'My heart's desire and prayer to God is, that they might be saved.'12 'Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, 13

This unexpected burst of Jewish enthusiasm thus occurring in the midst of an address to his own especial converts, is a touching proof how, in a strange land, he still remembered Zion; how the glories of the Apostleship had not extinguished the generous feelings of the Jewish patriot; how tender the recollection which, unlike the proverbial bitterness of converts and renegades, he still cherished for the Church of his nativity, and the land of his people.

7 Rom. xv. 32.

II. This Section shows that the community of goods, described in Acts ii. 44, iv. 32, had even already come to be observed only in spirit; and that the idea of Christian equality required not an absolute uniformity, but a mutual co-operation and assistance. It could no longer be said that 'none among believers possessed aught of his own; 'or that 'none lacked.' There were rich Christians and poor Christians. The only question that arose was the regulation of their mutual relations and duties. Such an undoubted instance of change in regard to one of the most important institutions of the early Church, is valuable as a warning against laying too much stress on adherence to the letter of any of them. Of a like kind is the inference to be drawn from the Apostle's declarations of the duty of almsgiving.

Almsgiving was not a duty peculiar to the Christian religion. It is surged as a religious obligation equally Apostoliin the Jewish observances before, and the Mussul-enliver of man precepts since, the coming of Christ. But this Almsgiven passage, whilst it agrees with the general epitric Oriental religion in exalting munificence to a high rank amongst the gitts of God, differs from the merely mechanical view which the Pharisaic Jews, the Koran, and in a later time some of the mediaval saints, have held concerning it. They have dwelt on the amount bestowed as in itself drawing down the Divine blessing. The Apostle, even in his undisguised cagemess to obtain the largest possible contribution, insists with no less eagerness on the spirit in which it is given.

THE ASSERTION OF HIS INTENTION TO EXERT HIS APOSTOLICAL AUTHORITY.

Chap. X-XIII.

WITH A DIGRESSION (x. 6-xii. 10)

VINDICATING HIS AUTHORITY AND CHARACTER AGAINST THE CHARGES OF THE FALSE TRACKERS.

THE transition from the first to the second part of the Epistle,

Change in is so marked that it might almost be thought to be a distinct composition. The conciliatory and affection of the tionate strain of entreaty which pervaded the first part is here exchanged for a tone of stern command. and almost menace: there is still the same expression of devotion to the Corinthian Church; but it is mixed with a language of sarcasm and irony which has parallels in the First Epistle, but none up to this point in the Second. With this change in the general tone agrees also the change in details. Instead of the almost constant use of the first person plural to express his relations to the Corinthians, which pervaded the first part of the Epistle, he here almost invariably, and in some instances 2 with unusual emphasis, employs the first person singular; the digressions no longer go off to general topics, but revolve more and more closely round himself; the Corinthians are no longer commended 3 for their penitent zeal, but rebuked 4 for their want both of love and penitence. The confident hopes 5 which he had expressed for the future are exchanged for the most gloomy forebodings.6

What is the change that has come over the spirit of his Possible Epistle? A momentary doubt might be suggested solutions. whether it was not an intermediate fragment between the First and Second Epistles, transposed by mistake to this part of the Apostolic writings. But this is forbidden, as well by a comparison both of the general character and the details of the two portions of the Dipistle. In spite of their many differences, yet the resemblance between them is greater than between any other two portions of the Apostle's writings; the abruptness of the digression, xi. 7—15, xii. 1, is paralleled only by such as ii. 14—16, iv. 2—6, vi. 14, vii. 2; and the topics, although treated much more personally, are still the same. Compare iii. 1, and x. 13—18; ii. 17, and xii. 14—19.

¹ 1 Cor. iv. 8—10, vi. 3—8, ix. ⁴ xii. 15, 20, 21. 1—16, xv. 4. ⁵ vii. 9—16,

² x. 1, xii. 13. ³ vii. 7—16.

Another solution might be, that in this part of the Epistel he is occupied with a different section of the Corinthian Church; namely, the false teachers and their adherents. But although this holds a much more prominent place than in the former part, it is evident from x. 8, xi. 1—9, xii. 11—15, xiii. 11, 12, that he is still, on the whole, addressing the same body as in Chanters i.—ix.

Rejecting, therefore, any attempt to separate this portion of the Epistle from the rest, there still is nothing improbable in supposing a pause, whether of time or of thought, before the beginning of the tenth Chapter. It may be that in the interval news had come again from Corinth, indicating a relapse of fervour on the part of the Church at large, and a more decided opposition to him on the part of the Jewish section of the Church, Or, after the full outpouring of his heart, he may have returned to the original impression which the arrival of Titus had removed; as the time of his visit either actually drew nearer, or was more forcibly impressed upon his imagination, he was again haunted by the fear already expressed (ii. 1), that he should have to visit them, not in love, but in anger. Such a feeling of fear, at any rate, is the basis of this, as that of gratitude was the basis of the first, portion of the Epistle; it is from this that he starts (x. 1-7), from this the digressions fly off (x. 12, xii, 10), and to this his conclusion returns (xii, 11, xiii. 13).

[The argument of this portion is so personal, and so closely entangled together, that it has been found necessary to follow a somewhat different arrangement in the position assigned to the general remarks.] χ. 1 Αὐτὸς δὲ ἐγὼ Παῦλος παρακαλῶ ὑμᾶς διὰ τῆς 8 πραΰτητος καὶ ἐπιεικείας τοῦ χριστοῦ, δς κατὰ πρόσωπον · mondreros.

Now I Paul myself rexhort you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who in race am rdowncast among Aὐτὸς δὲ ἰγὼ Παῦλος.

 This emphatic stress on

'I Paul.' his own person is the fit introduction to the portion of the Epistle which, beyond any other part of his writings, is to lay open his individual life and character. 'Look at me : it is no longer in conjunction with others that I address you; it is not as at the beginning of the Epistle "Paul and Timotheus;" but Paul alone-that Paul who is charged with making empty boasts; he now places himself before you, with all his human feelings of love and tenderness, to warn and entreat you not to drive him to extremities.

The only other passages where a similar phrase occurs, are in Gal. v. 2, 'Behold, I Paul say to you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing;' Philemon 19, 'I Paul have writen it with mine own hand;' Eph. iii. 1, 'I Paul the prisoner of Christ.'

It might be inferred from this that this portion of the Epistle, like that to the Galatians and Philemon, was, contrary to his usual custom, written by his own hand.

διά τῆς πραύτητος καὶ ἐπιεικείας τοῦ χριστοῦ. Compare Rom. κii. 1; Phil. ii. 1.

The force of the expression here, however, is more personal. One would expect that he was going to entreat 'The them, by the example of Christ, to be forgiving and forbearing towards him; but the context shows the sense to be, 'You know, and I know, how meek and forbearing was Christ; do not provoke me into even an apparent deviation from that example, by a misconduct which will compel me to use severity.' ἐπιεικεία, ἐπιεικής, are always used in the N. Test. in contradistinction to violence or irascibility. wpaurne is generally used of gentleness, in contradistinction to severity or anger; see I Cor. iv. 21. The appeal to the example of Christ indicates that the Apostle had before his mind, not merely the general idea of perfection, but the definite historical character of gentleness and patience as exhibited in the Gospel narratives. Matt. xi. 29; Luke xxiii, 34.

The construction here is conpleted, would have required after παραιαλώ some clause expressing that they were not to exasperate him. But (with a transition somewhat similar to that in Eph. iii. 1—iv. 1) he recommonese the sentence in verse 2 with μὲν ταπτινός ἐν ὑμῖν, ἀπών δὲ θαρρῶ εἰς ὑμᾶς ^{} δέομαι δὲ τὸ μὴ παρών θαρρῆσια τῆ πεποιθήσει ἢ λογίζομαι τολμῆσαι ἐπί τινας τοὺς λογιζομένους ἡμᾶς ὡς κατὰ σάρκα περιπατούντας. ^{}೬ν σαρκί γάρ περιπατούντες οὐ κατὰ σάρκα στρατενόμεθα ^{*}(τὰ γαρ ὅπλα τῆς στρατείας ἡμῶν

2 you, but being absent am bold toward you: but I *ptray that *rbeing present I may not be bold with *that confidence wherewith I think to be bold against some who *reason of us as if we walked according to the flesh. For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war *according to the flesh kiopai ki, and thus the joint sense of the whole is: '! entreat you, or rather, I pray that you may not force me to transfer my confidence in my power from the times when I am present with you.' For a similar interchange of παρακαλῶ and δέσμα see v. 20, 21, vi. 1, viii. 4.

ταπεινός, 'downcast,' as in 1 Cor. ii. 3, 'with much fear and trembling, and in weakness;' compare vii. 6.

θαρρώ εἰς ὑμᾶς, 'I am confident in my power against you,' in a different sense therefore from 2πρω ἐν ὑμῖν, vii. 16.

κατὰ πρόσωπον is 'face to face.' in opposition to ἀπών, as in I Cor. xiii. 12, πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον.

2. τὸ μὴ παρῶν Βαρρῆσαι. The article expresses, 'this is what I ask;' the nominative is used, because the Apostle is speaking of himself.

λογίζομαι, opposed to λογιζομένους, 'I calculate on being bold in conscious uprightness and dependence on God; they calculate on my failure as controlled by human means.' κατά σάρκα alludes to the low motives charged upon him, as in ii. 17, iv. 2; 1 Thess. ii 3. γάρ is the reason for τολμήσαι.

is appel is opposed to carri σάρκα, and περιπατούντες to στρατευόμεθα. 'Although we are still in the influences of the world, it is not by the influences of this world that we are actuated' (compare John xvii. by σαροί... 15, 'not... out of καστά σάρκα.

the world, but . . .

from the 'evil')—'although we are treading the pathway of the world, it is not from the armoury of the world that we derive our strength.' ir another refers to his bodily infirmities and dangers, as in vii. 5, xii 7; and the sense is the same as in iv. 7, 'we have this treasure in earthen vessels'.

περιπατούντας, though not necessarily expressing more than 'living' (versantes), is used as in v. 7 with reference to its proper etymological sense of 'walkrobras.

ing to and fro.'

στρατενόμεθα is (not merely 'we fight,' but) 'we make our expeditions,' μεθα.

alluding to the march, as it were, which he was going to make upon Corinth, as against a strong fortress; and this image is now carried on into detail. οὐ σαρκικά, ἀλλὰ δυνατὰ τῷ θεῷ πρὸς καθαίρεσιν ὀχυρωμάτων), δλογισμοὺς καθαιροῦντες καὶ πᾶν ὕψωμα ἐπαιρόμενον κατὰ τῆς γνώσεως τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ αἰχμαλωτίζοντες

(for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but 'strong 5 through God to the 'casting down of 'fastnesses), casting down 'reasonings and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every τυμωμα although only used in the LXX. in a more general sense, is by strong. Aquila used in Deut. xxxxii. 13; 1 Sam. ix. 12; Ps. xviii. 34, as a translation.

 5. καθαφείν ὀχυρώματα is employed in the LXX for the reduction of strongholds; Lam. ii. 2; Prov. xxi. 22; 1 Mace. v. 65, viii. 10. Compare Hor. Ep. II. ii. 25—30, 'Luculli miles . . Pressidium regale loco dejecit, ut aiunt, Summe munito et multarum divite rerunt.

translation of Bamah—'a high hill.'
αἰχμαλωτίζω is (not merely 'to enslave,' like ἔσυλιώω, but) to 'lead away as prisoners of war.' To this peculiar turn of warlike imagery the recollections of the Mithridatic and Cilician Piratical wars may wars. have in part contributed. Both of these contests partook of the character here indicated; the second especially, which had been raging amongst the hill forts of the Cilician pirates not more than sixty years before the Apostle's birth. in the very scene of his earlier years, and which was ended by the reduction of 120 strongholds, and the capture of more than 10,000 prisoners. (See Appian, Bell, Mith. 234-238; Arnold's Rom. Commonw. i. 272.) Underneath these outward images

he expresses not merely a general warfare against sin and pride, but the special warfare which he had to wage against the offenders in the Corinthian Church, and every one of his words assists him in carrying out the metaphor.

λογισμούς, referring back to λογιζομένους in verse 2, expresses that is of a mental, not a bodily warfare, that he is speaking, while ύψωμα is selected as having the double meaning, both of a natural eminence (as given above), and also of mental elevation, whether in a good or bad sense, as in Job xxiv. 24: Judith x. 8, xiii. 4, xv. 9; the meaning being further defined in this place by έπαιρόμενον κατά τῆς γνώσεως τοῦ Θεού. καθαιρείν has also this double sense, being frequently used in writers of this period for 'taking down' the pride or arguments of opponents, as rò φρύνημα καθελείν, Dio Chrys. lvii. p. 571 b, lxxiii. p. 634 a; Appian. B. C. ii. p. 766. την αλαζονείαν καθαιρούντες, Aristid. t. ii. p. 259. τον έπιτειχισμόν των έναντίων δόξων καθαφείν, Philo. de Abrah. p. 32. καθαιρήσειν πάντα λόγον . . . ού πόλεμος άλλ' εἰρήνη, Philo, de Confus. Ling. p. 424. (See Wetstein ad loc.

stein da toc.) δυνατὰ τῷ θεῷ, as ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, Acts vii. 20, 'in the sight of God.'

For a similar elaboration of a πῶν νόημα, εἰς τὴν ὑπακοὴν τοῦ χριστοῦ, ⁶καὶ ἐν ἐτοίμῳ ἔχοντες ἐκδικῆσαι πᾶσαν παρακοήν*, ὅταν πληρωθῆ ὑμῶν ἡ ὑπακοή, * Luchm. Ed. 1, παρακοήν. δταν πληρωθή.

sthought to the obedience of Christ, and having in readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled, military image, compare the description of the Christian panoply in Eph. vi. 11—17.

 $i\ell_c$ rip bracoip roi χ_0ero i in sense the same as if it had been rip bracoip $(ai\chi_0 n\lambda_0 n\ell_c^2er\delta)$ ar rip bracoip $(ai\chi_0 n\lambda_0 n\ell_c^2er\delta)$ ar rip bracoip $(ai\chi_0 n\lambda_0 n\ell_c^2er\delta)$ to the changed to $i\ell_c$ rip bracoip $ai\chi_0 n\delta$ $ai\chi_0$ $ai\chi_0$

6. There might still remain some rebels against his authority, even after all the conquest which he has just described, and these, he now proceeds to say, he was prepared to punish (comp. Luke xix. 27, 'those mine comies, which would not that I consider the content of the

not to come to Corinth till the mass of the Church were prepared to receive him (i. 23), so here he hastens to add, 'when gown obedience is infilled.' He acted, as has been observed, on a wise application of the principle 'divide et impera,' as when he threw the apple of discoverad amongst the Pharisese and Sadducesa, Acts xxiii. 6—10.

ir iroipφ ξχοντες, 'being prepared,' so Polyb. ii. 34, 2; Philo, Leg. ad Caium, pp. 565, 584. παρακού is used in contradistinction to ὑπακού, before and after.

• νμῶν is placed before ἐπακοή, and out of its natural position,
to show that it is the emphatic word.

The context requires that ὅταν πληρωθῆ should be joined to the preceding clause, as in the Text; not to the following, as in Lachmann's 1st edition.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. X. 1-6.

I now wish to speak to you of myself, of that very Paul against whom you hear so much. I conjure you not to compel me to break the bounds of the gentle and forgiving character of Christ. I pray that when I come to you there may be no occasion for exerting that authority which some think I shall never venture to exercise but at a distance. But be assured that, if I do exercise it, it will be a read authority. I shall come against you like a mighty conqueror, though with weapons, not of earthly, but of heavenly warfare; and every alien thought and imagination shall fall before me, like fortresses before a victorious army, and shall be reduced to submission, like captive bonds; and those who resist shall be punished the the last remnents of a defeated insurrection. To effect all this, I wait only till I am assured of your submission, that I may not confound the innocent with the guilty, the dupes with the deceivers.

HIS BOAST OF HIS CLAIMS.

Chap. X. 7—XII. 18.

At the concluding words of the preceding threat, the thought of his adversary or adversaries in the Corinthian Church rises before him in a more tangible form than it had yet assumed. He determines to throw aside the delicacy which had hitherto prevented him from speaking openly of his claims, and to give the Corinthians once for all a full picture of whom it was that they were deserting for their present leaders. Accordingly he leaves the immediate subject of this portion of the Epistle. which was to consist of the assertion of his authority on his expected arrival at Corinth: and he embarks on a wide digression, which, though often interrupted and broken into many fragments, is still held together by one thought and one word, his boasting (καυγασθαι). It is in his mouth a word of His peculiar significance, because it is so reluctantly used: 'Bost' and because it is intended to express that assertion (if one may use a modern phrase of equivalent meaning) of his own merits, against which a great part of his general teaching was especiit really serves to express his meaning; and therefore, though use a modern phrase of equivalent meaning) of his own merits, acquisits which a great part of his general teaching was especially aimed. But with that freedom, which is characteristic of the Apostolic writings generally, he is not afraid of a word, if it really serves to express his meaning; and therefore, though with many apologies, it occurs no less than sixteen times in the course of this section. As he overcomes his scruple to use the word, so also he overcomes his scruple to speak of himself. It is always with reference to some position taken up by his opponents. They occupy the background of the portrait; and their conduct, with the misconceptions or suspicious entertained by the Coriuthians regarding himself, justifies this departure from his ordinary usage, and supplies the clue to the successive stages of his vindication.

⁷τὰ κατὰ πρόσωπον βλέπετε. *εἶ τις πέποιθεν ἐαυτῷ χριστοῦ εἶναι, τοῦτο λογιζέσθω πάλιν ʰἀφ' ἐαυτοῦ, ὅτι

* βλέπετε; b Lachm. Ed. 1, ἐφ' ἐαυτοῦ,

7 'ye look on things after the outward 'face. If any 'one trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think

7. 'Such is the authority which I claim, the power which I am prepared to wield. there are those among you who doubt it; because you regard (not the inward reality, but) the outside appearance of things." By the outside appearance he alludes to the various recommon. points of outward superiority alleged in his opponents. That this (and not any of the other meanings attached to it, 'conspicuous, 'what lies before you,' &c.) is the signification of τα κατά πρόσωπον, is clear from the sense of πρόσωπον in this Epistle (see v. 12, έν προσώπω καυχωμένους καὶ μη καρδία, and x. 1, κατά πρόσωπον -where it is used, not merely as an equivalent to #goor, but 'in external appearance'), and in the similar phrase βλέπεις εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον, Matt. xxii. 16; Mark xii. 14. Comp. also Jude 16; Luke xx. 21; Gal. ii. 6, and the universal sense of προσωπολήπτης ... Andia, and ... Anmreire. That βλέπετε is to be understood not as interrogative or imperative, but as indicative, appears (though more doubtfully), because if it were interrogative or imperative it would probably be at the heginning of the sentence; and if interrogative, would probably be preceded by re or some similar word; if imperative, it would require to be taken in an ironical sense, hardly justified by the context.

He now points out the various outward shows which the Corinthians regarded instead of the inward realities. The first of these was the profession made by the false teachers of a closer connexion with Christ than that enjoyed by him. That there was such a claim at Corinth, appears from the party watchword, 'I am of Christ,' I Cor. i. 10, and (more doubtfully) from the pretensions of the false teachers to be 'Ministers of Christ,' 'Apostles of Christ' (xi. 23, 13). From the fact that these false teachers were Judaizers (xi. 22), it may also be inferred that this connexion with Christ was through some earthly relationship. either as being Jews, or as having seen Him, or been His companions in His lifetime, or through His kinsmen after the flesh, the 'brethren of the Lord.' Compare the Apostle's answers to the charges of this or a similar party in 1 Cor. ix. 1. 'Am I not an Apostle? . . . have I not seen the Lord Jesus?' followed by an allusion (4) to 'Kephas' and 'the brethren of the Lord.' It would also illustrate the Apostle's expression (v. 16) in this Epistle, even though we have known καθών αδτός χριστού, ούτως καὶ ἡμεῖς. ⁸ εἰω ^{}[τε] γὰρ ^{} περιστότερόν τι καιγήσωμα περὶ τῆς ἐξουτίας ἡμῶν ῆς ἐκο ὁ κύριος ⁴εἰς οἰκοδομὴν καὶ οὐκ εἰς καθαίρεσω ὑμῶν^{}, οὐκ αἰσγωθήσομα, ^{} τω μὴ δόξω ὡς ἐν ἐκφοβεῖν ὑμας διὰ τῶν ἐπιστολοῦν. ^{}δστι ἀ! ἐπιστολαὶ μὰν φασών βαρείαι

- Add Χριστοῦ.
 Add ἡμῶν.
 MS, C. is deficient from ὑμῶν] to the end of the Epistle.
- ' Αί μέν ἐπιστολαὶ, φησί.

s this again, that as he is Christ's, even so are see. 2. For though I should boast somewhat more of our "power which the Lord "gave a for "your edification and not for casting you odown,' I "shall not be ashamed, that I may not seem as 10 if I would terrify you by 'my epistles.' For 'his "epistles'

Christ after the flesh, yet henceforth know we Him no more [after the flesh], implying that there were some who were proud of having so knowa Him. Compare also the language of the same party of Judaizers, as expressed in the Clementines (Hom. xvii. 17). See Introd p. 352—3.

Whether the phrase, 'If any one' (ree, in the singular), points to an individual, or not, must be left in uncertainty. Similar expressions are repeated in x. 10, 11, 18, xi. 4, 20.

 πάλιν, 'once more,' as in 1
 Cor. xii. 21.

άφ' ἐαντοῦ (text with C. D. G.), 'from himself,' i. e. 'without being reminded of it by me.' Lachm. 1st Ed. with B. ἐφ' ἑαντοῦ.

ἡμεῖς, i. e. the Apostle: here, as in the earlier portion of his Epistle, using the plural for the singular.

8. 'I truly belong to Christ; for even if my boast extended far beyond this (πρυσούτρου), it would still be true.' The transition from the singular to the plural is occasioned by the mixture of personal and general feelings which the passage contains. The parenthesis "which the Lord hath given us for building up (collapse, in a recurrence to the former image of the fortress, in verse 5, which he here modifies, apparently under the same feeling as in 1. 29, 23, 10 space not that we are lords over your faith."

ώς ἄν is used adverbially like ώς εἰ, 'as if.'

10. At iπιστολαί. The plural, this Epistles, need not imply anything more than an allusion to his Epistles generally; not that he had written more than one to Corinth before this. καὶ ἰσχυραί, ἡ-δὲ παρουσία τοῦ σώματος ἀσθενής καὶ ὁ λόγος *ἐξουδενημένος. 11 τοῦτο λογιζέσθω ὁ τοιοῦτος, ὅτι οἶοί ἐσμεν τῷ λόγῳ δι' ἐπιστολῶν ἀπόντες, τοιοῦτοι

* έξουθενημένος.

say they 'are weighty and 'mighty, but his bodily presence 11 is weak and his 'word contemptible.' Let such an one think this, that such as we are in word by 'epistles when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are βαρείαι, 'effective, impressive;' a word often used by the later Rhetoricians for energetic, impressive oratory. (See Wetstein.) ἰσχυραί, 'vigorous.'

η δὲ παρουσία τοῦ σώματος, 'his arrival in person,' ἀσθετής, 'infirm.' (See note on xi. 16.) ἐξουζετημέτος, 'contemned,' 'thought nothing of.' (See 1 Cor. vi. 4.)

Lachmann, with B., reads oasir, but the Rec. Text is supported by D. E. F. G. J. K. and may well be the true reading. If so, it points to a single person, as confirmed by x. 7, xi. 20. This passage is the only instance of the very words used by St. Paul's opponents. It thus gives a contemporary judgment on his Epistles, and a contemporary description of himself. Its expressions apply, doubtless, chiefly to the First Epistle to Corinth, and the effects of that Epistle (see 2 Cor. vii. 11) illustrate the epithets here employed to express the heavy blows which it dealt on the hearts of its readers. The description of the personal appearance of Personal the Apostle is in acappearance of the Apostle. We gather from the New Testament and other sources. The representa-other sources. The representations of it in the pictures of Raphael are doubtless in a high degree delusive. His arrival at Corinth, 'in weakness and with fear and much trembling' (1 Cor. ii. 3), agrees with the general impression derived from this Epistle, and that to the Galatians, of the nervous susceptibility and agitation of his temperament and his manner. The comparison of Barnabas to Jupiter and of himself to Mercury, by the people of Lystra (Acts xiv. 12), implies that he was the least commanding of the two. The traditional description, as preserved in the allusions or detailed accounts of the Philopatris (of Lucian?) (c. 12), the Acts of Paul and Thecla (Fabric, Cod. Pseudep.), Malalas (Chronog. 10, p. 257), Nicephorus (H. E. ii. 37) is of a man of low stature, bent figure, and awkward gait; a white complexion; bright grey eyes, under overhanging eye-brows; a strong aquiline nose; nearly bald, but with a thick bushy beard, interspersed with grey hairs. His low stature is the ground of an old belief that he was the same as the contemporary of Gamaliel, known by the name of 'Samuel the Little.' (Conybeare and Howson, 2nd ed. vol. i. 70.)

11. ὁ τοιοῦτος, see ii. 7.

12. The thought which runs through the previous verses 7—

10 is that the power which he threatened to exercise in verses

καὶ παρόντες τῷ ἔργῳ. 12 οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν ἐγκρίναι ἡ συγκρίναι έαυτούς τισιν τῶν ἐαυτοὺς συνιστανόντων. ἀλλὰ

12 present. For we rdo not dare to' rplace ourselves, or rjudge ourselves ramong some of rthose that commend themselves.

From this he passes Measuring on to contrast the reourselves by ality of his claims with ourselves." the emptiness of those of his adversaries; his claims being grounded entirely on his own labours, theirs on labours of which they appropriated the glory to themselves, but which were really his (12-18). These two thoughts, here blended together, are brought out separately in 1 Cor. iv. 1-6, and Rom. xv. 17-21. Such is the general sense; the particulars must, to a great extent, depend on the reading of the MSS. (1) The Rec. Text, with which Lach-Reading of the Re- mann and Tischendorf ceived Text, substantially agree, and which is founded on B. D3. E. J. K., has où συνιοῦσιν (or συνιάσιν) ήμεζς δέ . . . καυχησόμεθα, συνιούσιν may be either (a) the dative plural participle, in which case μετρούντες καὶ συγκρίνοντες must take the place of the principal verb; or (b) the 3rd person plur. ind. present, having the same meaning as συνιᾶσι (as in B.). In either case, the general sense is the same :-'we cannot endure to rank ourselves amongst those who commend themselves; on the contrary, they measuring themselves by their own standard, and comparing or ranking themselves with themselves, thereby show their folly; whereas we refuse to boast beyond our lawful measure, but on the contrary keep to the measure appointed for us by God.' The indicative is preferable. The Apostle first contrasts himself with those that commend themselves, and then explaining, that the folly of this self-commendation consists in judging of themselves by their own standard, contrasts himself with them still further, by showing that he measures himself by the standard of God, and confines himself to the sphere pointed out to him by God. The great objection to this mode of explanation is: (a) that the context of the sentence would naturally lead us to expect in abroi not the Apostle's adversaries. but the Apostle himself. (b) that in the 13th verse, the contrast is not, properly speaking, between God's measure and man's measure, but between teaching out of a lawful sphere, and teaching within a lawful sphere.

1-6 was not an empty boast.

Both these difficulties may indeed be explained by the extreme abruptness and rapid transition so frequent in this Epistle; but they would leave the passage one of the most entangled in the N. Test. Other modes of interpreting the present text, are still more violent. Such would be the attempt to take airoi as of the Apostle, and συνιοῦσι (the dative participle) of the adversaries: we, on the other hand, confine ourselves to ourselves, and do not rank ourselves with those who are not wise.' Or again, to take airoi of the Apostle, and συνιούσι (the dative particiαύτοὶ ἐν ἐαυτοῖς ἐαυτοὺς μετροῦντες καὶ συγκρίνοντες But they measuring themselves by themselves and 'judging ple) also of the Apostle: 'we do not rank ourselves with ourselves, we whom they call not wise. (2) If, on the other hand, instead of the Rec. Text,

Reading we adopt the other reading supported by less Vulgate. authority, the whole passage will cohere almost without difficulty. The Vulgate omits the words on oursager, while D. F. G. omit also the words ημείς ĉέ, D. omitting also καυγησύμεθα, for which F. G. substitute καυχώμενοι. So, if we combine these varieties, all tending in the same direction, the text will run thus: άλλ' αὐτοὶ έν ἐαυτοῖς ἐαυτούς μετρούντες, και συγκρένοντες έαυτούς έαυτοίς ούκ είς τα άμετρα. άλλα κατά το μέτρον: and the sense will be: 'We cannot endure to rank ourselves with those that commend themselves; on the contrary, we are measuring ourselves by ourselves, and ranking ourselves with ourselves, not going into spheres beyond our measure.' The contrast will then be based simply on the distinction between intrusion beyond a lawful sphere, and selfrestraint within it. In this way the word μετρούντες in the twelfth verse, has the same sense as μέτρον οτ άμετοα in the thirteenth: and whatever irregularity there may be in the omission of capynσόμεθα, or the substitution of καυγώμενοι for it, it is no more than is frequently found in the Apostle's writings, and is in this case corrected, as it were, by the resumption of the sentence in our είς τὰ άμετρα καυχώμενοι, in 15.

If we could suppose that où συνιάσιν had crept in from the margin, as an explanation of rioir, then hpeic ce would naturally follow as an antithesis, to meet the new sentence thus unexpectedly formed, to which again subsequent correctors would add καυχώμενοι or καυχησόμεθα. This explanation and reading is defended at length by Fritzsche in 'Dissert. ad 2 Cor.' pp. 35-48; and attacked in Reiche's 'Comment. in Epp. ad Cor.' pp. 373-385 τολμώμεν,=' sustinemus.' ' we cannot endure,' perhaps with a tinge of irony: 'we can venture on the full exercise of our power, but not on classing ourselves. &c. Comp. for this use of the word Rom. xv. 18; 1 Cor. vi. 1.

έγκριναι ή συγκριναι, 'to rank one's self in any manner whatsoever with those,' &c. The two words are put side by side, on account of their similarity of sound, in order, after the Apostle's manner, to express the completeness of his assertion. Compare yerworker and avayeνώσκειν, iii. 2; ἀναγινώσκειν and έπιγινώσκειν, i. 13; κατατομή and πέριτομή, in Phil. iii. 2, 3.

έγκρῖναι, 'to enroll as in a catalogue.' It never occurs in the N. Test. again, nor in the T.XX συγκρίναι, 'to combine' (and hence 'to interpret,' as in 1 Cor. ii. 13), 'to liken,' or 'make equal,' and so in LXX.

τών ξαυτούς συνιστανόντων. See iii. 1. Those who 'commended themselves' are charged by the Apostle with intruding, έαυτοὺς έαυτοῖς οὐ *συνιᾶσιν· 18 ήμεῖς δὲ δοὐκ εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχησόμεθα, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τοῦ κανόνος οὐ συνιοῦσιν. See note.

 ὑ οὐχί,

13 themselves among themselves are not wise: but we will not boast of things reyond our measure, but according to the

as if by the authority of their commendatory letters, into his sphere; and this forms the subject of the next verses, 14—18.

The meaning of the next words varies, of course, according to the two readings given above. If the reading of the Rec. Text is preferred, then μετρούντες is 'measuring,' not in the sense in which it is used in the following verses, of 'limiting,' but of 'comparing,' as by a standard; and συγκρίνοντες is also used, not as συγκρίναι in the previous clause, for 'ranking' or 'assimilating,' but in the sense of 'comparing,' of which signification there are instances in Greek writers of this period (see Lobeck ad Phryn. p. 278), but not in the N. T. or the LXX.

On the other hand, in the reading of the Vulgate, the words perper and συγκρίνειν both retain their original meaning; and the peculiarity of the expressions in lauroic laurous and laurous laurole, as applied to the Apostle himself, would be explained by the desire to express as strongly as possible the strict limits within which he confined himself. He would thus oppose himself both to the exaggerated boasts and the unwarranted intrusions of his opponents; 'limiting ourselves within our own limits, and associating ourselves only with ourselves.'

13. Without adopting the tradition which represents the Apostles as portioning out the world amongst them, with a peculiar province for labour in the Apo-Gal. ii. 9, that at least stolic age. in the great divisions of Jew and Gentile, the former belonged to the original Apostles, James, Peter, and John, the latter to Paul and his companions. It was also the Apostle's maxim, never to establish himself for any permanent stay, in those parts where the Gospel had already been preached by a previous teacher; so much so, that his visit to Rome (which had already received the faith) was regarded by him merely as taken on his way to Spain, which was still open to any new teacher (Rom. xv. 18-24). This arrangement was doubly infringed by the appearance of Jewish teachers at Corinth ; the sphere of the Apostle of the Gentiles was invaded by Jews; the sphere which St. Paul had won for himself by his own labours, was appropriated by those who had no original claim to it. To Antioch, the original seat of his teaching, they 'came from James' (Acts xv. 1; Gal. ii. 12). In Galatia 'a little leaven' of their influence had so completely 'leavened the whole lump,' that the Apostle was regarded as an 'enemy' (Gal. v. 9, iv. 16). And even at Corinth, their power had reached such a height, that 'the majority,' at οῦ ἐμέρισεν ἡμῖν ὁ θεὸς μέτρου ἐφικέσθαι ἄχρι καὶ ὑμῶν 14(*ὧς γὰρ μὴ ἐφικνούμενοι εἰς ὑμᾶς ὑπερεκτείνομεν ἐαυτούς ; measure of the rule which God rimparted to us, a measure 14 to reach even unto you (for Ar do we stretch ourselves beyond least of the teachers, had joined them (ii. 17), and already in the First Epistle the Apostle complained that 'he had laid the foundation, and another built upon it,' and 'that whilst they had ten thousand teachers (maicaγωγούς) they had but one father, for that he only (ἐγώ) had begotten them through the Gospel' (1 Cor. iii, 10, iv. 15). Now they were claiming to be 'Apostles,' and 'more than Apostles' (xi. 5, 13), and endeavouring to shut out the Apostle of the Gentiles from the greatest field of his exertions (x. 16). This conduct the Apostle rebukes by contrast with his own forbearance. His 'boasting' was confined to the sphere which had been marked out for him, and which, according to the joint representations of Rom. xv. 18-24 and Acts xiii .- xxviii., seems to have extended 'from Jerusalem to Illyricum,' i. e. through the provinces of Asia Minor and Greece, properly so called, and ending where the barbarian languages of Illyria put a check to his communications with the natives. Of this sphere Corinth, up to this time, had been the extreme point. Hence the expressions used emphatically here, 'to you,' 'as far as you' (axp: cal ύμων, έφιςτούμενοι είς ύμας), imply that he had a right to speak confidently of his labours so far, but no further; whilst at the same time he had hopes, which he afterwards accomplished, of advancing westward first as far as Illyria, and then, omitting, or hastily passing by the Italian cities, where the Gospel had already been preached, to the still further regions of Spain.

· où vào ás uh.

τὰ ἄμετρα, properly 'unmeasured;' but here 'beyond the measure fixed for us.' κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τοῦ κανόνος οὖ ἐμέρισεν ἡμῖν ὁ θεὸς μέτρου. κανών is the 'rule' by which the limits of the sphere are marked out. It occurs in Gal. vi. 16; Phil. iii. 16, στοιχεῖν τῷ κανόνι, 'to walk within the prescribed limit.'

The construction is, 'which rule (οῦ referring to κανόνος) God appointed us as a measure' (μέτρου).

(μέτρου). οὐ=δν. μέτρου=μέτρον.

έφεκεθαι, 'to reach.' These last words explain the introduction of the name of 'God as the author of his limits.' 'God has appointed and enabled me to fulfil my duty.' Compare the parallel passage, Rom. x. 18, 'I will not venture to speak of the things which Christ has not wrought in me.'

14. The sense is the same, whatever be the right reading; 'We are not extending our beast beyond our limit.' For the metaphor 'stretching out ourselves,' as if trying to reach over, compare ἀνοκοραδουία in Rom. viii. 19. If the Rec. Text (D. G.) οἱ γὰρ ὡς μἡ be correct, then the meaning is, 'for we do

άχρι γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν ἐφθάσαμε ἐν τῷ εἰαγγελίῳ τοῦ χριστοῦ), ¹⁵οῦκ εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχώμενοι ἐν ἄλλοτρίοις κόποις, ἐλπίδα δὲ ἐξονστε αξιανομένης τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν ἐν ὑμῶν μεγαλυνθήναι κατὰ τὸν καυόνα ἡμῶν εἰς περισσείαν ¹⁶εἰς τὰ ὑπερέκεινα ὑμῶν εὐαγγελίσασθαι, οὐκ ἐν ἀλλοτρίῳ καυόνι εἰς τὰ ἔτοιμα καυχήσασθαι. ¹⁷ὁ δὲ καυχώμενος as though we reached not unto you? for we are come as 15 far as to you also in the gospel of Christ), not boasting of things beyond our measure in other men's labours, but having hope that as your faith is increased we shall be enlarged by you to preach the Gospel according to our 10 rule to abundance in the regions beyond you, not to 17 boast in another's rule of things made ready for us. But not extend ourselves heyond our sphere, as would be the ease if our sphere did not reach as far as you.' If, according to Lachmann (B.) ob is omitted, the mann (b.) ου is omitted, the same sense is still preserved by making it a question: 'Do we extend ourselves?' &c. ἐφικνούμενοι, 'coming,' applies not to the actual visit (which would require the past tense), but to the general sphere of the Apostle (which naturally requires the present tense).

άχρι γάρ καὶ ὑμῶν ἐφθάσαμεν ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίφ. This expresses the actual fact: 'Not only does our sphere extend to you, but, as a proof of it, we have come as far as you.' The conversion of the Corinthians is given as the proof of his right to convert them, as in 2; 1 Cor. ix. 3. ἐφθάσαμεν, as in Romaic, and as in Matt. xii. 28; Luke xi. 20, is simply 'we came;' or, at least only with a very slight tinge of its earlier classical meaning, 'to be before-hand.' In a sentence so loosely hung together as the present, it is impossible to determine whether the 14th verse or any part of it is parenthetical. At any rate, the words οἰκ.... καυχώμενοι resume the thought expressed by the same words in 13. 15. 'In other men's labours.'

may allude to the fact either that the Apostle himself did not interfere with the labours of other preachers of the Gospel (e. g. in Rome or Palestine), or that his opponents interfered with his labours.

aičasspireg...*representer, vincolly have we the satisfaction of our labours at Corinth, but, in proportion as gour faith increases, because the mean through their assistance, it to the utmost limits of the rule laid down for us' (car's rôs rate vincollary). The control of t τὰ ἔτοιμα, 'ready at hand,' as in Thuc. i. 20. iv. 61.

The word κανχίσσσθαι, 'to boast,' brings him back from the thought of the unlawful intrusion of his adversaries to their empty boasting generally. 'Let him that boasts, boast only of what έν κυρίω καυχάσθω. 18 οὐ γὰρ ὁ ξαυτὸν "συνιστάνων, ξκεῖνός ἐστιν δόκιμος, ἀλλὰ ὃν ὁ κύριος συνίστησιν.

· aunatûr.

18 he that 'boasteth, 'in the Lord let him 'boast. For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.

Christ has done through him; their l for it is not by condemnatory really letters from their own party, but by the blessing of Christ upon the sai their labours, that men's worth is really known.' Comp. iii. 1, 2; Rom. xv. 18; 1 Cor. iv. 1—6. For the same phrase see 1 Cor. i. 31.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. X. 7-18.

But whilst I am thus confident of my power, you regard only outward appearances. Let us see what these outward appearances are, how far my opponents have any exclusive claim to them, or how far they are based on reality. First, they claim a peculiar connexion with Christ. But so do I; yes, and far more, as will be shown by the full exercise of my authority (that authority, he it remembered, which is meant, and which I trust will be used only, for your improvement not for your punishment); and I will now overcome my scruples and go on to boast, contrary to my usual practice, of the extent of this authority and of my communion with Christ. Only remember, that when I do so, not my letters only, as the false teacher asserts, are to be dreaded; when I come to you, you shall find that my deeds fully correspond. For my boast is not, like theirs, founded on commendatory letters from human authorities, but on the commendation of the Lord Himself; it is founded not like theirs, on fame borrowed from the labours of others, and on the occupation of spheres into which they had no right to intrude, but on my own labours in my own sphere. As far as Corinth, but no further (though I trust soon through your help to go further), -no further, but thus far, my labours, and therefore my boast, legitimately extend.

ΧΙ. ¹''Οφελον "ἀνείχεσθέ μου μικρόν τι "ἀφροσύνης. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνέχεσθέ μου. ²ζηλῶ γὰρ ὑμᾶς θεοῦ ζήλῳ· ἡρμο-"ἀνίνεσθε." "λάὐ τῆι.

 $1~{\rm Would}$ ° ye could bear with me a little in my folly. $2~{\rm But}$ indeed bear with me. For I am $^{\rm r}zealous$ over you

Having advanced so far in his boast, he is tempted to proceed; in continuation of the thought expressed in x. 8, 'Though I should beast somewhat more.... I shall not be ashamed.' But he is still full of its uncongeniality; he fustens upon it a name expression.

I shall not be ashamed.' But he is still full of its uncongeniality; he fastens upon it a name expressive of its senselessness, 'His folly.' folly, appearing, occurring eight times in this connexion, and only three times besides (the substantive never) in the rest of his Epistles, viz. Rom. ii. 20; Eph. v. 17 (where it is applied to the irrational folly. or 'nonsense,' as we should call it, of paganism; and 1 Cor. xv. 36. One excuse he urges for his indulging in it; and that is, his affection for the Corinthian Chris-Those intimate relations, which justify a departure from a man's usual gravity of demeanour, existed between him and his converts, and encourage him to proceed.

 "Οφελον ἀνείχεσθε, "would that you could bear with me isomething of my folly." For öφελον see 1 Cor. iv. 8. ἀνείχεσθε (D.E.F.G.J.) is the less usual form for ἠνείχεσθε, μοῦ is governed by ἀνείχεσθε, and ἀφροσύνης by 7τ.

άλλὰ καὶ ἀνέχεσθε may be the indicative, 'Nay, you do bear with me:' but the next verse makes it more natural to suppose the imperative, 'Nay, but I enreat you to bear with me.' If the indicative be taken, then the connexion must be, 'I am sure that you bear with me, for I love you.' If the imperative, then the connexion is, 'Bear with me, and I desire that you should bear with me, for I love you.'

2. ξηλώ γάρ ὑμᾶς 3τοῦ ζήλψ,
'I ardently love you with a love that comes from God.' By comparison with Gal. iv. 17, and by the passeges where the word occurs in the LXX, ζῆλως, ζηλών, would appear to be used exclusively for 'zeal' or 'affection,' the idea of jealousy not entering into its composition.

ήρμοσάμην γάρ. The reason for his affection is that he was the means of their conversion. This he expresses by the figure of a marriage to Christ, in which he gives away the bride; possibly suggested by the paternal relation in which he stood to them (1 Cor. iv. 15); but this notion is not further brought out here, as it would jar with the thought implied throughout, of their union with Christ. For this relation of the Apostle to the Church as 'the friend of the bridegroom,' compare John iii. 29; and for this relation of Christ to the Church, as of the 'Lord' to the Jewish people, Eph. v. 25; Rev. xxi. 2; Matt. xxv. 1; comp. too, Chryσάμην γὰρ ὑμᾶς εὐι ἀνδρὶ παρθένον ἀγνὴν παραστήσαι τῷ χριστῷ, δροβούμαι δὲ μή πως, ὡς ῥ ὄφις ἐξηπάτησεν Εδια ἐν τῆ πανουργία ἀὐτοῦ, δφαρῷ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπλότητος καὶ τῆς ἀγνότητος τῆς εἰς τὸν

• Εδαν έξητάτησεν, οδτω φθαρβ. ο Om. καὶ τῆς ἀγνότητος, with a "zeal of God': for I "espoused you to one husband a that I may present you as a "pure virgin to Christ, but I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, " your "thoughts should be corrupted from the sostom's epithet on the Apostle, νυμφαγωγός τῆς οἰκουμένης. ἀρμόζω is the word properly used of the father's applicant giving away; dopologues (passive) of the bride (Prov. xix. 14); (middle) of the bridegroom (Herod. v. 32, 47); but also of others, as here (Philo, Leg. All. I. ii. p. 78, De Abr. pp.

15, 36). For the Jewish bridesman, see Schöttgen, Hor. Heb. on John iii. 29. Moses was so called by the Rabbis with regard to Israel and the Lord.

iri àrčρi, 'to one husband, to whom you are to remain faithful.'

The phrase raquerijeat τῷ στῷ in Eph. v. 7; in used of Christ Himself, as the Bridegroom. But the turn of that passage (fra raquerijea usive tavrej) shows that such an application of the word is unusual, and that Christ is there represented as being at once the Bridegroom and the Bridegroom's friend (παρανύμθους).

 φοδοῦμαι δt. To his affection for them is opposed his fear lest they should be seduced from their faith. The serpent is introduced on account of the comparison of the bride, which suggests the temptation (not of Adam, but) of Eve. The word ἐξηπάτησεν is taken from Gen. iii. 13 (LXX.), ὁ ὅφις ἡπάτησέ με.

ir τ η πανοφογία is, according to the darker view from which the subject is here approached, assubstituted for the word in Gen. iii. 1, φοντμώτατος. [Philo, Leg. Alleg. i. 86, μαπρηλιπακε φορουμώτ. δ δρες πάντων [Gen. iii. 1) by. πάντων για νουργάτατ όν είναν βεσός. [Compare the connection of πανοφογία and φρότησε in Aristotle, Eth. vi. 13, and Philo, do Prem. et Pen. ii. 416.

The Serpent—as the well-known instrument of Satan (Wind.
ii. 24 is the first mention of the devil in connexion with the Fall).
Rev. xii. 9, xx. 2, 6 δρες 6 δρεχαίος, διαλομμένος διάδολος αιδ σεταγεί στι διαλομένος διάδολος αιδ σεταγεί στο safe those false teachers whom Satan now employed for his instruments, as then the Serpent: see verse 14.

άτὸ τῆς ἀπλότητος . . . εἰς τὸν χρετόν. 'From your singleminded loyalty towards Christ (as your master and spouse). Such is the meaning required by the phrase εἰς τὸν χρ. and justified by the use of the word in 1 Maco. xi. 37, 60, where it is used of 'loyalty to God.'

καὶ τῆς ἀγνότητος is more or χριστόν. *εἰ μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἄλλον Ἰησοῦν κηρύσσει δν οὐκ ἐκηρύξαμεν, ἢ πνεῦμα ἔτερον λαμβάνετε δ οὐκ ἐλάβετε, ἢ εὐαγγελιον ἔτερον δ οὐκ ἐδέξασθε, καλῶς

4 simplicity 'and the purity' that is in Christ. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus whom we 'did not preach, or if ye receive another spirit which ye have not received, or another gospel which ye 'did not accept, ye 'bear well less supported by D¹. E. F. G. B. reads ἀγιότητος.

A tipir yap...co. ack of rifuces.
This is the reason for his fear, viz. that they were willing to endure the false preaching of his opponents, whilst they were not willing to listen to him. This is implied by use, and is more fully set forth when the subject is distinetly resumed in ver. 19

ὁ ἐρχόμενος, 'he that cometh;' not necessarily alluding to a single individual, though combined with x. 7, 10, xi. 20, it would seem to indicate one leading mover. Compare for the same ambiguity, Gal. v. 10, ὁ ταράσσων ὑμᾶς.... ὅστις ἐῖντ ἡτος ἐῖντ ἡτος ἐντ ἡτ

'Although, on the one hand, the false teachers teach a wholly different Christianity from my own (which, therefore, you ought wholly to reject), yet instead of rejecting it, you endure it.' Compare Gal, i. 6-8, where there is the same implied assertion of the contradiction between the system of the Judaizers, and that which he taught himself; and yet of the similarity of the phrases used by the false teachers and himself. Their preaching, as well as his, was a 'Gospel' (εὐαγγέλιον); which agrees with the fact that the name εὐαγγέλων, as applied to the narratives of our Lord's life, is equally used as the designation of the apocryphal and of the canonical Gospels. (Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 1). 'Jesus' was the subject of their teaching as well as his; which also agrees with the indications in v. 16, x. 7, of their peculiar reliance on their outward connection with Christ. They, as well as he, professed that 'the Spirit,' in some form, visibly followed their teaching. 'ablor 'inpulse that aλλον Ιησουν implies that they taught, not another Messiah (which would have been expressed by ἄλλον χριστόν), but another representation of the historical Jesus.

πνεύμα έτερον. For this variation from άλλον, compare έτερον εὐαγγέλιον ὁ οὐκ έστεν άλλο, Gal.

κλδφ is ironical, like 'praclare' in Latin (comp. καδφ άθετεῖτε, in Mark vii. 9),—'You endure them finely.' Comp. ήδως ἀτέχεσθε, vrse 19. The imperf. ἡνείχεσθε or ἀτείχεσθε is introduced in D. E. F. G. J. K., instead of ἀτέχεσθε in B. apparently to lighten the reproof.

5. The counexion is, 'you endure them gladly; why do you not endure me?' It is difficult to decide between & (B.) and ydo (D. E. F. G. J. K.). Comp. a similar confusion of readings between ydo and & in xii. 1. The words form (undesignedly no doubt) an lambic:

λογίζομαι δὲ μηδὲν ὑστερηκέναι.

*ἀνέχεσθε. δλογίζομαι δδὲ μηδὲν ὖστερηκέναι τῶν 'ὑπερλίαν ἀποστόλων. εεἰ δὲ καὶ ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ, ἀλλ'

* ήνείχεσθε. * γάρ. * ὑπλρ λίαν.

5 with him. "But I"think that I ram in want of nothing possessed 6 by the very chiefest apostles. But though I be rude in "word, τῶν ὑπιρλίαν ἀποστύλων, 'the very greatest Apostles,' 'those who are ever so much The very of Apostles.' In the Apostles, first instance he is speaking of the false teachers. He would hardly have used so bitter an expression as υπερλίαν of the real Apostles, nor would the expression ιδιώτης τῶ λόνω ('rude in speech') be used of himself in verse 6, in contradistinction to the Jewish Apostles, who were at least as 'rude in speech' (see Acts iv. 13) as himself; and he also distinctly calls the false teachers ψευδαπόστολοι, 'false Apostles,' in verse 13. Yet, on the other hand, he would hardly have used so strong an expression, unless disparaging comparisons had been instituted between him and the other Apostles. That such was the case at Corinth is implied by the allusions to 'Kephas' and 'the brethren of the Lord' in 1 Cor. i. 12, ix. 4. His own consciousness of independence, if not superiority to them, appears, though more mildly expressed, in 1 Cor. xv. 10, 'I laboured more abundantly than they all;' and Gal, ii. 6-9, 'of those who seemed to be somewhat [James, Kephas, and John, who appeared to be pillars], whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me. For the exaggerated estimate which the Jewish section of the early Church formed of Peter and James in particular, see the extracts from the Clementines in the Introduction to this Epistle, p. 352.

Τhe compound ϋπερλίαν occurs in Eustathius, Od. Α΄, pp. 27, 35:
έττι γάρ ποτε καὶ τῷ λίατ κατὰ τὴν τραγφέαν χράσθαι καλῶς καθ τῷ σημαισέμενον λέγομέν τινα ὑπεραγωίς. 2 Μασε. χ. 34. Compounds οῦ νετρά ματο common in St. Paul; see 1 Cor. vii. 36; 2 Cor. vii. 4, χ. 14, δε.

6. He justifies his boast of equality to these 'ultra-Apostles.' 'Granting that I am inferior in the arts of rhetoric, yet I have the arts of rhetoric, yet I have conduct is perfectly open and straightforward for you to see.' 'Granting to Repair the Apost in the deficient in eloquence,' both because his Epistles show that he possessed that the conduct is perfectly open and the result of the

But he means that he was unskilled in the arts of rhetorical display, on which the Greeks haid so much stress, and Greeks haid so much stress, and of his written styrme produces of his written styrme proposite in this respect to Apollos, who was a 'ready man ('arip Ayno), Acts xviii. 24. For the fact with regard to Faul compare with regard to Faul compare with regard to Faul compare cellency of speech, "not with entiring words of man's wisdom."

being the chief speaker, speech.'

οὐ τῆ γνώσει, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ φανερώσαντες ἐν πᾶσιν εἰς ὑμᾶς. ⁷ἢ ἀμαρτίαν ἐποίησα, ἐμαυτὸν ταπεινῶν ἴνα ὑμεῖς

* φανερωθέντες.

yet not in knowledge, but "in everything we "manifested our-7 selves' among you in all things. "Or did I "sin, in abasing

For the word see 1 Cor. xiv. 16.

On this subject a curious diversity is pointed out by Estius, between Jerome and Augustine; the former taking the words in their literal sense, as expressing the deficiency of St. Paul; the latter maintaining that it is a mere concession, for the moment, to the argument of his adversaries.

The two points on which he lays stress in proof of his Apostlo-ship are (1) his Apostlo-ship are special he would probably have spoken at length immediately, but that he was interrupted by a digression which arises out of his second proof; in namely, (2) his conscientious dealings with the conscient of the c πάσιν, in all circumstances,' or 'before all,' see Phil. iv. 12. The use of φανιρώσαντες, ex-

Charge founded on his refusal of pay.

The provided of the charges one of the charges brought against him by his opponents. This are the provided of the charges of the cha as it bore directly on the subject of his affection for the Corinthians, at the moment uppermost in his thoughts, he answers at once, without pursuing his 'boast.'

by his own labours (see Acts xviii. 3: and the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 1-5). From this three conclusions were drawn: The first was, that it was impossible to conceive how a real Apostle could thus abstain from claiming his undoubted right; the second, that it indicated his want of confidence in the Corinthian Church; the third, that whilst he thus made a pretension to disinterestedness, he was really making a gain under cover of the contribution professed to be collected through Titus for the poor in Judgea. It is the first two of these conclusions that he chiefly attacks in this passage (as in 1 Cor. ix. 1); but the third (which he expressly notices further on, xii. 15-18) must be borne in mind also, as accounting for the rapid transition in the cassage. and for the earnestness with which he repels the charge generally. 'I was shown clearly to be an

This charge was that he took no money from the Corinthian

Church, but supported himself that I made an exception in your favour; and that whilst I received support from others, I never exacted any from you.

7. ἐμαυτὸν ταπεινῶν, 'abasing myself' by working at the trade

Apostle amongst you; or do you doubt my authority and my love for you, because I preached the Gospel without remuneration?

Surely not: it was out of my especial love and care for you ύψωθητε, ότι δωρεὰν τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ εὐαγγέλιον εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῶν; ⁸ἄλλας ἐκκλησίας ἐσύλησα λαβῶν ὀψώνιον πρὸς τὴν ὑμῶν διακονίαν, καὶ παρῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς καὶ ὑστερη-myself that ye might be exalted, because I repreached to syou the gospel of God freely? I robbed other churches taking wages rfor your ministry, and when I was present of a tentmaker. Comp. Phil. iv. 10—12, where the same word occurs in a similar connexion.

ίνα θμείς ύψωθητε, 'that you may be exalted.' The word is used for the sake of the antithesis to ταπεινών, as in the almost proverbial expressions in Matt. xxiii. 12: Luke xiv. 11. xviii. 14: and still more appropriately in James iv. 10. See 1 Pet. v. 6. For the contrast between his earthly abasement and their spiritual exaltation, comp. 1 Cor. ix. 11; the words sow and reap being there used in different senses, as 'abased' and 'exalted,' are here. The exaltation which his abasement would confer on the Corinthians probably lay in the keener sense of their Christian privileges, of which they would be made conscious by feeling themselves the object of his especial attention. For the general sentiment of their elevation above himself, comp. 1 Cor. iv. 8, 'Now are ye full,' &c. τὸ εὐαγγέλιον εὐηγγελισάμην.

Here, as in 1 Cor. ix. 12—18, and more exactly 1 Thess. ii. 9, he uses these expressions in special connexion with the question of his preaching Christianity without remuneration.

8. ἄλλας ἐκκλησίας ἰσύλησα. In answer to the charge that his conduct in this respect indicated want of affection, instead of directly vindicating himself, he merely restates the fact:—' Judge for yourselves; is it possible that this can be from coldness?' He lays stress, not so much on the fact that he supported himself, as on the fact that he received Churches, making the Church of Corinth an exception. This variation from the language of 1 Cor. iz. 1—27; Acts xx. 34, 35; 1 Thesa. ii. 9, is probably to be accounted for by his unwillingent of the control of

It would appear, that at Philippi (Phil. iv, 15, 16), and probably in the Churches generally in rule of his that part of the province, on the eastern of Greece, side of the Strymon, he received support, according to the character of munificence for which he commends them so highly in viii. 2. On crossing the Strymon, he was unwilling (for whatever reason) to burden the Thessalonians; and there, accordingly, was supported partly by two contributions sent after him from Philippi, partly by his own labours (1 Thess. ii. 9; Phil. iv. 16); and again, in like manner, when he had advanced on his journey as far as Corinth (παρών πρός νμάς), he there pursued the same course; the contributions from Macedonia being brought by 'the brethren' who followed him from thence θεὶς οὐ κατενάρκησα *οὐθενός *(τὸ γὰρ ὑστέρημά μου προσανεπλήρωσαν οι άδελφοι έλθόντες άπο Μακεδονίας). καὶ ἐν παντὶ άβαρη δεμαυτὸν ὑμίν ἐτήρησα καὶ τηρήσω.

· 0'8ενός.

δμῶν ἐμαυτόν.

with you, and 'in want', I was chargeable to no man (for 9 the brethren who came from Macedonia supplied "my wants'), and in reverything I rkept and rwill keep' 'my-(verse 9), probably Silas and Timotheus, whom he had left at Beroca (Acts xvii, 14), and who rejoined him at Corinth (Acts xviii. 5). In subsequent periods of his life we find that at Ephesus (Acts xx. 34, 35) he worked with his own hands: that at Rome he still received support from Philippi (Phil. iv. 12-16). Whatever peculiarity, then, there might be in the case of Corinth-and it is implied in this passage, as well as in the distinct notice of it in Acts xviii. 3-must have consisted in the importance attached by the Apostle to the Church of Corinth, and his consequent anxiety to do nothing which could in any degree hurt his influence with them, and to do all that he could to show his real superiority to the false teachers. They rested their chief claims on the fact that they did receive support; and thus the self-maintenance, which elsewhere might be the result of accident, was here a matter of principle with him.

άλλας, 'others,' as opposed to the emphatic vuor, for your scrvice.

έσύλησα, 'I took from them more than their due; not merely enough for my support whilst I was with them, but enough for my support after I left them and came to you.'

οψώνιον, 'pay,' as of a soldier. Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 7.

διακονίαν, properly 'help in poverty or distress,' as where it is used in viii, 4, ix, 1, 13; Rom. xv. 31, for the contribution to help the Jewish Christians; here, probably, in a more general sense, -'to help you, by relieving you from the necessity of supporting παρών πρός ύμᾶς, i.e. in Acts xviii. 1.

ύστερηθείς, 'finding myself in want.' So Phil. iv. 12. κατενάρεησα, 'press, like a dead weight or torpedo,' from raoka, a torpedo. ναρκάω is used in Gen. xxxii. καταναρκάω. 32; Job xxxiii, 19;

but καταταρκάω in no other Greek passage but this and xii. 13, 14, Jerome (Algas. ii. 10) thinks that it is a Cilicianism, like ἡμέρα in 1 Cor. Cilicianism. iv. 3: 'Multa sunt verba quibus juxta morem urbis et provinciæ suæ familiarius Apostolus utitur; e quibus, exempli gratia, pauca ponenda sunt: oi κατενάρκησα ύμων, i. e. non gravavi vos. Quibus et aliis multis verbis usque hodie utuntur Cili-

ces. γάρ is the reason for οὐ κατενάρκησα.

προσανεπλήρωσαν, 'added to my means, and so filled up. å βαρη occurs nowhere else in the N. Test. 10. He now protests his resolution of continuing this practice :

10 έστιν αλήθεια χριστοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ, ὅτι ἡ καύχησις αὖτη ου φραγήσεται είς έμε έν τοις κλίμασιν της 'Αχαΐας. 11 διά τί: ότι οὐκ ἀναπῶ ὑμᾶς; ὁ θεὸς οἶδεν.

10 self from being burdensome unto you. As the truth of Christ is in me, "this boasting shall not be closed against 11 me' in the regions of Achaia. Wherefore? because I 12 love you not? God knoweth. But what I do, that I giving as his reason the necessity of distinguishing himself from the false teachers.

έστιν άλήθεια χριστοῦ ἐν ἐμοί. Not exactly an oath, but 'the truth, or truthfulness of Christ, is in me; and in virtue of that truth I declare.' So Rom. ix. 1. For the same thought that he must act up to the standard of truth which he preached, compare i. 18.

ή καύχησις φραγήσεται. φράσσω is properly to 'fence' or 'wall round,' as in the LXX. generally; but in the N. Test. it is only used for 'closing the mouth, στόμα always following or preceding it (see Rom. iii. 19; Heb. xi. 33), except here, where, however, the sense is the same, ή καύχησις being in part personified (comp. 1 Cor. ix. 15, xv. 31). The meaning will then be, 'my boast shall not have her mouth closed towards me, to prevent her from speaking in my favour; the whole being a condensed expression for το στόμα μου οὐ φραγήσεται, ώστε μή καυχάσθαι έν τούτω ὑπέρ έμοῦ.

έν τοῖς κλίμασιν τῆς 'Αγαίας, 'The regions,' used with regard to the supposed divisions of the heavens, verging towards the poles (comp. Gal. i. 21: Rom. xv. 23): see 1 Cor. i. 2 for 'Achaia.

11. 6 9eòc older. 'God knows you.'

that it is not so,' or 'that I love

 δ δὲ ποιῶ, καὶ ποιήσω, ' it is not from want of love that I do, and shall continue to do this.' The second "va is not in apposition with the first "va, but introduces a subordinate clause to explain the second άφορμήν. 'My object in refusing to take a maintenance from you is to cut away from under the feet of my opponents the ground on which they take their stand (comp. v. 12), namely, the ground of representing themselves to be on the same level of Apostolical authority with me, in the matter of receiving a maintenance.' The whole sense is obscured by the fact that the charge brought against Paul by his opponents was double, and, to a certain extent, contradictory. On the one hand, it is clear from verses 13, 20, and 1 Cor. ix. 1-27, that the false teachers not only received support from the Corinthians, but prided themselves upon it, as a mark of a s kavtheir Apostolical privi- x@rrau.

boasted,' and it was because he did not take this support that they insinuated doubts of Paul's

Apostleship. But, on the other hand, it was obvious that, whilst

Paul's conduct gave him a claim to be considered self-denying and disinterested, their conduct was liable to the suspicion of mercenary motives; and for this reason

leges. This, therefore, was the matter 'in which they δὲ ποιῶ, καὶ ποιήσω, ὧνα ἐκκόψω τὴν ἀφορμὴν τῶν ἐκλότνων ἀφορμὴν, ὧνα ἐφ ἐκυχιὰνται εὐρεθῶστιν καθὼς καὶ ἡμεῖς. ¹³ οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι ψευδαπόστολοι, ἐργάται δλλιοι, μετασχηματιζόμενοι εἰς ἀποστόλους χριστοῦ. ¹⁴ καὶ οὐ 'ἀθμαι" ἀὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ σαπανᾶς μετασχηματί-

Запрастой.

will do, that I may cut off occasion from those who desire occasion, that wherein they boast they may be found 13 even as ne. For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into *apostles of Christ. And 14 no marvel: for Satan himself is transformed into an angel

it was their object, by repeated attacks on the want of Apostolical authority shown in Paul's self-maintenance, to drive him into receiving support, and so to receiving support, and so to remove the difference between him and themselves, which, in spite more favourable light than themselves. Hence a cross-purpose runs through all their attack, and hence the cross-lights (so to speak) of his description of it.

την ἀφορμήν is 'their ground' (not 'against me,' which would require εἰς ἐμέ, or the like, but) 'for themselves,' as in v. 12.

ἐν μ κανχώνται may be 'in the whole matter of their boasting,' or more especially with reference to the maintenance. Compare 1 Pet. iii. 16, ἔνα ἐν ψ καταλαλώστιν ὑμῶν καταισχυνθῶσι.

υξουθωσεν καθώς και ξημείς would, according to the sense, have naturally been expressed, εἰροθωρις καθώς καὶ εἰντό. But as the intention of the clause was to express, not his wish, but theirs, the opponents became the subject of the sentence; and it is equivalent to saying, 'that we may be on a perfect equality in regard to our claims to Apostleship'. For a similar confusion of expression compare Gal. iv. 12, γίνεσθε ὡς ἰγὼ, ὅτε κάγὸ ὡς ὑμεῖς, and, to a certain degree, 2 Cor. viii. 13. The subjunctive εἰψε-Θῶσε for εἰρεθέτεεν is the natural result of the present tense, emphatically ascribed to their proceedings both in δελόντων and καυγώντου.

This interpretation, though harsh, seems, on the whole, the most probable. All others fail, because they ascribe to the opponents a ground for boasting which they did not claim.

14. 'I do this, because such men as I have been describing are fulse apostles,' ψενδαπό- 'False στολοι, 'sham apostles,' apostles.' pretended apostles,' like ψενδόχριστοι, Matt. xxiv. 24;

ψευδοπροφήτης, Matt. vii. 15, xxiv. 11, 24: so called here, because they either gave themselves out to be Apostles, or rested on the authority of the older Apostlos (see note on verse 5).

Crafty artisans (tργάται δύλιοι) seems to be 'workmen labouring for their own gain,' as Acts xix. 25; so tργασία, Acts xvi. 16, 19, is deepened by the meaning of 'craft.' For the whole expression comp. ii. 17, xi. 20.

Transforming themselves in-ζεται εἰς ἄγγελον φωτός· 15 οὐ μέγα οὖν εἰ καὶ οἱ διάκονοι αὐτοῦ μετασχηματίζονται ὡς διάκονοι δικαιοσύνης, ὧν τὸ τέλος ἔσται κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν.

15 of light: therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as "ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works.

to Apostles of Christ,' possibly alludes to the party 'of Christ' (see on x. 7). The allusion to Satan may possibly refer to the Rabbinical

'Satan.' notion of the evil spirit transforming himself into a good angel, of which, however, the only instance adduced by Eisenmenger, Eatd. Judenthum, i. p. 845, is of the angel who wrested with Jacob, and who is represented by the Rabbis as an evil spirit. But it is more likely that here, as in xii. 7, he uses the word in reference to the earliest use of it in the Old Test. in Job i. ii.; and particularly to the transformation there implied, though not expressed, of Satan into the form of one of the angels (LXX. οί ἄγγελοι) who appear in the presence of God.

άγγελον φωτός is in allusion to the light in which God and the angels live; comp. Acts xii. 7.

15. οὐ μέγα. Šee 1 Cor. ix. 11. ὡς διάκονοι, i. e. 'change and become like instruments of right-cousness.' Comp. Rom. ix. 29, ὡς Γόμορρα ἀτ ὡμοιῶθημετ. ἐικαισύνης, 'Christian righteousness, as in v. 21.

Δν τὸ τέλος 'whose final fate.'
See Rom. vi. 21; Phil. iii. 19; and for the construction, Rom. iii. 8.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XI. 1-15.

Let me, then, continue my boast. It is a weakness to sing one's own praises; yet let me conjure you to bear with it for a moment. It is a weakness which arises from my affection for you, that affection which the bridgeroom's friend feels for the bridgeroom. But I am haunted by the fear test the story of the Fall should in your case be enacted over again; lest your affections should be estranged from your heavenly spouse by the tempter, who comes now in the shape of an Apsotolic teacher, as of old in the shape of the serpent. For I see that, notwithstanding the new Jesus, and the new Ospirit, and the new Gospiel of your now teachers, you bear with them; yes, well and easily with them, and why not with me? However far they may push their Apsotolic pretensions, they are not superior to me: they may be superior to me in rhetoric, but assuredly not in divine intuitions, nor in the signs of an Apostle which were so openly and without reserve shown by me amongst you. Is it possible that you doubt this? or do you doubt my love for you, because I debased myself for your exaltation, and refused to receive support from you, in declaring the glad message of Divine favour? True it is, I did so; the fact I cannot deny. Before I came to you, I took more than their due from the Macedonian Churches, to relieve you; and after I came to you, I still continued, when I was in want, to receive support from them, and to maintain myself, without applying to you. This is the fact, and I am proud to avow it; this boast, at any rate, shall speak out boldly, under the sky of Achaia, and shall not be taken from me. And why? not certainly from any want of affection, but from my determination to cut away from under the feet of my opponents the ground which they so desire to establish, namely, that in the matter of which they wish to boast, they and I are on the same level. Well may I desire to make clear this difference between them and myself; for they are Apostles only in appearance, they are interested self-seekers: they appear to be Apostles of Christ. only by a concealment of their own true nature. And that they should be able to effect this concealment is no wonder; their muster, the great adversary of whom we read in the old dispensation under the name of Satan, does the same. He conceals his dark deeds under the quise of an angel clothed in light; and as he is, so are his instruments; and as their deeds are, so will be their end.

¹⁶Πάλιν λέγω, μή τίς με δόξη ἄφρονα εἶναι· εἰ δὲ μή γε, κὰν ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθέ με, ἴνα κάγὼ μικρόν

Is ay again. Let no rone suppose' me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool receive me, that I may boast myself a little.

Three times he has attempted to begin his 'boast,' first, in x. 8, when he is interrupted by the recollection of the hollowness of the boast of his opponents, and compelled to assert the reality of his own; again, in xi. 1, when he is checked by the recollection of the difficulty of pressing it on readers so perverted as the Corinthians by the influence of their false teachers; again in xi. 6. when he is led aside to answer the charge arising out of his refusal of support. Now once more he returns to the point, and now for the first time carries it through. He is still oppressed by the consciousness of the seeming senselessness of such self-praise; but he defends himself on two grounds: that he is driven to it by the pretensions of his opponents; and that he is speaking, not of his higher gifts, of which he might reasonably be proud, but of those very points in his conduct and character which have given occasion to his opponents to charge him with 'weakness.' 'His bodily presence is

His weak ness. 10. The word indicates that mixture of physical and mental infirmity which is connected with nervousness and depression, resulting either from a keen susceptibility of temperament, or from exhaustion of body and mind. Thus he had arrived at Corinth 'in weakness (iv doffereig), and in fear and trembling' (1 Cor. ii. 3); and such is the sense borne by it through the whole of this Section, of which it is the key-note, and in which it occurs no less than six times.

16. Höhar λέγω. ¹¹ return to what I said before; 'either the general subject of his boasting, as in x. 8, xi 1, 6; or his bloosting, as in x. 1. In what follows, the stress is, not on the first words of the sentence (μ̄n ric μτ... strω), but on the last (ἀ ἐἐ μὴ γε... κανχόσωμα); ¹¹ had rather that you should not think me foolish; but what I care most that you should not think me foolish; but what I care most considerable when the subject is not considerable with what I have to say in my own defence.¹

εἰ ἐἐ μἡ γε, 'but if any one does think me foolish.' For this force of εἰ ἐἐ μή, in which the meaning of the particular words is lost in the general meaning of 'otherwise,' comp. Matt. vi. 1, ix. 17; Mark ii. 21; Luke v. 36.

κάτ, 'even if you receive me as a fool;' elliptically for και ἐὰν ἔέξησθε, as κάν τοῦ κρασπέδου, Mark vi. 56; κάν ἡ σκιά, Acts v.

čέξασθε, 'bear with me' (like ἀνέγεσθε in xi. 1).

ώς ἄφρονα is taken, as it were, twice over in the sentence, 'even if you do receive me as a fool, yet as a fool receive me.'

17 δ λαλῶ, ⁶οὐ κατὰ κύριον λαλῶ, τι * καυχήσωμαι. άλλ' ώς έν άφροσύνη, έν ταύτη τη ύποστάσει της καυχήσεως. 18 έπεὶ πολλοὶ καυχώνται κατά τὴν σάρκα, 19 ήδέως γὰρ ἀνέχεσθε τῶν ἀφρόνων, κάνὼ καυγήσομαι. * sávé after to

b οὐ λαλῶ κατὰ κύριον.

17 That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as 18 it were "in folly', in this "stedfastness of boasting. Seeing 19 that many boast after the flesh, I will boast also.

μικρόν τι, 'a little bit,' as we should say: ironically as against his opponents, in contrast with whom, he says, 'That I (κάγώ) as well as they may boast,' verse 18 and 1 Cor. vii. 40. For τι compare τι άφρυσύνης, in xi. 1.

17. He had said, 'Bear with me as a fool.' He now proceeds to enlarge upon this: 'for what I am now speaking, I speak not as Christ would have me speak, but in the person of a fool, and in this matter of their boasting."

ο λαλω is 'my language,' my general strain," in distinction from ő φημι or λέγω, 'my words.

ού κατά κύριον, 'not in the humility which Christ would inculcate, and which His spirit would breathe.' For this condemnation, as it were, of his own language by the Apostle himself. and the distinction thus drawn between his higher and his lower utterances, see 1 Cor. vii. 10, 25. ως έν άφροσύνη refers to ως άφρονα in verse 16.

έν ταύτη τῆ ἐποστάσει τῆς καυ-χήσεως. This refers to the boasting, not of himself, but of his opponents, or at least, of himself and of his opponents conjointly. and is intended to limit the justification of his boasting to this particular occasion. The words must mean 'in this vehemence of boasting,' as in ix. 4.

 πολλοί. This mention of the numbers of the false teachers agrees with of πολλοί, in ii. 17.

κατά την σάρκα combines an allusion both to their earthly privileges, as of their Hebrew descent (xi. 22), or their powers of speech (xi. 6), and to their worldly motives, in κατά τὸι opposition to gara κύριον, in verse 17; in which case compare x. 3. κατά την σάρκα must be understood again after καυγήσομαι (as in v. 16, after σίδαμεν), although the Apostle probably omitted to repeat it, with the purpose of not making his representation of his own boast needlessly offensive. For the general argument compare Phil, iii. 4, 5, 'I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more,' &c.

19. 'Bear with my boasting, now that I come before you as a fool: for you are only too glad to listen to these fools among whom I now enroll myself."

των άφούνων, though it refers especially (as appears from verse 20), to the false teachers, yet is in itself general,- the class of fools of which I just now spoke."

φούνιμοι όντες refers to the reputation for sagacity, on which the Corinthians prided them-selves. (Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 10, φρόνιμοι όντες ²⁰ ἀνέχεσθε γὰρ, εἴ τις ὑμᾶς καταδουλοῖ, εἴ τις κατεσθίει, εἴ τις λαμβάνει, εἴ τις ἐπαίρεται, εἴ

2) ye 'bear with' fools gladly, 'being wise. For ye 'bear with them', if 'anyone bring you into bondage, if 'anyone deyour you, if 'anyone take 'from you, if 'anyone exalt himφρώτιμοι ἐν χριστῷ, and x. 15, ὡς ορονίμοις λέγω.) In this passage it may be either (1) 'although wise,' 'wise as you think yoursclives to be;' or, with a profounder irony, (2) 'you bear with them, because it is the character of wise men to bear with fools.'

The instance given is that they endured the insolence and despotic claims of the false teachers. That this Despotism was the character of of the Judatzing generally may be inleaders.

leaders. generally may be inferred by implication from i. 24, iv. 5, and Gal. ii. 4. See also the servile adulation of James in the Clementines (Introduction, p. 366).

καταΐουλοί, 'enslave.' same word is applied to the efforts of the party at Antioch and Jerusalem, in Gal. ii. 4, to bring the Christian Church under the yoke of the Jewish ceremonies. Compare the use of covλεία in this sense in Gal. v. 1, 'be not again entangled with the yoke of slavery;' and Peter's speech, Acts xv. 10, 'a yoke which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear.' In this passage the word has probably a more personal meaning, like kwριεύομεν in i. 24, but with a reference to the moral slavery to which the Church was to be reduced.

20. κατεσθίει, 'devour your property,' as in Matt. xxiii. 14, 'devour widows' houses.' The particular point intended must be the claims which they made on the Corinthian Church for their support (see I Cor. ix. I). But it may also include the covetous disposition which at this time, as in our own, was a besetting sin of the Jewish character.

For the grossly selfish ends of the Judaizing party, see Rom. xvi. 18, 'they serve not the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly'; Phil. iii. 19, 'whose God is their belly.'

Asptéret, "catches you," makes you his prey; a metaphor taken from fishing or hunting (see Luke v. 5); and in this passage probably applied to the Corinthian by their decisiful teachers. Comp. 8Asp fAsfen, xii. 16. For this general verse 13, 8Ass. Eypirus; ii. 17, caraptieuric rior köpur; Rom.

xiv history comparation rice eaglice vir history.

iπαίρεται, i. e. καθ΄ ύμων, 'conducts himself proudly.' For the words see x. 5., πὰν ὑψωμα ἰπαιρύμενο κατὰ τῆς γνώσεως τοῦ 3τοῦ.'
Hence the frequent allusions to their boastfilness and self-commendations, iii. 1, x. 12—18, xi.
12, 18.

sic πρόσωπον ζέρει, 'strikes on the face' (not necessarily with a scourge, since the word is applied in John xviii. 23 to a ρ̂ππισμα, or 'buffet with the hand'). This expression is the climax of τις εἰς πρόσωπον "ὑμᾶς δέρει. ²¹κατὰ ἀτιμίαν λέγω, ὡς ὅτι ἡμεῖς "ἦσθενήκαμεν" ἐν ῷ δ' ἄν τις τολμᾳ, (ἐν δμᾶs before εἰs.

 ἡσθενήσαμεν,

21 self, if ranyone smite you on the face. I speak as concerning reproach, as though we have been weak: but whereinsoever any one is rdaring, (I speak in folly) I am the description of insolence. In Eastern countries a blow on the fince, especially on the mouth, is a frequent mode of insult. Compare 1 Kings xxii. 24, *Zedekiah. ... motor Micaiah on the cheek; Matt. v. 39, *whooever shall smite thee on thy right cheek; Luke xxii. 64, they struck him commanded to amite Faul on the mouth; *and so Philost. Apoll. vii. 28.

That such violence might be expected from the rules of the expected from the rules of the expected from the rules of the first of the rules of the r

For the singular number τις, as implying a special leader of the party, see note on x. 7. 21. κατὰ ἀτιμίαν λέγω. In a sentence so charged with irony, Irony of the and of which one may Apoets. Suppose that the Apoets with the Apoets with the Apoets with the Apoets caught much rather from the tone of his voice, the turn of his writing, the expression of his southenance, than from his actual words it is difficult to assign a precise meaning to each expression. Its general sense is that, in contrast to the false teachers, he was what they called

'weak:' 'Such are your teachers; and what am I in comparison with them? Oh! certainly very different. I say it with a proper consciousness of the deep disgrace which it brings upon me in your eyes and theirs' (κατά άτιμίαν λέγω being uttered with an air of mock shame), 'that I, unlike them, was a poor weak creature; I had not the strength or energy to trample on you and plunder you, and assume a lofty demeanour, and smite you on the face; I could do nothing of this kind: so far they are quite right, and I wish them joy of it. But then' (here the irony is partly dropped) 'whatever grounds of confidence, of real confidence, they have, those grounds' (here he again assumes the half ironical. half apologetic tone), 'pardon my folly for the word, those grounds of confidence I have no less than they.'

rarà ἀτιμίαν is, 'to my reproach,' like ἀτίμως. λίγω is to be taken with ὡς ὅτι, λίγω is to be taken with ως ὅτι, 'I say that' (thus differing from λαλῶ in verse 17).

ώς öra is pleonastic, like 'how hat' in English (as 2 Thess. ii.
 2, ἀς öra ἐνἐστηςτα ἡ ἡμέρα); but he expression would not be used in either case, were it not for the wish to indicate that the writer himself did not fully agree in the fact stated; 'I say how it is supposed that,' &c. See Winer, Gr.
 67, § 1.

ήμεῖς, i. c. 'I emphatically, ἀφροσύνη λέγω) τολμῶ κἀγώ. 22 Εβραῖοί εἰσιν; κἀγώ. Ίσραηλῖταί εἰσιν; κἀγώ. σπέρμα ᾿Αβραάμ εἰσιν; κἀγώ.

21 daring also. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israclites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

as distinguished from the false teachers.'

ήσθενήκαμεν (B.) 'have been weak,' ήσθενήσαμεν (D.E.) 'were weak,' i.e. 'when we arrived at Corinth.' See note on xi. 16.

ἐν ἀφροσύνη λέγω refers to the word τολμῆ. He has now cast aside all further shame, and begins the longexpected and often announced glorification of himself; and, in so doing, he gives a description of his life, which forms one of the most valuable historical portions of the New Test.

The enumeration of his claims begins from those points in which his opponents were strongest, and from these gradually rises into a phere where he leaves them behind, and ultimately loses sight of them altogether. These points were their purely Jewish extraction and their peculiar connection and their peculiar connection. The Ape with Christ. It would to assert the purity of his Jewish descent in the strongest manner; and it is a remarkable proof of the ascendancy acquired by his opponents, that he should be compelled to do so in addressing a Church, in its main elements, not Jewish, but Gentile.

The three words employed are arranged in a climax. 'Hebrew.' Εξεραϊος, 'Hebrew,' in Acts vi. 1, and in the phrase 'Gospel according to the Hebrews' (Eus. H. E. iii. 39), is used to express Palestinian, as opposed to Hellenistic, Jews. But the Apostle was 'born (γεγεννημένος) in Tarsus,' Acts xxii. 3; and 'Efector is often used by Josephus and Philo as an equivalent to Loudaios. Compare Efpaios il Espaiwr, in Phil. iii. 5. It is used then here, simply to denote his nationality, 'Israelite,' and 'the seed of Abraham, rise Israelite. one above another in expressing the sacred character of the nation, as inheriting the promises. For Ίσραηλίτης, as a term of praise (in which sense alone it occurs in the N. Test.). see John i. 48 ('Israelite indeed without guile '); Acts ii. 22, iii. 12, v. 35, xiii. 16, xxi. 28 (heading the addresses to the Jews); Rom. ix. 4, xi. 1. 'Seed of For σπέρμα 'Λέραάμ, in Abraham.' like manner, see Heb. ii. 16; Rom. ix. 7, xi. 1 (in both of which last passages it comes in, as here, as a climax after 'Israel' and 'Israelite').

and 'Israelite').
In Rom. xi.1; Phil. iii. 5, he adds the fact omitted here, that he was 23 διάκονοι χριστοῦ εἶσιν ; (παραφρονῶν λαλῶ) "ὑπερεγώ, ἐν κόποις περισσοτέρως, ἐν b φυλακαῖς περισσοτέρως, ἐν

* όπερ εγώ.

δ εν πληγαϊς όπερθ., εν φυλακαϊς περ.

23 Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more, in labours more abundant, win prisons more rabun-

a Benjamite: hence perhaps his name of 'Saul.'

23. The second point of the boast of the false teachers was their peculiar connexion with Christ (see note on x. 7).

which they expressed by calling themselves 'His instruments' or 'servants' (διάκονοι).

To this the Apostle gives a more indignant reply than to the previous charge. They had questioned his right to be called so, on the ground that he had not seen our Lord on earth (see note on 1 Cor. ix. 1), and perhaps also on the ground of his want of connexion with the Jerusalem Apostles (see note on iii. 1). He answers by an appeal, not to any outward fact, but to his own wonderful life, as partly in 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2 ('ye are my seal in the Lord '). This was the best proof he could give of his intimate union with his Master, and of his zeal for His service; in this he knew that he was far superior (ὑπερεγώ) to them, and yet at the some time these very hardships constituted or caused the 'weakness' with which he was taunted. This last thought is not directly expressed, but is implied in the transition from verse 28, to 29, 30. He ushers in his defence with one more apology, of stronger irony in proportion as his defence is stronger: 'my language is that of a madman. Really I can hardly expect you will believe me (παραφρονών, comp. 2 Pet. ii. 16):

'but the fact is so, I am far more a servant of Christ than they are,' as if it were εγω ὑπερδιάκονος (see note on xi. 5).

λαλώ here is 'my general language,' as in verse 17.

guage, as in verse 11.

The sentence is connected immediately with *irερεγω̂: 'I am a servant of Christ in labours, in stripes,' &c. From this moment he drops all irony. The labours of the false teachers could be nothing compared with his; and from this point we lose sight of them till xii. 11.

περισσοτέρως is (not 'more abundantly than they,' but) as in i. 12, ii. 4, vii. 13, 15, epiσσοτέρως, merely a stronger form of περισπώς. It has accordingly lost its distinct comparative meaning so completely than in vii. 13 it is joined with μάλλον. If he had meant to compare himself with them, he would have used, not the adverb, but the adjective, περισσύτερος or περισσύτερον, as in the somewhat similar passage, 1 Cor. xv. 10. It is the same as ὑπερθαλλόντως, 'beyond all ordinary measure,' the words being varied only for variety's sake, as elsewhere in St. Paul (see 1 Cor. xiii. 8). έν φυλακαῖς. The Acts only mention three imprisonments, and of these the one Imprisonments. at Philippi (xvi. 24) is the only one that can be included here. In Clem. Ep. I. ad Cor. 5, seven are mentioned altogether.

έν θανάτοις, ' in perils of death :'

πληγαις ὑπερβαλλόντως, ἐν θανάτοις πολλάκις ²⁴(ὑπὸ Ἰουδαίων πεντάκις *τεσσεράκοντα παρὰ μίαν ἔλαβον, ²⁵τρίς *ἐραβδίσθην, ἄπαξ ἔλιθάσθην, τρὶς ἐναυάγησα,

* τεσσαράκοντα.

b dobattleten.

24 dant, in stripes above measure, in deaths oft (*from the 25 Jews five times received I forty stripes save one, thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suf-

(comp. iv. 11). Of these various kinds of death the next Perils of two verses give in-stances. Of the five death. Jewish scourgings here mentioned, not one is mentioned in the Acts. The words ὑπὸ 'Ιουζαίων, 'by the scourgings. Jews, imply that he was going to use another construction: first, because & #6, and not όπό, is required by έλαδον: and secondly, because it would have been superfluous to say that 'the forty stripes save one' were inflicted by Jews; that being as fixed an expression for Jewish scourging, as the rods (ipa66iσθην) was for Roman scourging. Forty stripes were fixed by the Law as the maximum (Deut. xxv. 3), but thirty-nine only were inflicted by later practice, lest by chance the letter of the Law should be broken. It was inflicted with a leather scourge. with which thirteen strokes were given on the breast, thirteen on the right shoulder, thirteen on the left; and this arrangement of the scourging was by some Rabbis made the reason of the number thirty-nine. The mode of flagellation was as follows: The culprit was bound by both hands to a pillar; the officer of the synagogue stripped off his clothes until his breast was bared. The officer then ascended a stone behind. The sourge consisted of four thongs of calf ain, and two of asset ain. The culprit bent to receive the lashes. The offers struck with one band, with all is force. A reader meanth with read, first, Deut. xxviii. 58, 58, mext, Deut. xxiii. 58, 58, punishment that death often ensued. (Wetstein, p. 208; Schöttgen, Hor. Heb. 714.)

25. τρὶς ἐραβδίσθην. This was the Roman punishment of 'virgis caescourgings. dere,' also so cruel as frequently to occasion death. See Cic. Verr. v. 62. Of the three times, here mentioned by the Apostle, one only is described in the Acts (xvi. 23). St. Paul being a Roman citizen was, properly speaking, exempted from this punishment, and, on that plea, protested against it at Philippi (Acts xvi. 37), and escaped it at Jerusalem (xxii. 25).

άπαξ ἐλιθάσθην, i. e. at Lystra. Acts xiv. 19.

τρὶς ἐναυάγησα. The allusion is unknown. The shipwreck in Acts shipwrecks. Xxvii. is later.

rνχθήμερον, a whole day of twenty-four hours, beginning, according to Jewish reckoning (from Gen. i. 5), with νυχθήμερον εν τῷ βυθῷ πεποίηκα), 26 δδοιπορίαις πολλάκις, κινδύνοις ποταμών, κινδύνοις ληστών, κινδύνοις έκ γένους, κινδύνοις έξ έθνων, κινδύνοις έν πόλει, κινδύνοις έν έρημία, κινδύνοις έν θαλάσση, κινδύνοις έν ψευδαδέλφοις, 27 κόπω καὶ μόχθω, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις πολλάκις, · Add &v.

fered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the 26 deep), in journeyings often, in perils of rivers, in perils of robbers, in perils by on countrymen, in perils by heathers, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils 27 in the sea, in perils among false brethren, in rlabour and the evening. The word occurs only in very late writers. έν τῷ βυθῷ, 'in the depth of the sea.' See Exod. xv. 5; Psalm evii. 24. LXX. Probably after one of the shipwrecks on a plank, as in Acts xxvii. 44. The Syriac reads, 'without a boat in the sea.' Theophylact says that some maintained this to mean that Paul was concealed for a day after the stoning at Lystra, in a place called Bythos; and in later times it has been referred to a deep dungeon, so called, at Cyzicus (see Estius, ad loc.). 26. The parenthesis explaining in Savirous being ended here.

the sentence is continued from verse 23. όδοιπορίαις ('travels') is expanded into the remaining distresses described in verses 26, 27. κινδύνοις ποταμών, 'danger of 'Perils of swollen rivers,' such as cut off the traveller in rivers.' all eastern and southern countries. Thus Frederick Barbarossa was drowned in the Calycadnus, a river flowing into the sea not far from the Apostle's own city of Tarsus. The traveller Spon was lost in one of the torrents of the Lebanon, between Jerusalem and Antioch

(see Convbeare and Howson, i. p. 176. 457).

ληστῶν, 'robbers,' whether by land or sea, whether such as those in the 'Robbers.' mountains of Ephesus, who are said in the well known tradition (Eus. H. E. iii. 23) to have carried off the Apostle John ; or remnants of the old Cilician pirates (see note on x. 4). ἐκ γένους, 'from Jews, such as the conspiracies at Damascus, Acts ix. 'from Jews.' 23; at Jerusalem, ix. 29; at Antioch of Pisidia, xiii. 50; at Iconium, xiv. 5; at Lystra. xiv. 19; at Thessalonica, xvii. 5; at Berœa, xvii. 13; at Corinth, έξ ἐθνῶν. 'From Gentiles,' at Philippi, Acts xvi. 'From 20; and Ephesus, xix. 'From Gentiles.'

xviii. 12.

έν πόλει, έν έρημία έν θαλάσση, 'by city, by desert, and by sea. The 'desert' may allude to Arabia, Gal. i. 17, but also to the wilder districts of Asia Minor. For those 'by sea,' comp. note on verse 25.

ψευδαδέλφοις. See Gal. ii. 4, and here, as there, probably Judaizers. 27. κόπω καὶ μόχθω, resuming έν λιμώ καὶ δίψει, έν νηστείαις πολλάκις, έν ψύχει καὶ γυμνότητι. 28 γωρίς των παρεκτός ή επίστασίς μοι ἐπισύστασις μου.

painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in 28 fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside those things the argument from ocouroplass 'by toil and trouble, as shown in sleeplessness,' &c.

άγρυπνίαις, ' sleepless nights,' either from fatigue or Sleepless from business. Comp. nights. the midnight psalms at Philippi, Acts xvi. 25; the discourse all through the night at Troas, xx. 7, 11: the ministrations 'night and day' at Ephesus, xx. 31; the working to support himself 'night and day' at Thessalonica, 2 Thess. iii. 8.

έν λιμώ καὶ δίψει. Compare 1 Cor. iv. 11; Phil iv. 12. νηστείαις. Not 'voluntary fasts,' of which there 'Fastings.' is no instance in the Apostle's life, unless it be Acts xiii. 3, xiv. 23, and of which the mention would be out of place in an enumeration of hardships resulting from external or natural causes; but 'days without food,' as in vi. 5. It follows upon λιμφ καὶ δίψει, 'hunger and thirst,' partly from the same kind of repetition as has caused the insertion of 'the sea' in verse 26, although the dangers by sea had already been mentioned in the previous verse; but chiefly for the sake of giving a more definite image, not merely of 'hunger,' but absolute 'want of food;' and it follows upon 'hunger and thirst,' as 'sleepless nights' follow upon 'toil and trouble,' marked in like manner by πολλάκις.

έν ψύχει καὶ γυμνότητι. See

1 Cor. iv. 11, 'in cold and nakedness,' in the cold 'Cold and winters of southern nakedness." climates.

28. χωρίς τῶν παρεκτός may be (1) (as in Matt. 'The things v. 32; Acts xxvi. 29) which are 'not to speak of the without." many points which are left out in this enumeration,' like 'the time would fail me to tell,' in Heb. xi. 32. Or (2) 'besides external calamities, which I have just described, there are the internal trials, which I proceed to describe.' (Comp. ἔξωθεν μάχαι, εσωθεν φόθοι, vii. 5.)

ή ἐπίστασις (B. D. E. F. G.), or ή έπισύστασίς (J. Κ.) μου οτ μοι (B. F. G.), may be (1) in opposition with η μέριμνα, 'my pressure of care,' as in Soph. Ant. 225, πολλάς γάρ ἔσχον φροντίδων ἐπιστάσεις; or (2) more possibly 'the concourse of people to see me,' to ask advice, &c., like 'quotidiani hominum impetus,' Cic. pro Arch. 6. 'The The word inigrance concourse. (with the same variation of reading) occurs in Acts xxiv. 12, for a 'tumult:' Num. xvi. 40, for the 'congregation, or 'conspiracy,' of Korah; Esdr. 73, for 'conspiracies.' μου be the right reading, it would be 'my concourse,' as we should say, 'my following.' If µot, then it is governed by ¿mi in ¿mioraouc. Comp. the form ἐπισυναγωγή, 2 Thess. ii. 1; Hebr. x. 25.

For the fact, see the account of ή καθ΄ ήμέραν, ή μέριμνα πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν. 29τίς ἀσθενεῖ, καὶ οὐκ ἀσθενῶ ; τίς σκανδαλίζεται, καὶ οὐκ ἐγὼ πυροῦμαι ; 30 εἰ καυχᾶσθαι δεῖ, τὰ τῆς ἀσθενείας that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the 2s care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not 3o weak? who is offended, and I burn not? If I must needs 'boast, I will 'boast of the things which concern

St. Paul's teaching at Corinth, Acts xviii, 11: 'He sat' (i. c. as a rabbi) in the house of Justus near the synagogue, 'a year and six months teaching the word of God,' and still more to the purpose, immediately before the date of this Epistle, at Ephesus, Acts xix. 9: 'He separated the disciples, daily conversing (cab' ijμέραν διαλεγόμενος) in the school of Tyrannus. Wherever he established his head quarters, there the crowd of hearers and questioners might be expected to follow him. Compare the attendance on the teaching of our Lord: 'There were many coming and going, and they had not leisure so much as to eat' (Mark vi.

It this be the right construction and meaning, then the whole sentence will run thus: 'Setting aside the details which require no mention, there is my daily concourse of hearers, and the anxiety (ἡ μέριμνα) which I have for all the congregations of Christians.' The expression is important, as showing the widespread influence of St. Paul. It is the description which we should have expected to find in the accounts of St. Peter, if the Apostolic history exhibited any traces of the power afterwards claimed by his successors.

In later times this passage was used as a justification of Dunstan's retaining several sees together.

29. This is a strong expression of the Apostle's wide sympathies (see note on 1 Cor. ix. 22). 'If there is any one weak' 'Who is of and troubled in con. "Who is ofceience (abevier, as fineded, and in Rom. xiv. 2, 21; Durn net? I Cor. viii. 11), 1 too, am weak with him '(comp. 1 Cor. ix. 22, 'to the weak blocame as weak'). 'If there is any one caught in a samer, 1 too, am soorched in the fire of his tempsation' (as Rev. ii. 18, and 1 with indignation (as in 2 Manc. iv. 38, xiv. 45). Compare the juxtaposition of affect and searchalderas, in 1 Cor. viii. 9, 13

30. The mention of 'weakness' in verse 29, leads him to break out into a strong acknowledgment of its existence. 'I have been compelled to boast, but my boasting is in fact not of my strength, but of my weakness. All these hardships, all this sympathy for the weakness of others, are the signs and causes of that weakness of which they complain in me.' But this thought, whilst it sums up the foregoing enumeration, also opens a new aspect of the subject, which continues to xii. 10. The irony with which he had opened this vindication in xi. 1-21, is dropped; and he expresses his μου καυχήσομαι. ³¹ό θεὸς καὶ πατὴρ τοῦ "κυριοῦ Ἰησοῦ οἶδεν, ὁ ὧν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ὅτι οὐ ψεύδομαι. ³²ἐν Δαμασκῷ ὁ ἐθνάρχης ᾿Αρέτα τοῦ βασιλέως ἐφρού-

* κυριοῦ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ.

31 my 'weakness. The God and Father of hthe Lord Jesus, oh who is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.
32 In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept intention to continue his boast (καυγήσομαι), overcoming his scruples, not, as heretofore, by assuming the character of a fool (compare xi. 16, 23, with xi. 6), but by reflecting that, after all, it was not on his strength, but on his weakness, that he was going to dwell. This he seems to have intended to follow up by a detailed account of all his sufferings. Beginning, therefore, with a solemn appeal to God for the truth of his parrative (xi. 31, and again xii, 6.), he commences with an account of his earliest danger and escape at Damascus (xi. 32. The narrative is bro-

33). What would have followed next, it is impossible to say. Intermoken off almost as soon tion of the as begun; the ship has argument. foundered at sea; and only a single plank has been washed to shore. The shock may have been from the reluctance, which he still found insuperable, to dwell in detail on his great deeds. Or it may have been that he was struck at this point, by the thought that the glory of his weakness might be better exhibited by pointing out its direct connexion with the highest privilege to which he had ever been called. Or it may have been that the description of his great revelations, and of the weakness connected with them, was the chief topic on which he meant to dwell: but that he had at first intended to give the outward circumstances which had led the way to them; and then, either finding this too circuitous, or for some other cause unknown, had changed his plan, and gone at once into the subject of the revelations without further introduction. However this may be, as soon as he has disentangled himself from the confusion of the lost sentence. he proceeds to the account of his revelations, and thence of his weakness (xii. 2-10). Thus much is necessary to be borne in mind, in order to force a way over one of the most disjointed sentences ever written.

31. This asseveration (like those which followed in xii. 2, 3, 6) applies to the whole narrative which was intended to follow and which perhaps does in part follow in xi. 1—10. For the dox-ology, introduced by the solemn feeling of the moment, compare Rom. ix. 5, and i. 25.

δ ων is used so frequently in LXX. and by Philo, as a translation for JEHOVAH, that the phrase in this passage and Rom. ix. 5, if not used precisely in that sense, at any rate has reference to it. Comp. John i. 18, iii. 13, vi. 46, viii. 47; Rev. i. 4, 8.

32. The fact here related was (so far as we know) his Escape from earliest danger, at least Damascus. from conspiracy. It took place on his return from ρει *τὴν πόλιν Δαμασκηνῶν πιάσαι με^ν, ³³καὶ διὰ θυρίδος ἐν σαργάνη ἐχαλάσθην διὰ τοῦ τείχους καὶ ἐξέ-τὴν Δ. πόλιν.

Add δέλων.

the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, at to ap-33 prehend me, and through a window in a basket was

Arabia to Damaseus, shortly after his conversion (Gal. i. 17), and is described, nearly as here, in Acts ix. 23, 24, 25, with the difference only that what is there ascribed to the Jews, is here ascribed to the Ethnarch, who probably was acting at their instigation. Aretas, chief of the Nabathæan Arabs, had at this time much influence. the king, partly from his being the father-in-law of Herod Antipas, partly from the commercial importance of his capital, Petra. Hence the extension of his 'kingdom' to Damascus. (Conybeare and Howson, i. 88, and Porter's Damascus, i. 102.) It was an hereditary name, in Arabic, Haret. (See Niebuhr's Lectures, vol. iii. c. 91.) This one was the third of the name. Jos. Ant. XVI. ix. 4, XVII. iii. 2. (Schöttgen, ad loc.) 'Ethnarch' was the title of an Oriental provincial governor. (Sec 1 Macc. xiv. 47; Josephus passim; Heyne's treatise 'De Ethnarchia Aretæ,' 1755.) ἐφρούρει, 'kept watch with a garrison.' From Acts ix. 24, it appears that all the gates were watched. πιάσαι, in later Greek, 'to Supiĉoς, 'an aperture,' or 'little door,' as in Acts xx. 9. In Josh. ii. 15; 1 Sam. xix. 12, the same expression (διά τῆς Supiĉoς) is used in the LXX. for the escape of the spies from Jericho, and of David from Saul. ἐτὰ τοῦ τείχους, probably 'over the wall,' i. e. from an overhang- The wall, ing house, such as are still to be seen on the walls of Damascus. See the woodcut in Convbeare and Howson, i. p. 110. There is a spot still pointed out on the eastern wall, itself modern, as the scene of his escape. Close by is a cavity in the ancient burial-ground, where he is said, in the local legends, to have concealed himself; and formerly a tomb was shown of a St. George, who was martyred in furthering the escape. It is curious that in the present traditions of Damascus the incidents of this escape have almost entirely eclipsed the story of his conversion.

33. σωργώνη, 'anything twistcd,' as a cord. Æsch. Supp.
788; so Suidas, οἱ μὲν σχείνου
τι, οἱ ἐῦ πλύγμα τι ἐ σχοινίου
τι, οἱ ἐῦ πλύγμα τι ἐ σχοινίου
(148) has the word προστεταργανμένην.
On this the Scholiast says συμπαπλυμένην [†] γὸρ ποῦ ἡμὲν σαγάνη, παρὰ 'Αττικοῖταργώνης αἰ τὸ συνες- Τhe basket.

λήσθαι, τεταργανῶσθαι. (Wetstein.) Here probably the word signifies a 'rope-basket.' In Acts ix. 25, it is σπύρις, 'a grain-basket.'

τὰς χεῖρας, 'his hands which were stretched forth to catch me.' Comp. Acts xii. 1, 'Herod stretched forth his hands to vex the church.' φυγον τὰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ. ΧΙΙ. 1° καυχᾶσθαι δεῖ, οὐ συμφέρον μὲν, ἐλεύσομαι δὲ καὶ εἰς ὀπτασίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεις κυρίου. ²οΐδα ἄνθρωπον ἐν χριστῷ πρὸ ἐτῶν

* καυχάσθαι δή οὐ συμφέρει μοι · έλεύσομαι γάρ els,

1 I let down by the wall and escaped his hands. XII. AI must boast; it is not expedient for me, Abut I will come 2 even to visions and revelations of the Lord. I know a

XII. 1. The variety of readings indicates the want of any guide Various readings. in the sense of the sentence, which is the transition from the broken narrative rising out of it in xii. 2.

κυνασθαι δεξ, Β. D². Ε. F.
 G. J. Vulg.; εἰ καινχ. δεξ, οὐ συμφίρον μέγ, Β. F. G.; ἐλεύσομα ἔξ, Β. F. G. Vulg. Copt.; ἐἐ καί, Β. Vulg. Copt. Latin Fathers.
 καινασθαι ἔξ, D¹. Slav. Theoph.; καὶ ἐὴ καιν. Copt. Arm.

Greek Fathers; οὐ συμφέρει μοι, D¹. E. J. K. Greek Fathers; ἐλεψσομαι γάρ, D¹. D². E. J. K. Copt. Arm. Æth. (A. and C. are deficient).

In addition to the confusion of the sense, there has also been the confusion of sound between ἐϵ̄ and ἐἡ, and between ἐϵ̄ and -θαι (the last syllable of κανχάσθαι), according to the later Greek pronunciation.

The first set of readings would mean, 'I must boast; it is not good for me; but yet I am about to do so.' The second would mean 'Now to boast is not good for me but I must boast], for I am about to do so.' (comp. xi. 5). Both readings combined would mean, 'I must boast] for I am going to do so.' In all these three cases the words express the conflict in his own mind between what he must do, and what he binks it becoming to do. For something of the same confusion, compare Phil. iii. 1: radica's papers bur, i, poin pic over corespon, bur 2 de despaces, bur 2 de despace, to write the same things was in itself troublesome to him, but, under the circumstances, was not; because it was rood for them.

The mention of his divine revelations is introduced, first as a matter revelations. on which he may on which he may justly found a claim as an Apostle, especially as against those who claimed peculiar connexion with Christ; secondly, in reference to the 'weakness' which followed as a consequence on these revelations.

όπτασίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεις. όπτασία,—probably the more tangible 'visions,'—occurs 'Visions.' no where else in St. Paul, but is used in Luke i. 22, xxiv. 23, for 'an apparition,' so also in Dan. ix. 23, x. 1, 7, 8 (LXX.). awards/w/ac, in this 'Rerelations' especial sense of Rerelations' spiritual penetration into Divine secrets,' is used in 1 Co. xiv. 6, 26; Eph. 1. 17, iii. 3; Gal. i. 12, ii. 2; and in the name and contents of the 'Apocalypae'

(Rev. i. 1).

κυρίου, 'of the Lord' (He being the author of them).

2. οἶδα, 'I know.' Possibly in olča, 'I know.' Possibly in the sense of 'remembering,' as in Acts xxiii. 5: 1 Cor. i. 16. δεκατεσσαρων (εἴτε ἐν σώματι οὐκ οἶδα, εἴτε ἐκτὸς *σώματος οὐκ οἶδα, ὁ θεὸς οἶδεν) ἀρπαγέντα τὸν τοιοῦ- τον ἔως τρίτου οὐρανοῦ. ³ καὶ οἶδα τὸν τοιοῦτον ἄνθρωπον man in Christ about fourteen years ago (whether in the body I 'know not, o whether out of the body I 'know not, God knoweth) such an one caught up to the third sheaven. And I 'know such a man (whether in the body άνθρωπον iν χριστῦ. The most general term to designate himself in the third person,—'a Christian,' a man who lived and moved in Christ as his being, possibly with an allusion to the deeper consciousness of that union produced by the ecstasy.

* Add roo.

by the ecstasy.

πρὸ ἐτῶν ἔτκατισσάρων. As he had begun his narrative in xi. 32, Fourteen 33, with one definite rears ago." in sew narrative in a similar manner. This date could not have been his conversion, which was more than twenty years before this; it might pessibly have been shortly after the escape from Damascus, which, as being about seventeen years before, may have been mentioned in xi. 32, 33 as a preludu to this.

etre to σύματα. This comes in as a parenthesis, and expresses 'In the bost of self-conbody or out of the body.' gree that he knew not whether he were carried up into heaven literally, or only in a figure.

ήρσιάθη is Atic, ήρσίηση Μαcedonian Greek. For similar expressions, comp. Acts viii. 39, πετόμα αφίου ήρσασεν τόν θέλαπτον: and Rev. 1. 10, έγευόμαν ἐν πεύματι: Χii. 5, ήρσάσθη τό τέκονο ἀντῆς πρὸς τονξιόν: 1 Thess. iv. 17, άρπαγησόμεθα... ·.. τές ἀίρο. Compare the Rabbinical expression in Bava Mezia, 89:

'God stood in the academy of heaven, with all His scholars in great controversy; and they said.

'Who shall be the judge,'' And they agreed that it should be Rabbi Barnaham. In the same hour his soul was caught up into heaven, and his sentence confirmed the judgment of God.'

(Wetstein.) rairou apparan. The sum of Wetstein's quotations on the Rabbinical conception of 'The Third the seven heavens is Heaven. as follows: 1. The veil (compare Heb. vi. 19). 2. The expanse. 3. The clouds. 4. The dwelling-place (habitaculum), 5. The habitation (habitatio). The fixed seat. 7. Araboth. (according to a slightly different arrangement): 1. The heaven. 2. The heaven of heavens. 3. The expanse. 4. The clouds. 5. The dwelling-place, 6. The fixed seai. 7. Araboth. In 'the clouds' are said to be the millstones which ground the manna. Before the Fall, God lived on the earth: at the sin of Adam. he ascended into the first heaven; at the sin of Cain, into the second; at the generation of Enoch, into the third; at the generation of the flood, into the fourth; at the generation of the confusion of tongues, into the fifth; at the generation of Sodom, into the sixth;

(είτε ἐν σώματι είτε *χωρὶς τοῦ σώματος ὁ θεὸς οἶδεν), όστι ἡρπάγη είς τὸν παράδεισον καὶ ἡκουσεν ἄρρητα ρήματα ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν ἀνθρώπω λαλῆσαι.
οὐπὲρ τοῦ τοιούτου καιχήσομαι, ὑπὲρ δὲ ἐμαιντοῦ οὐ καιχήσομαι, εἰ μὴ

* έκτὸς τοῦ σώματος, οὺκ οἶδα * δ.

4 or out of the body a: God knoweth), how that he was caught up into paradise and heard "unutterable utterances," swhich it is not lawful for a man to "speak. "For such an one will I "boast: yet "for myself I will not "boast, "except at the generation of Egypt, into the seventh. Then, at the rise of Abraham, he descended to the sixth; of Issac, to the fifth; of Jacob, to the fourth; of Levi, to the third; of Kohath, to the second; of Amram, to the first; of Moses, to the earth again.

It is possible that, in accordance with this phrascology, the Apostle may mean that he was carried into the bird heaven, i. e. midway between earth and heaven, into the region of the clouds and air, as in 1 Thess. iv. 17 (sic sizes); and then by a second, and still loftier flight, into the presence of God Himself, which is spoken of, as in Rev. xxii. 1, under the figure of a 'paradise'.

But probably the Apostle's words have no concern with this elaborate system of the Rabbis. There was a simpler view taken by some of them, that there were but two heavens, founded on the passage in Deut, x. 14, which speaks of 'the heaven' and 'the heaven of heavens' (see Aboth Nathan, 27, in Wetstein). By these two heavens apparently were meant the visible clouds and the sky, possibly in connexion with the dual form of the Hebrew word 'shemaim.' In that case, the third heaven would be the invisible world beyond, in the presence of God, and not different from, but identical with paradia, as in Luke xxiii. 43. So St. John is brought through a door in the sky, into the presence of the throns of God (Rev. iv. 1, 2); and round that throne is the 'Eden'—the Paradise or garden of Heaven (Rev. xxii. 1).

The Apostle's rapture is alluded to in Philopatria, ascribed to Lucian, c. 12: 'When the Galilean met me, with his high bald forehead (ἀταφαλαντίας), and high nose (ἐτέρουνος), who walked through the air (ἀτροδατήνας) to the third heaven.'

άρρητα βήματα an oxymoron: 'words, and 'Words that no words.' The ex- cannot be pression is taken from spoken.'

the secresy of the Greek mysteοὐκ ἐξὸν ἀνθρώπω, 'Man cannot speak them; God may.' Compare the expressions of those who spoke with tongues, as if in a language drawn from a higher sphere, I Cor. xiv. 2.

5. εἰ μh. 'Only in my weaknesses will I boast.' For εἰ μἡ see 1 Cor. vii. 17. He will not boast of himself, but only of his visions when he could hardly be said to be himself, and of his weaknesses of which most would be asbarned. ἐν ταῖς ἀσθενείαις* ^ε(ἐὰν γὰρ θελήσω καυχήσασθαι, οὐκ ἔσομαι ἄφρων· ἀλήθειαν γὰρ ἐρῶ· φείδομαι δὲ, μή τις εἰς ἐμὲ λογίσηται ὑπὲρ δ βλέπει με ἡ ἀκούει^ν ἔζ ἐμοῦ)° ⁷καὶ τὴ ὑπερβολῆ τῶν ἀποκαλύψεων. ⁴διὸ ἴνα

Add μου.
 Here ends the histus from IV. 13—XII. 6. in MS. A.
 Om. 8ιδ.

6 in my 'weaknesses (for 'if I 'ahould desire to 'boast, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but I 'spare you', lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be or heareth 'from me) "and in the 'exceeding greatness of my revelations. Wherefore also lest

6. târ yắp. Here a clause is suppressed, as in xi. 5, and possibly xii. 1. "[And yet I could boast reasonably;] for if I were desirous (24/how) to do so, I should not really be foolish, though I affected folly in doing so before" (xi. I, 16).

άλήθεταν. See note on xi. 31.
φέτδημα ½ μή τρα: 'i do not dwell on wonders and eestacies, of which you cannot conceive. I leave you to form your own impression of me from what you see and hear.' Comp. similar deprecation of superstitious reverence in 1 Cor. iv. 1—6.

čαi is found in A. B. F. G. and, if retained, necessitates Lachmann's punctuation; verse 6 is in a parenthesis, and cai τη j irπqu-foλβ τῶν divocal/ψέψων is joined to the ratic afteriates. Such a sudden dislocation can only be explained by the confusion almost always incident to his mention of always incident to his mention of its omitted, the sentences, though still inverted, will run more smoothly.

 καὶ, κ.τ.λ. 'And it was for this very purpose, lest I should be too much exalted (ὑπεραϊρωμαι and ὑπερθολῷ referring to ὑπὰρ δ βλέπει in verse 6, 'Think not of me with excessive reverence, lest by the excess of my revelutions I should be excessively exalted,') that there was given me a thorn.'

For the sense of the whole, compare Luke x. 20.

this sense it is used by "σκάδου," is cross.

55; Ezek xxviii. 24; Hos. ii. 6, where it is rather distinguished from 'thorns' (αάκθαις) than identified with them. So also Artemidorus, iii. 33, ἄκανθα καὶ σκόλοπες όδυνας σημαίνουσι διά τὸ δέυ. And so in classical writers invariably.

It would seem, therefore, that the metaphor is taken from impaling or crucifying; and is thus analogous to the expression, 'I am crucified with Christ' (Gal. ii. 20). areachor(ii. iii. Eather vii. 10 is explained by Phavorinus and Hespechius as equivalent to drawraupi(iii. and iii. and ii

μη ύπεραίρωμαι, έδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τή σαρκί, άγγελος

I should be exalted above measure, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, 'an angel' of Satan, 'that he may the stake '), which originally, as employed in the classical writers, was used, not for two transverse beams, but simply for a palisade' or 'stake,' and thus Esutathius στώνου,' Εναφορί, δρθα καὶ στωθυμένα Εδλα_του ἐξ εὐτο στώνου, 'Εναφορί, δρθα καὶ στωθυμένα Εδλα_του ἐξ εὐτο στώνου, 'Εναφορί, δρθα καὶ στωθυμένα Εδλα_του ἐξ εὐτο τος Εναφορία, 'Α, 5, 6. In Lucian (De Morte Peregrini, 11), ἀναfixion of Chira. δοτ the Cruciriktion of Chira.

Thus, as the words 'erucior,' 'eruciatus,' 'eruciatus,' 'erucistus,' '

The difference between σκόλοψ and σταυρός, and the reason therefore for the more frequent occurrence of the former than the latter, is that, whilst σταυρός is generally used for the punishment of 'crucifixion,' σκόλοψ is used for the less common, though still frequent, punishment of 'impalement.' As, then, elsewhere, in order to describe his state of constant torture, the Apostle draws his image from crucifixion, so here be draws it from impalement. Comp. σκόλοπες (stakes) έν τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς καὶ βολίδες (arrows) έν ταῖς πλευραῖς, Numb. xxxiii. 55.

τῆ σαρκί, 'for the flesh.' The double dative is what is common in classical Greek. One expressing the person, and the other defining more accurately the part of the person.

άγγελος σατανᾶ, 'an angel of Satan,' not 'the angel Satan,' because he is never so called in the N. Test., nor yet simply the 'messenger' of Satan, because ἄγγελος, when used of the unseen world, must always have the sense of a spirit. For the general use of the word 'angel,' to denote a Divine work wrought through natural agency, compare 'the angel of the Lord,' who smote Herod with sickness (Acts xii. 23), or the first born with the pestilence (Exod. xii. 23; Ps. lxxviii. 49, 50). As 'an angel of the Lord ' (ayyahog wuo(ov) is thus spoken of when the object is to assist God's servants. or punish his enemies (Acts v. 19, viii, 26, xii, 7, 23), so 'an angel of Satan' (ἄγγελος σατανά) is spoken of where the object is to torment God's servants. Thus 'Satan' tempts Judas (Luke xxii. 3) and Ananias (Acts v. 3), suggests bad thoughts (1 Cor. vii. 5), and produces disorders (Luke xiii. 16). In this particular instance, the word is probably introduced, as in xi. 14, for the sake of the allusion to Job. i. 6, where the LXX, has & διάβολος, but the Hebrew 'Satan;' and where in like manner, though Satan 'proposes,' God 'dis-poses' the event. Comp. Luke xxii. 31, 'Satan hath "obtained his wish" (¿Enrhouro) to sift you

" σατανᾶ, ἴνα με κολαφίζη [, ἴνα μὴ ὑπεραίρωμαι]. ⁸ [καὶ] » Σατάν.

s buffet me that I may not be exalted above measure'. And as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not. The word σατα in the LXX. is undeclined. In the thirty-five places where it is used in the N. Test. of which ten occur in St. Paul, it is declined.

ΐνα με κολαφίζη. This is (not as might be expected from the word σκόλοψ to 'prick' or 'wound,' but) 'to buffet,' or 'strike with the fist,' as in the account of our Lord's trial, Matt. xxvi. 67: Mark xiv. 65: 1 Pet. ii. 20. In this passage, and 1 Cor. iv. 11, where it occurs among the Apostle's hardships, it is used in a general sense of "maltreatment," vet still probably with regard to its original meaning, and hence applies not to the 'stake' (σκόλοψ), but to the 'angel' (αγγε-Acc): comp. Job ii. 5, 7, where Satan is ordered to 'put forth his hand and touch the bone and the flesh,' and said to 'smite Job with sore boils.' Compare, for a similar metaphor, ὑπωπιάζω in 1 Cor. ix. 27, and for a similar personification, that of Death and Sin in Rom. v. 14, 21, and 1 Cor. xv. 55. The word is later Greek, κονδυλίζω being the expression in Attic Greek.

The subjunctive cohapting and vertagiopular are used to express the continuance of the trial. 'He came in order that [not 'he might,' but] he may buffet me, and in order that [not 'I' might not be,' but] I may not be exalted.' The figure may be either: (I) the Angel of Satan, like Death in 1 Cor. xv. 55, armed with the impaling stake; or (2) the Apostle himself already impaled or crucified, and thus exposed to the taunts and buffets of his adversary.

The order of the words would naturally require exclude and dyyoke to be taken in apposition with each other; but the sense, as given above, would be better expressed, if it were libbo nother is not be a colourly from the stake in the flesh, in order that an angel of Satan may buffet me. For similar inversions, see note on 1 Cor. viii. 11, and in this very verse, 75 wesp6ah for the disconnection of the control of the cont psysta. The words fra μη bresptipsμα, in their second occurrence, though retained in B. are omitted in A. D. E. F. G. Vulg, perhaps, however, because they were thought superfluous; whereas the repetition may be intentional, to express as strongly as possible the Apostle's belief in the end being designed by Providence, as in Job, chap. i.

8. The Apostle has described this trial in the same strain as his ineffable communion with Christ; his thoughts flow out naturally from one into the other. We now come to the ground of his doing so. It was because he had the Lord's assurance that in his own weakness the power of his master would be best shown forth.

υπέρ τούτου, ' for him, that he may depart from me' (i. e. the ύπερ τούτου τρὶς τον κύριον παρεκάλεσα, ἴνα ἀποστή ἀπ' ἐμοῦ. ³καὶ εἰρηκέν μοι ᾿Αρκεῖ σοι ἡ χάρις μου ἡ γὰρ ˇδύναμις ἐν ἀσθενεία τολείται.³ ἤδυτα οῦν μᾶλλον καυχήσομαι ἐν ταῖς ἀσθενείαις μου, ἴνα ἐπισκηνώση

* δύναμίς μου.

for this 'angel I 'thrice besought' the Lord, that 'he may adepart from me. And He 'has said unto me, 'My grace is sufficient for thee: for "a strength is made perfect in weakness.' Most gladly therefore will I rather 'boast in my 'weaknesses, that the 'strength of Christ may rest upon angel of Satan, as appears from \(\alpha\times\tilde{v}\) original, which could apply properly only to a person or personification; compare Acts v. 38, xxii. 29).

* Or 'exhorted.'

τον κύριον, 'Christ,' as appears from δύναμις τοῦ χριστοῦ, in verse 9.

παριεόλεσα, 'entreated.' This is often applied to Christ in the Gospels, and implies that personal communication which the Apostle always presupposes in his language concerning Him. In Joseph. Ant. XIII. v. 8, it is applied to God.

9. εἴρηκέν μοι. The perfect tense indicates that this was the constant reply. 'Thrice I besought Him, and the consolation of the reply still continued.'

'April σe h χάρις μου, 'thou hast no need for more than my favour.' h χάρις is thus used equally for the favour or kindness both of God and of Christhesense comp. John xxi. 22, 'tlr! will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?' In each case, 'Be contented with the assurance of my love and protection.'

ή γάρ δύναμις έν άσθενεία τελείται. 'For strength is perfected in weakness.' The omission of μοῦ turns the answer into a general truth, first, that the strength of Christ Himself is ' made perfect in weakness,' not in the weakness of the Apostle, but, so to speak, in His own weakness. (He was 'made perfect through sufferings.' Heb. ii. 10. 'Himself took our weaknesses' (ἀσθενείας), Matt. viii. 17.) From this the Apostle himself deduces the inference, that strength would be made perfect also in his own weakness: that his 'cross' or 'stake' in the flesh was merely an exemplification of God's law in dealing with His people. Comp. 'out of weakness were made strong.' (Hebxi. 34.)

μαλλον is to be taken (as its position shows) with καυχήσομαι, I will not complain, I will rather boast of my weaknesses.'

fra ἐτωκηνῶση, 'that the strength of Christ may rest upon me,' 'take up its abode with me.' Possibly in allusion to the Shechinah, as ἐτκῆνωτεν in John i. 14. For the image of the outpouring of Christ's strength on this servants, comp. Luke viii. 46, 'I perceive that strength (ἐδντωμκ) is gome out from me.'

έπ' έμε ή δύναμις τοῦ χριστοῦ. 10 διὸ εὐδοκῶ ἐν ἀσθενείαις, ἐν ὖβρεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν διωγμοῖς, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, ὑπὲρ χριστοῦ. ὅταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ, τότε δυνατός εἰμι.

10 me. Therefore I take pleasure in 'weaknesses, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake. For when I am weak, then am I strong.

ἀσθενείαις, 'weaknesses consequent on troubles.'

ύπέρ χριστοῦ, 'endured in the service of Christ.' He refers to all the preceding context.

5ταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ. He refers back to verses 8, 9, and thus sums up the whole. Compare a θθενλε ψμών δύναμες άστι (comn the paring the thorn of the Burning rs to Bush to the people of Israel). Plin, Ep. vii. 26: 'Nuper me refers cujusdam amici languor admothus nuit, optimos esse nos dum inpapare frmi sumus.'

Philo, Vit. Mos. vol. ii. p. 92, rò

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP. XI. 16-XII. 10.

I return once more to boast of myself. Think not that this folly is natural to me, yet think even this rather than not hear my self-defence; and remember that I boast, not in my own character, and as Christ would have me speak, but as I am forced in self-defence to speak on this particular occasion, and following the example of the crowd of teachers who beset you with boasts of this sery kind.

And now that I have put off the character of an Apostle. and taken the character of a fool, you surely ought, according to your own practice, to listen to me patiently. For wise as you are, fools, nevertheless, seem to have greater influence with you than wise men. These fools, as fools indeed they are, enslave you, plunder you, make you their prey, tower over you, insult you with blows on the face. These are the teachers to whom you gladly submit yourselves; and I, in comparison, am far inferior. I can do none of these things, I am covered with dishonour, and am broken down with weakness. Yet after all (to speak seriously, though still speaking not as an Apostle, but as a fool), whatever be their grounds of confidence, I have the same; precisely the same as regards their descent from God's chosen people, far more as regards their service of Christ; far more, though in thus speaking of it you will think me, not merely a fool, but a madman. There is, indeed, no comparison: I need no longer speak of them : I need only enumerate the hardships, the weaknesses, if so you will call them, of my own life, Mu labours have been beyond ordinary measure, my scourgings beyond all bounds, my perils, even of death, numerous. Five times I have been exposed to the severe punishment of the Jewish flagellation, thrice to that of the Roman magistrates; once I was stoned, thrice I was shipwrecked, a whole night and day I was in the sea. I have travelled far and wide: have encountered all the perils of travel-the perils of swollen torrents, of robbers and pirates, of Jewish enemies, of heathen mobs, in the crowded city, in the lonely desert, on the stormy sea, from false Christians. I passed through countless trials and troubles, in sleepless nights, in hunger and thirst, and days without food again and again; with cold and with scanty clothing. And (not to go through all the points which I might name) there is besides all this, the daily concourse of those who flock to hear me, and the anxiety for all the congregations which I have converted; amongst whom, if there is any one weak, I too am weak with him, and for his sake; if any caught in a snare, I am scorched in the flame of his temptation.

I have spoken of my weakness. Of my weakness then let me boast. if I must still continue to boast. I drop all irony. I speak the very truth itself, as God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, through all ages Blessed, well knows. Let me begin at the beginning. It was at Damascus, under the government of the Arabian chief Aretas, that his viceroy quarded the city to take me; and in a rope basket I was let down over the side of the wall .- Here I find myself again on the verge of continuing my boast; it is not becoming for me to do so, but I must .- I shall speak of the visions and revelations of Divine secrets which Christ has vouchsafed to me. I know a man who lived in Christ fourteen years ago,-whether he was literally carried up, or whether heaven was disclosed to him, I know not, God only knows-but he was carried away beyond the region of the clouds of earth, beyond the visible sky, into the invisible heaven above; and there, again,-whether literally or not. I know not, God only knows-he was carried away into the garden of the Lord, into the presence of God, and heard words which were no human words, which man cannot speak, though God may. Of this man, thus far removed from my own individual consciousness, I will boast; but of myself I will boast only in my weaknesses. I might boast, if so I wished it, and net not be a fool, though before in irony I said that I should be: but I forbear lest you should regard me with superstitious reverence beyond what you hear and see. And it was for this very purpose, lest I should be raised too high by the excess of the revelations of which I have spoken, that there was planted in my weak mortal frame a stake, as of impalement, on which I writhe like one crucified: an angel of the adversary was sent to smite me, like Job, whilst thus exposed before him; for this very purpose, I say, lest I should be raised up too high. When this pressed hard upon me, I have thrice entreated the Lord, that my enemy may depart from me, and thrice He has answered to me 'My loving favour suffices for thee; for strength is perfected in weakness.' Most gladly, therefore, will I boast in these my weaknesses, in order that the strength of Christ may overshadow me. Therefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in insults, in necessities, in persecutions from my enemies, in difficulties of all kinds, for Christ's sake; for when I am most weak, I know that I am most strong.

This section contains three points of great interest, both historical and moral.

I. General sketches of his dangers and sufferings have been given before in these Epistles; once in the First (iv. 11—13), twice in this (iv. 7—10, vi. 4—10). Interior of But this is the only passage where he enumerates the Aportacula flects, and so enables us to compare it with the ferings. The state of the Acts, and to form a picture of his heart artive of the Acts, and to form a picture of his life in detail from his own account. It must be remembered that the point of time at which it was composed excludes all the calamities recorded in Acts xx.—xxiii, and that therefore we must add to these his escape from Corinth (Acts xx. 3), the sorrow of his farewell visits (xx. 5—xxi. 14), his arrest at Jerusalem (xxi. 32), his imprisonment at Cassarea (xxiv. 27), his shipwreck (xxvii.), and his imprisonment at Rome (xxviii.) 30). Two results follow from the study of it.

(1) It represents a life hitherto without precedent in the history of the world. Self-devotion at particular 1. Their moments, or for some special national cause, had importbeen often seen before; but a self-devotion, involving acce. sacrifices like those here described, and extending through a period of at least fourteen years, and in behalf of no local or family interest, but for the interest of mankind at large, was, up to this time, a thing unknown. The motive of the Apostle may be explained in various ways, and the lives of missionaries and philaathropists may have equalled his in later times; but the facts here recorded remain the same. Paul did all this, and Paul was the first who did it.

(2) It is remarkable that, whilst there is nothing in this account which contradicts, yet the greater part of it are count which contradicts, yet the greater part of it have been also used to be a contradict of the area of the area and one of the Roman sourgings) are mentioned for:

critical dangers are described as occurring from time to time, we should hardly infer that the hardships were so protracted and continuous as is indicated in this section of the Epistle. In one point of view this is important as confirming the authority of the Christian history, as has been well argued by Paley in his Horæ Paulinæ. It shows that the biography of the Apostle, unlike most biographies of heroes and saints (as that of Francis Xavier), instead of overrating, underrates the difficulties and sufferings which we learn from the Apostle himself; the accuracy of the Apostle's own account being further guaranteed by the extreme and apparently unfeigned reluctance with which it is brought forward. On the other hand, it impresses us with a sense of the very imperfect and fragmentary character of the history of the Acts, as a regular narrative, during that period to which the Apostle's word's relate, namely, from Acts ix. 1, to xx. 2. This consideration gives a double value to this detailed aspect of the Apostle's life, which, but for the goading provocations of his opponents, would (humanly speaking) have been altogether lost to us.

II. What his description of his outward sufferings, xi. 23—

11. Description

12. The description of his vision (xii. 2—10) is to his inward of the description of his vision (xii. 2—10) is to his inward of the control of the contro

Timon. 10; of Philip, in Acts viii. 39; and especially of John, in the Apocalypse (i. 10, iv. 1, &c.); 'the dreams and visions,' alluded to as signs of the spirit in Acts ii. 16; and the speaking with tongues, in 1 Cor xiv. 2. The details may be different.

but this description contains their common characteristics; the loss of self-consciousness, the sense of being hurried into a higher sphere,—and the partial and mysterious glimpses of the invisible world. And it illustrates especially the eestatic state in which he himself largely partook, as appears from the attacks of his enemies, still preserved in the Clementines (Hom. wxi. 19), where Peter is introduced as rebuking Paul (under the name of Simon Magus) for pretending to revelations through sizions and dreams. (See Introd. pp. 367, 8, Compare also the facts stated Acts ix. 12, xxii. 17, and his expression in 1 Cor. xiv. 18, that 'the spoke with tongues more than they all.'

And further, the strong line of demarcation which he has drawn between this cestacy and his ordinary state, is flustrated as warrant to us that he does not needlessly come into a fine for things human and Divine, things earthly and eithings spiritual. What he does say gives us a pick-severe ture, at least conceivable, of the mode in which he may have received his 'revelations from the Lord' (1 Cor. xi. 23, xv. 3; Cal. i. 12, 16). What he does not say—the silence respecting the words that cannot be uttered—furnishes a remarkable contrast to the elaborate description given by Mahomet, of his nocturnal journey to Jerusalem and to paradise. (Sprenger's Life of Mahomet, part i. 126, 136.)

III. The description of his trial of the 'thorn in the flesh' has two interests quite independent of each other. The first is purely antiquarian and historical. What scription was the trial of which the Apostle speaks, in this ethics passage and in Gal. iv. 13, 14?

This is one of the questions of which there are new several in the N. T. where the obscurity for us is occasioned by the very fact that it was plain to contemporaries. Such are 1 Cor. xi. 10, xv. 29; 2 Thess. ii. 6; Rev. xiii. 18. The various conjectures respecting it, some curious only as theological funcies, some as containing more or less approximation to probability, may be divided into three classes.

(1) Spiritual Trials.

(a) Sensual temptations. Possibly Augustine (Concio ii. ad Ps. 58), Jerome (Ep. ad Eustoch. de Cust. Virg.; a. Sensual al Demetr. de Virg. Serv. c. 6; ad Rustic. de Viv. impres-Formâ, c. 3),and Theophylact (ad loc.). But of these, sions. the passages in the two former are ambiguous, and in Theo-phylact the reading is doubtful. This interpretation, therefore, first set in with the monks of the sixth and seventh centuries. Salvian (De Circumcis.) and Bede (in Hom. Dom. 5); and has since been the favourite view of Roman Catholic theologians. (See Estius ad loc.) The words 'for the flesh' would admit of it, but the rest of the description is in a strain of exultation (xii. 9) different from what the mention of such a temptation would lead us to expect; and there is little, if anything, else in the Apostle's life or writings which could countenance it. 1 Cor. ix. 27, 'I keep my body under,' has no reference to sins of sensuality, and Rom. vii. 23, 'the law of sin in my members,' is a general expression, not applying to any peculiarities of the Apostle himself. 2 Cor. vii. 2, and 1 Thess. ii. 3, may imply that such an insinuation had then been made against him, but contain nothing which can be brought to bear on this passage. The Apostle's own description of his character is almost decisive against such a supposition. 1 Cor. vii. 7-9. 'I would that all men were even as myself' [i.e. without temptations to incontinency]. 'It is good for the unmarried to abide, even as I; but if they cannot contain, let them marry: it is better γαμήσαι ή πυρούσθαι.' And, although the examples of Jerome, Antony, Augustine, and Luther, prove the compatibility of such trials with great piety and energy of character, yet one is inclined to agree with Luther. 'Ah no! dear Paul, it was no such trial which afflicted thee. (b) Temptations to unbelief; or torments of conscience about

(a) Temptations to unbehel; or torments of conscience about his past life. So thought, not unnaturally from their position, the old Protestants, as Gerson, Luther, Calments of vin, Mosheim, Osiander. But against this is the of conexternal character of the trial indicated by all the science. expressions ('the thorn,' 'the flesh,' to buffet'), and the absence of any indications of such thoughts in the rest of the Apostle's writings.

(2) External calamities,

(a) His Judaizing opponents (so Chrysostom and the Greek a Juda. fathers generally), alluding especially to the indining especially dual leader so often pointed at (see note on x. 7), and confirmed by the use of the phrase 'ministers and confirmed by the use of the phrase 'ministers of Satan,' in xi. 4. But here, again, the expression 'in the flesh 'is too closely personal, and 'the thorn' and 'buffeting' too definite.

- (a) His afflictions and persocutions. This is confirmed by the use of "weakness" in verse 9, and by the ex-2, Anipress reference under that name to his distresses, in tiens. 10. But against it is the definite and isolated character of the trial, and also the improbability of the Apostle's earnest desire.
- 10. But against it is the demine and isolated character of the trial, and also the improbability of the Apostle's earnest desire to be delivered from what was an almost inseparable accompaniment of his mission.

 (3) Some bodily aliment. Almost every disorder has been
- suggested. Pleurisy, the stone (Aquinas), epilepsy c. Bodily (Ziegler), weakness of eyesight (suggested by a silment. comparison of Acts ix. 9, xxiii. 5; Gal. iv. 15, vi. 11), defect of utterance (suggested by x. 10), lice in the head (Cotelier, Mon. Eccl. i. p. 352), hypochondria, headache, earache (Jerome, Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Tertullian). The supposition that it was a pain in the head has the advantage of a distinct support from tradition. Jerome says (ad Gal. iv. 13), ' Tradunt eum gravissimum capitis dolorem sæpe perpessum: Tertullian (De Pudie, cap. 12), 'Per dolorem, ut aiunt, auriculæ vel capitis.' Dismissing, however, any of those special conjectures, the probability is in favour of some general ailment, which would answer the force of the words, and which, if it were in any way occasioned by his sufferings or by his natural temperament, would agree with verses 9, 10, and, if it affected his outward appearance, would agree with x. 10; 1 Cor. The expressions in Gal. iv. 14, οὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε (comp. έξουδενημένος, in x. 10), οὐδὲ ἐξεπτύσατε, could hardly be used except of something apparent to the eye. Nor would it be below the dignity of the Apostle's character to ascribe such a trial to Satan. In 1 Cor. v. 5 ('delivering to Satan for the destruction of the flesh'), he couples together the words 'flesh' and 'Satan' as here, evidently implying some bodily evil. Nor would it be inconsistent with his great character to feel keenly his struggle against such a difficulty. The frequent allusions to his hardships, his partings, and his anxieties (see iv. 10-12, xi. 27), indicate, as has been already observed, an extreme susceptibility of temperament; and it might be inferred, from i, 8-10, iv. 12, that he had but just recovered from an attack either of sickness or anxiety, which had brought him to the verge of the grave. Instances in later history illustrate both the severity of such a trial, and perseverance under it: Alfred. with his cancer-William of Orange, with his fragile framecontending against the constant demands of active life,

IV. Consolation of culiar nature of the trial, the permanent interest the Approximation of the trial, the permanent interest resides in the consolation to which it gave occasion.

tile. (1) There can be no doubt that the Apostle reprepresents himself as constantly troubled with some humiliating I.His affliction, which marred his usefulness and broke his weakness. spirit. We learn from it to regard him, not as a man sustained by a naturally indomitable strength of mind and body, but as a man doing what he did by an habitual struggle against his constitutional weakness. The other Apostles were depressed by their humble station and illiterate character; he was dogged by the 'thorn in the flesh' and the 'weakness of his holdly unseence.'

Under this weakness he received an adequate support. In Support of what mode, indeed, this intercourse (if one may say so) with our Lord took place, we cannot tell. But revelation, this direct account of such a communication from the Apostle himself illustrates all the less direct or less authentic allusions to similar communications elsewhere, 'The Lord' is still with him, the personal Lord, Jesus Christ, whom he had seen on the road to Damascus. He 'entreats' Him (παρεκάλεσα) as one still present; and the answer is returned, as in the moment of his conversion (Acts ix. 5), through articulate words. And those words exactly express that union of the Divine and human, of the 'grace' or 'favour' as of God, with the 'weakness' as of man, which is the characteristic peculiarity of the representation of Christ in the New Testament. This revelation is received by the Apostle as an abundant consolation, not only for the particular trial to which it referred, but for all 'the weaknesses, insults, necessities, persecutions, and afflictions,' to which he was exposed. If Christ was satisfied, he was satisfied; if Christ's strength became his strength through his weakness, then in his weakness he was strong,

(2) The case of the Apostle is an undoubted instance of 'the 2. In2. I think that we require. The Apostle prayed not for wealth, or honour, or wisdom, but simply that a great impeliment to his usefulness might be removed; and even this was not granted. And, in like manner, a greater than the Apostle had 'offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears,' 'earnestly, and in an agony, and the sweat, as it were great drops of blood, falling down to the ground, saying, "Eather, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me" '(Heb. v. 7; Luke xxii. 44; Matt. xxxi. 39; and yet the cup was not removed, nor the prayer granted. There are other passages in the N. Test, which indicate the same truth, but these are sufficient. If the prayer of l'aul, and the prayer of Christ, were refused, none need complain or be perplexed.

But also, this passage shows us how, whilst in the literal sense prayer may be unavailing, in a higher sense it 3 Fulfile is heard and granted. Although the trial remained, ment of yet the Apostle was convinced that he had been prayer. heard. How, we know not; but in the solitude and suffering of that hour, the gracious words were borne in upon his soul, which, even irrespective of their special import, were sufficient to convince him that he was cared for, that he was loved by Him whom he had entreated. And, in like manner, in that more awful agony, of the 'sorrow exceeding sorrowful even unto death,' although no words of assurance are recorded, and although the darkness and desolation still remained unremoved. yet we are told in language which it would be useless to criticise or analyse minutely, that 'there appeared an angel unto him from heaven strengthening him' (Luke xxii. 43). So also, with others, even if there be no direct assurance of comfort, no visible answer to prayer, no certain consciousness of Divine love and tenderness, yet the examples of our Lord and His Apostle may serve to sustain us. We may believe. though we see and feel nothing, that there is a heavenly messenger at hand to strengthen us. We are heard like Him. 'in that we feared' (Heb. v. 7). The answer that was returned in distinct words to the Apostle, 'My grace is sufficient for thee,' is still returned unto us, although we hear it not.

Lastly, in the actual words of the answer to the Apostle, and in his acceptance of it, a distinct principle is announced of universal significance. 'Strength is made permade perfect in weakness,' When I am weak, then feet in I am strong,' are expressions which have now passed weakness.

almost into the proverbial language of mankind. It was true in the highest sense, of Him that uttered it, that ' His strength was made perfect in the weakness of His sufferings.' The Cross of Christ is, indeed, the strength of Christianity. It was true, also, though not in the highest sense, yet still in a sense so great as to be a lesson and example to all the world, that His strength was perfected in the weakness of the Apostles, above all, of St. Paul. 'I thank Thee, O Father, that thou hast concealed these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes.' Who can say how much of the purity and simplicity, and therefore universal strength of the first teaching of the Gospel, we owe (humanly speaking) to the humble station and uneducated character of the first Apostles, which thus received, at once, and without perversion or intrusion of alien thoughts, the original impression of the Word made flesh? Who can say how great would have been the loss to the world had the Gospel originated, not in the weakness of Palestine and Galilee, but in the learning of Alexandria or the strength of Rome? And, again, in St. Paul himself, it might have seemed at the time to all, as it did on this occasion seem to him, that the cause of the Gospel would have been better served, had he been relieved from his infirmity and gone forth to preach and teach with unbroken viscour of body and mind, his bodily presence strong, his speech mighty and powerful. But history has answered the question otherwise, and has ratified the Divine answer, in which the Apostle acquiesced. What the Apostle lost for himself, and what Christianity lost for the moment. has been more than compensated by the acknowledgment that he was beyond doubt proved to be, not the inventor of Christianity, but its devoted and humble propagator. In his own weakness lies the strength of the cause. When he was weakest as a teacher of the present, he was strongest as an Apostle of the future. And what his trial was to him and to the world on a large scale, that the trial of each individual Christian may have been ever since, the means in ways inconceivable to him now, of making himself and others strong in the service of God and of man.

FINAL WARNINGS AND SALUTATIONS.

¹¹ Γέγονα ἄφρων*· ὑμεῖς με ἠναγκάσατε. ἐγῶ γὰρ ἄφειλον ὑφ' ὑμῶν συνίστασθαι· οὐδὲν γὰρ ὑστέρησα τῶν ὑπερλίαν ἀποστόλων, εἰ καὶ οὐδέν εἰμι. ¹²τὰ μὲν ση-

* Add κανχώμενος.

11 I rhave become a fool; a ye rcompelled me. For I ought to have been commended by you: for in nothing rwas I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I am nothing.

The long burst of passionate self-vindication has now at last Return expended itself, and he from di- returns to the point gression. from whence he diverged at x. 7, where he was asserting his intention to repress the disobedience of those who still resisted his authority at Corinth. Before, however, he enters again upon this, he looks back over the long digression; and resumes here and there a thought which needed explanation or expansion. Hence, although this concluding section stands apart from the interruption of x. 10-xii. 10, and is truly the winding up of the main argument begun in x. 1-7, it is filled with traces of the torrent which has passed through his mind in the interval. His 'folly' (xi. 1-10), the 'commendatory' epistles (iii. 1, v. 12), the 'Apostolical' pretensions of his opponents (xi. 12, 13) are resumed in verse 11; his miracles and sufferings (xi. 23-28) in verse 12; the question of self-support (xi. 12) in verses 13 -18; the strength and weakness united in Christ (xii. 9) in xiii. 3, 4, 9, 11. γέγονα ἄφρον, 'I have been a fool,' This is the expression of the Apostle's first feeling on looking back at what he has said. That one word 'fool,' already used so often (see note on xi. 1), sums it all up.

νμεῖς με ήναγκάσατε. 'It was not my doing, but yours [for you ought to have saved me the task of commending myself].'

This clause implied, but not expressed, furnishes the ground for the next sentence. 'γ'ν γ'ω; 'for I ought to have been commended by you;' ψ₁νν being as emphatic as 'γ'ν. 'It was your business not mine.' For the feeling of looking for the attestation of his Apostleahip to the Corinthians themselves, compare iii. 1, 2: and 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2.

občir γὰρ υστίρησα. 'I, and not they, should have been commended; for I showed myself equal to them;' see note on xi. 5. ουδέτ είμι. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 8—10.

12. This is the proof of his Apostleship, brought forward for a moment, but not carried out. μέν must refer to some antithesis which is omitted. The first σημεία is used for 'proofs' or signs' generally, the second σημείος more especially for 'miraculous signs,' as in Rom. xv.

μεία τοὺ ἀποστόλου κατειργάσθη ἐν ὑμῶ ἐν πάση ὑτομοίη, 'σημείοις καὶ τέραστε καὶ δυνάμετε.. ¹⁹⁷1 τρά ἐστε το ὑτοστώθητε ὑτέρ τὰς λοιπὰς ἐκκλησίας, εἰ μὴ ὅτι ἀτὸτὸς ἐγὼ οὐ κατενάρκησα ὑμῶν; χαρίσταθέ μοι τὴν ἀδικίαν ταύτην. ''ἱἐοὺ τρέτου 'τοῦτο ἐσιόμος ἐχω ἐλ-

* Add dr. * irrifore. * Om. rouro.

12 Truly the signs of 'the apostle were wrought among you in all 'endurance, in signs and wonders and mighty deeds. 13 For what is it wherein you were inferior to 'the other churches, except it be that I myself was not 'chargeable to Hyou' forgive me this wrong. Behold, this 'is the third

19, Heb. ii. 24, and in the Acts and Gospels. τέρασιν, 'wonders,' is used here, and often in the Acts, of the Apostolic miracles; but never (except in John iv. 48; Acts ii. 22) of the miracles of Christ. δυνάμεσιν, 'mighty miracles,' as in 1 Cor. ii. 4, xii. 10, 28. The three words occur together in Rom. xv. 19; Heb. ii. 4. ъпорогу геfers to his hardships. The pas-Claim of sage is remarkable as mirsculous containing (what is powers. rare in the history of miracles) a direct claim to miraculous powers by the person to whom they were ascribed. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 4, and Rom. xv. 19.

rου ἀνοστόλου. 'Of him who is invested with the Apostolical mission;' as, in English, 'of the Apostle;' meaning, not any special individual, but the ideal of the office. κατωργάσθη 'were wrought,' i. e. speaking of himself only as an instrument.

τί γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ἡσσώθητε.
 The proofs of my Apostleship were sufficient for you; for there was nothing wanted to complete them.

ύπερ τὰς λοιπὰς ἐκκλησέας, 'beyond the other Churches to which I have preached.' At this point he is reminded of the objection noticed in xi. 7, viz. that his not receiving maintenance from them was a proof, either of his want of affection for them. "When I speak of your having every proof of my power and my affection for you, I remember that there is one point in which you may consider yourselves aggrieved."

airòe tyú. 'The only point of which you can complain, is that I, in my own person, have refused support; your complaint does not apply even to my companions; they have received support.' See note on xii. 18.

κατενάρκησα. See note on xi. 9. χαρίσασθί μοι την άδιείαν ταίν την. Ironical, like xi. 7: 'did I commit an offence (ἀμαρτίαν ἐποίησα) in abasing myself, that ye might be exalted?'

Id. lieb refree rore, 'look at the proof of my love. This is the third time that I am ready to travel to you. Once I have visit in Acts xviii. 1); 'a second time I intended to come' (i.e. according to the plan mentioned in i.i. 15, 16), 'the third time, on the present occasion, I am now ready.'

θείν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ οὐ καταναρκήσω οὐ γὰρ ζητῶ τὰ ύμων, άλλα ύμας οὐ γὰρ ὀφείλει τὰ τέκνα τοῖς γονεῦσιν θησαυρίζειν, άλλ' οἱ γονεῖς τοῖς τέκνοις. 15 ἐγὼ δὲ ήδιστα δαπανήσω καὶ ἐκδαπανηθήσομαι ὑπέρ τῶν ψυχῶν ύμων, εί περισσοτέρως ύμας αγαπών ήσσον αγαπώμαι.

16 Έστω δέ, έγω οὐ κατεβάρησα υμάς άλλα υπάρχων

h Add enf. · Add śuŵr. · TITTOP

time I am ready to come to you, and I will not be chargeable: ox for I seek not your's, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for 15 the children. And I will very gladly spend and be spent for "your souls', "if the more abundantly I love you the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, I did not burden you: nevertheless being καὶ οὐ καταναρκήσω, ' I am coming; and, when I come, I shall still follow the same practice of not being burdensome.' The two tenses κατενάρκησα and καταranking are opposed to each other. ου γάρ ζητώ τὰ υμών άλλὰ υμας, 'if I love you, it must be yourselves, and not your money that I seek.' Comp. Aristotle's definition of Affection (φελέα), Ethics, viii. 3. ου γαο οφείλει, 'and this is my duty, for I am in the place of a parent to you; and parents are bound to provide for the wants of the children, not children for their parents.' Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 14, 15: 'As my beloved sons I warn you . . . ye have not many fathers, for . . . I have begotten you.' 2 Cor. ix. 2: 'I have espoused you to one husband.'

 έγω δὲ ήδιστα, 'but I will do even more than parents. I will both spend and be myself extension squandered in your behalf.' έκδαπανηθήσουαί θήσομαι. is a climax, both as being in the passive, and also as expressing more strongly by ée

the entire consumption of his powers for their sakes.

16. "Eorw čć, at enim, 'but, you may say, let it be Guarding so. You grant me so against much-you grant that suspicion, I in my own person was no burden to you; but, inasmuch as I am of a crafty character, I caught you by stratagem.' The whole sentence is an objection attributed by the Apostle to the Corinthians. They might, he supposes, suspect that whilst he abstained from collecting money from them himself he availed himself of the collection made for the Jewish Christians by Titus. To guard against a suspicion of this kind he had sent two, instead of one, for that contribution ' (viii. 20, 21). ὑπάργων here, as in viii, 17; 1 Cor. xi. 7, expresses the habitual state or condition of the person, and is therefore equivalent to the Latin quippe qui essem, 'inasmuch as I was.

πανούργος, 'cunning,' as παrουργία, in xi. 3, iv. 2; 1 Cor. iv. 19.

πανούργος δόλω ύμας ελαβον. ¹¹ μή τως δω άπέσταλκα προς ύμας, δι' αύτοῦ ἐπλεονέκτησα ύμας; ¹⁸ παρεκάλεσα Τίτου, καὶ στυαπέστειλα του άδελφον μή τι ἐπλεονέκτη σεν ύμας Τίτος; οὐ τῷ αὐτῷ πνεύματι περιεπατήσαμεν; οὐ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ξίνεσεν;

19 *Πάλαι δοκείτε ότι ύμιν δάπολογούμεθα. «κατέναντι

πάλιν,
 ^b ἀπολογούμεθα;
 ^c κατενώπιον τοῦ,

17 crafty I caught you with guile. Did I 'defraud you by 18 any of them whom I 'have sent unto you? I 'exhorted Titus, and with him I sent 'the brother: did Titus 'defraud you? walked we not in the same spirit? in the same steps?

19 Long ago tye think that we excuse ourselves unto you':

17, 18. 'Surely there was no ne whom I have sent, by whom I made a gain of you?' The Apostle indigeantly repels the suspicion, and so abruptly that hardly a clause is complete. The sentence is a mixture of two constructions: μ μ διά τυσς δν άπιτοπλακ, έπλοκτέρτα, αλα μάτοπλακ απέσταλκα, άπέσταλκα, άπέσταλκα, άπέσταλκα μάτοπλαν τως τῶν πλονενετῶν μάτο.

18. παρεκάλισα Τίτον, 'I exhorted' or 'charged Titus to go on the mission of making the contribution.' The same word is used in describing these transactions in viii. 6, 17; 1 Cor. xvi. 12.

συσατίστελα τὸν ἀδελφόν, '1 sent with him the brother whom you know, with the view of preventing this suspicion: 'see viii. 28, 29. The Syriac has 'the brethren,' which would refer to both the brethren mentioned in viii. 18—21.

μή τι έπλεονέκτησεν ύμᾶς Τίτος; 'surely Titus made no gain of you?'

ου τῷ αὐτῷ πνεύματι περιεπατήσαμεν; οὐ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἔχνεσιν; Did not we (i. e. Paul, Titus, and the brother) walk in the same spirit, and in the same footsteps? To identify Titus with himself he changes the person, and, where we should have expected περιπάτησε, has περιεπατήσαμεν.

Here, as in v. 7, he follows out the precise meaning of περιπατείν; and therefore, though in the first ro.

clause it is taken in its general sense, where the metaphor is almost lost, walk by the same spirit' (as in Acts ix. 31, xxi. 21), in the second clause the metaphor is preserved: "walk," or 'tread," in the same footmarks' fives is so used with eroxytic properties of the same footmarks' gives is so used with eroxytic properties in the same footmarks' gives in so used with eroxytic years and the same footmarks. The same footmarks is the same footmarks and the same footmarks are same footmarks. The same footmarks are same footmarks and the same footmarks are same footmarks.

For the phrase, comp. Philo, περί Φιλανθρ., p. 385; τοῦς αὐτοῦς ίχνεσιν έπακολουθήσαι.

19. The main subject of this part of his Epistle, his Apostolic authority, which he had begun in x. 1.—9, resumed in xii. 11, 12, interrupted by the paranthesis in xii. 13—18, he now finally resumes.

Instead of πάλιν ('a second θεοῦ ἐν χριστῷ λαλοῦμεν, τὰ δὲ πάντα, ἀγαπητοὶ, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν οἰκοδομῆς. ²⁰ φοβοῦμαι γὰρ μή πως ἐλθὼν

'before God in Christ we speak', but all things, o beloved, 20 for your edifying. For I fear lest when I come I shall time') in D. E. J. K., is to be read πάλαι ('for a πάλιν and long time ') with A. πάλαι. B. F. G. Both would make sense. If πάλιν be correct, it would refer back to the former places in this Epistle (iii. 1, αρχόμεθα πάλιν ξαυτούς συνιστάν: ν. 12, πάλιν . . . συνιστάνομεν). But probably the reading of #álu here was suggested by the occurrence of the word there. waxaa refers to the misapprehension which might exist as to the apologetic tone (άπολογούμεθα) which does, in fact, pervade the whole Epistle. In this case, a full stop at aroloγούμεθα, as in the Text, is better than a question.

The word, as a verb, is used in his Episties besides, only in Rom. ii. 15; but the substantive (durebeylo) occurs in the same sense in I Cor. ix. 3, 'this is my defence to them that question me.' 'Not once or twice only, but through the whole course of the Epistle, you are thinking that we are employed in defending ourselves.'

The next clause shows that wife is emphasic, as might be inserved from its position before area-to-position of the area-to-position before area-to-position before the presence of God, in the spirit of-Clirist that I spoak. This peak is possible presents an exception to the general object of the Epistle, in which he represents hinself and the Corintains as one set and the Corintains as one set. terms. Here we have an indication of the same independence of character as appears in his conduct at Philippi (Acts xvi. 37), and at Jerusalem (xxii. 25), with regard to the Roman magistrates. In the First Epistle, comparo iv. 3, 'with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you.'

For the expression κατέναντι Θεοῦ ἐν χριστῷ, see note on ii. 17.

He now gives the same reason for his apologetic tone that he had given by implication in iii. 1, and expressly in v. 12, 'we commend not ourselves again to you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf, that we may have somewhat to answer those who glory in appearance, and not in heart.' So here the sense is, 'I am not defending myself, but all that I do is for your building up.' In the word ayannroi, 'beloved,' which he has only used once before (vii. 1), we seem to see the sudden return of affectionate warmth, which in the sterner tone of the first part of the sentence he had for a moment relinquished. In the expression οἰκοδομης ('building up'), there is a return to the general train of thought in x. 1-7.

20. He goes on to give more precisely his reasons for this selfdefence. *I defend myself, lest you should fall a prey to my opponents. What follows strongly confirms what was said on x. 1, that an interval must have elapsed between the writing of this last. οὐχ οἴους θέλω εὖρω ὑμᾶς κἀγὼ εὑρεθῶ ὑμῖν οἷον οὐ θέλετε, μή πως "ἔρις "ζῆλος θυμοὶ ἐριθεῖαι καταλαλιαὶ

• $pers. • $900.

not find you such as I would and that I shall be found by you such as ye would not, lest there be 'debate, ''Azeal, portion of the Episale (z. 1—xiii. 13), and the earlier portion (i. 1 —vii. 16). With the thoughts of vii. 9—16 fresh in his mind, the Apostle could hardly have anticipated the return of those very evils which he there so confectify believed to have been repressed. Comp. especially weres with the detailed eulog on their repentance for those very sins in vii. 9—11.

μή πως. The two words are here, as in the next clause, to be united, so as not to connect convite 196 μ 12 στ πως with έλθών. 'Lest if so be.' In the third clause μή πως is exchanged for μή, the doubt implied in $\mu\dot{\eta}$ $\pi\omega_S$ naturally dwindling away as he advances in his statement. His fears are first general, lest the friendly relations which he had so earnestly hoped to see re-established between himself and his converts should be disturbed; lest be should be compelled to assume towards them the severity which in 1 Cor. iv. 21; 2 Cor. i. 23, x. 1-7, he had deprecated. The transition from his fears for them to his fears for himself is characteristic of the identification of interests which pervades the whole Epistle. For the particular turn of expression, comp. xi. 12; Gal. iv. 12

This double fear is explained by his apprehension lest they shall be turned away from him by misrepresentations; and lest he shall be driven to use severity by their imperience. Hence the climax, in which his fears, after first expressing themselves in their more general form, break out (here only in the Second Epistle) into an impassioned emimentation of all the second of the mention of all the district of the the First, and then again settle separally on the particular evil of sensuality which had been the express subject of both Epistles.

μή πως έρις . . . άκαταστασίαι. The vehemence of his language has caused him to omit the verb -which may be either won or ebρεθώσι from the adjacent clause. The accumulation of words serves to show his indignation, and also to present a lively picture of the evils introduced into a Christian Church by the revival of this old disease of the Grecian commonwealths. The catalogue becomes more definite and more aggravated as it goes on. The first four words express the disorder in its most general form, and occur in the same order as in Gal. v. 20.

έρες A. έρεις B¹. D. E. F. G. J. K., 'quarrel,' used of the factions in 1 Cor. i. 11. ἔρεδες'. ⟨ñλος is 'anger,' indigmation,' as in all the passages where it is used in the N. Test: in a bad sense (Acts v. 17, xiii. 45; Rom. xiii. 13; 1 Cor. iii. 3; Gal. v. 20; James iii. 14, 16). In St. Paul it is thus always with έρει. ψιθυρισμοὶ φυσιώσεις ἀκαταστασίαι. 21 μὴ πάλιν ελθόντος μου ταπεινώσει με ὁ θεός μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ πευθήσω πολλοὺς τῶν προημαρτηκότων καὶ μὴ μετανοη-

* έλθόντα με ταπεινώση δ διέος.

wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults.

21 "When I come again will my God rhave to cast me down' among you, and shall I rhave to' bewail many who have Sυμοί is 'passion,' 'rage.'

The plural is unusual, and probably is occasioned only by the attraction of the plurals in the rest of the sentence. If it have any force, it must be 'bursts of rage' έρίθεια is derived from έριθος, 'a hired labourer,' and thence used for 'low envy' such as hired servants might be supposed to entertain; and thence for 'cabal' or 'mob,' such as would be formed from persons of that class; such as were to be found in Greek cities, and are alluded to under the name of ayopaios or mornooi at Thessalonica (Acts xvii. 5), and at Corinth (xviii. 14). At Rome, the corresponding phrase was the turba forensis. In Aristotle's Politics (v. 2, 3) it is used in this sense, and is enumerated amongst the seven causes of Greek revolution.

'Cabal' or 'ambition,' therefore, seems the most natural translation of the word in the New Test. See Rom. ii. 8; Gal. v. 20; Phil. i. 16, ii. 3; James iii. 14, 16. Rickert was the first commontator who gave it this its true sense.

καταλαλιαί and ψιθυρισμοί describe the acts in which this factions spirit was expressed, καταλαλιά (which only occurs once clsowhere in the N. Test., 1 Pet. ii. 1) is 'open detraction;' ψιθυρισμός, 'whispering,' i. e. 'secret calumnies' (so in Ecclus. xxi. 28, ψαθυρίζω; and in Rom. i. 30, ψαθυριστάς, where it is used, as here, with καταλάλους).

φυσιώσεις and ἀκαταστασία αχpress the actual mischief produced. φυσίωσες occurs nowhere else in the N. Test. But the well known meaning of φυσιώσshows that it is 'insolence'. Here, as in θυμοί, what would naturally have been a singular noun becomes plural from the other plurals in the sentence.

άκαταστασίαι 'disorders,' 'tumults.' See note on vi. 5.

 He now returns to the more especial stain on the Corinthian Church, which he hoped had been removed.

πάλιν ἐλθύντος, 'on my second visit,' i. e. the one which was about to be made. It implies that there had been but one before.

ταπεινώσει ' cast down.' Comp. the same word similarly used in vii. 6.

πρὸς ὑμᾶς cannot be taken with ἐλθόντος, 'to you,' and must therefore be 'in relation to you.'

πενθήσω, 'have to lament,' i.e. the necessity of punishing: else he would not speak of many instead of all who have sinned. πενθέω is usually intransitive.

τῶν προημαρτηκότων. The πρό may refer to the time before their conversion, but rather to σάντων ἐπὶ τῆ ἀκαθαρσία καὶ πορνεία καὶ ἀσελγεία ἡ ἔπραξαν; ΧΙΙΙ. ¹τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς. ἐπὶ στόματος δύο μαρτύρων καὶ τριῶν σταθήσεται πῶν ῥήμα.

sinned 'before and 'did not repent of the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they 'committed?' I XIII. This is the third time I am coming to you. 'In the mouth of 'two witnesses 'and three' shall every word be the time in which they should have repented: those who have sinned first, and did not repent afterwards.'

προαμαρτάνω is only used in the N. Test. here and in xiii. 20.

As the sins here spoken of were past, pureopedraw approaches more nearly than is nually the case to the nedern translet the case to the nedern for sin. The state of mind which he here laments is the same as that which he strake in I Cor. v. I, where, although there was the way of the work of the sin, by not having expressed any horror against him.

int τη ακαθαρσία. This probably belongs both to μετανοησάντων and to πενθήσω, 'after,' or 'in consequence of.' See for a similar position of words, 1 Cor. xv. 19.

The three words express sensual sins, and are similarly joined in Gal. v. 19. It is needless to distinguish them more particularly.

XIII. 1, 2. There is no break in the argument. He has already expressed his fear of what he should find when he came; he here expresses his full intention of coming. Otice he had been there, a second time he had intended to come, now the third time he was actually coming. It is probable with the view of expressing more strongly that he should come without fail, that the expression, 'I am ready to come,' in xii. 14, is here exchanged for 'I am coming.' For this future sense of lexquat, compare dxôd-press; in John xxi. 23.

The words which follow, though without any indication of quotation, are from Deut. xix. 15.

It is possible that the Apostle means merely to say that, on his arrival at Corinth there shall be a formal trial, in which the guilt of the offenders shall be proved according to the Law of Moses; as in the rule laid down in the Gospels for dealing with offend-ing Christians: 'If he will not hear thee, take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established' (Matt. xviii, 16). But it is unlikely that the Apostle should express himself either so formally or so imperfectly; and the context suggests a better interpretation. The journeys of the Apostle, accomplished or intended, occupy throughout the Epistle a prominent place in his mind; and now they seem to him to assume almost a distinct personal existence, as though each constituted a separate attestation to his assertion. He, as it were, appears to himself a different ²προείρηκα καὶ προλέγω, ὡς παρὼν τὸ δεύτερον καὶ ἀπὼν νῦν, τοῦς προημαρτηκόσιν καὶ τοῦς λοιποῦς πᾶσιν, ὅτι ἐὰν ἔλθω εἰς τὸ πάλιν οὐ φείσομαι. ³ἔπεὶ δοκιμὴν ζη-

" ral and prop you you

2 established.' I "have told you before and foretell you, as if present the second time "though absent now", a to those who have sinned before and to all "the others", that aif I come again I will not spare. Since ye seek a proof person, and, therefore, a different witness in each journey accomplished or proposed. The first witness was that which he had delivered during his first visit, or in his First Epistle (iv. 20); to which he refers in the words, 'I have said before' (προείρηκα). The second witness was that which he now bore on his present iourney and through his present Epistle, which was intended to supply the place of the journey once intended (i. 15: 1 Cor. xvi. 7) but now abandoned by him. To this he refers in the word προλέγω, 'I speak beforehand.' i. e. 'before my next visit;' and he strengthens this witness by representing himself as in a manner present on that second visit which had really been postponed (ώς παρών το δεύτερον). It is by thus reckoning his Second Epistle as being virtually a second visit, or, at least, a second witness, that he was enabled in the first verse, to call the visit which was now about to be actually accomplished, 'his third' visit. And this third visit would be reckoned as the third witness, if it were necessary that the words quoted from Deuteronomy were to be literally complied with.

For the familiarity of the image of witnesses in that age, comp. 1 John v. 5—7.

rai ἀπών must be 'although absent.' rūν, though referring especially to ἀπών, yet must also be taken with παρών. Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 3. A. has ἐτοίμως ἔχω ἐλθεῖν; but probably taken from xii. 14.

2. τοῖς προημαρτηκόσιν. See xii. 21.

roiς λοιποίς πάσιν, 'to all who had not sinned, but who still might require a warning.'

For the threefold repetition of πρό in προείρητα, προλίγω, and προημαρτητώσευ, comp. ix. 5; 'as you have been beforehand in sinning, so I have been beforehand in warning.'

είς το πόλεν is the gradual approximation to the use of εἰς (as in modern Greek) for 'in' in all cases. So εἰς τὸ σάββατον, Acts xiii. 42.

3. In what follows (3-10) the main tenor of the argument, in x. 1-7, xii. 11, 12, xiii. 1, 2, to assert his authority over them, is interrupted by the desire in x. 2, xii. 19, xiii. 5-10, as in i. 23-ii. 11, to leave them to work out their own reformation without the necessity of his interference. The keynote of both these feelings is the word δοκιμή, 'proof.' It is like the marching and countermarching of armies. He is to give a proof of his power, unless (as he hopes) they will be beforehand with him in giving a proof of their reformation.

h δοκιμήν...τοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ λαλοῦντος χριστοῦ, 'a proof that Christ τείτε τοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ λαλοῦντος χριστοῦ, ὅς εἰς ὑμᾶς οὐκ ἀσθενεί, ἀλλὰ δυνατεί ἐν ὑμῖν '(καὶ γὰρ [εί] ἐσταυρώθη ἐξ ἀσθενείας, ἀλλὰ ζῆ ἐκ δυνάμεως θεοῦ· καὶ γὰρ ἡμεὶς ἀσθενοῦμεν ἐν αὐτῷ, ἀλλὰ ἔχήσομεν σὰν αὐτῷ .

Contucto

of Christ speaking in me, Who towards you is not weak, 4 but is "strong in you (for though He was crucified through weakness, yet He liveth "through the power of God: for we also are weak in Him, but we shall live "together with Him speaks in me.' δοιμή is either 'trial' or, as here, 'a proof after trial.' The transition between the two meanings is seen in the connexion of δοιμάζετε and άδεκμοι in verse 5, as between probo, probus, and reprobus in Latin.

δε tie ὑyūς οἰκ ἀσθενεῖ ἀλλὰ čυνετῖ ἰν ὑχίν, 'For he in weak, but strong in avenging upon you by supernatural punishments the sins you have committed.' The change from τἰς ὑχῶς to ἰν ὑχῖν appears at first saght to be emphatic, but is sight to be emphatic, but is one cours in the Aposelle's style.
Compare x. 1, rarere'c ἐν ὑχῖν,
Sappo μές ὑχίν.
Sappo μές ὑχίν.

In the words owe dofterer, 'He is not weak,' he refers back to xii. 9, 'strength is perfected in weakness.' 'Though in one sense He is weak, in another sense He is strong;' and this he expands in the next verse.

4. cai yép. 'for in fact, if He was crucifed in conformity with His mortal weakness, it follows in like manner that he lives in conformity with the Divine power which raised him from the dead.' He died because He was man: He rose again, and lives, because He was the Son of God. Ambronisster and Pelagius seem to have read it adortaint spior, as they quote the passage, 'cx infirmitate mostral.' But no extant MS. give this reading. With regard to His death, compare Phil. ii. 8, 'being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became boddient unto death, even the death of the cross;' with regard to His resurrection, Rom. 1. 4,

"who is strong in you," as well as an expansion and proof of the clause immediately preceding. 'The proof that Christ is strong in you, that He still lives and acts, is that I am weak and share His weakness, yet I also in my dealings with you shall share His life by the same Divine power.' Comp. John xiv. 19, 'because I live, you shall live also: ' Rom. v. 10, 'we shall be saved by his life.' In this case the 'life' thus imparted is spoken of as specially manifested in the supernatural visitation of the sins of the Corinthian Church. For the repetition of sai yap compare the repetition of µh in xii. 22, and of γάρ in xiii, 8, 9, έκ δυνάμεως θεοῦ εἰς ὑμάς), εἰαυτοὺς περράζετε εἰ ἐστε ἐν τῆ πίστε, ἐαυτοὺς δοκιμάζετε 'ἢ οὐκ ἐπιγνωώσκετε ἐαυτούς, ὅτι Ἰτροῦς χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῶν [ἐστῶν]; εἰ μή τι ἀδόκιμοὶ ἐστε. 'ἐλπίζω δὲ ὅτι γνώσκετθε ὅτι ἡμές οὐκ ἐσμὲν ἀδόκιμοι. ''ἐγχόμεθα δὲ πρὸς τὸν θεὸν μή

* εδχομαι

5 through the power of God toward you), examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith, prove your own selves: "or know ye not your own selves," that Jesus Christ is in 6 you? except ye be 'unapproved. But I trust that ye shall 'know that ree are not 'unapproved. Now 'we pray to God

5. invroic sup(ξere it isri it breaks off abruptly with his argument, and appeals at once to their own experience: 'I have spoken of my power over you. But after all, it is yourselees that you ought to examine; it is yourselees that you ought to examine; it is yourselees that you ought not not prove; your own faith, and your own consciousness of the presence of Clariza mongst you, is the best of Christ amongst you, is the best proof of his being in me.' Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 2, 'the seal of my apostleship are ye in the Lord;' 2 Cor. i. 24, 'by faith ye stand;' iii. 2, 've are our enistle.'

if one frequency is unwelled for frame, and frequency frame, grant your own selves, and perceive that Jesus Christ is amongst your own selves, and perceive that Jesus Christ is amongst you tune through my preaching? I uses the same expression is viping, for Christ's presence in this for Christ's presence in himself. The two were in his view identical.

I phy rubbecquel term, and He is in you, unless you have no proof of His Spirit to show.' For this sense of deceper, comp. I cer. ix. 27, like the Latin 're-probus,' which is the Vulg. translation of it. At the same time, it has the tinge of an active sense, from δοιμάζετε, 'unless you are wholly without discernment,' as in ἀδεκιρω νοῦν in Rom. i. 28. Comp. a similar appeal to the consciousness of spiritual gifts in Gal. iii. 2, 'received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?'

εὶ μή τι, 'unless I can suppose that you are.' For this form of εὶ μή see 1 Cor. vii. 5.

6. thrife it on ywareth fir, further when the proper of the process sentence is broken in upon by the thought which the last sentence is 1 pt r. discussed for the things of the proof of Christ's presence, I trust that you will know when I come, that I at least am not without this proof. In classical Greek the proof. In classical Greek the cleare by yt, or some such particle, affixed to jurie.

7. This slight interruption of bitterness is immediately modified by the edness of the gentleness of the next Apostle.

sentence. The Apostle's feeling is the reverse of that rebuked in the Prophet Jonah, when (iv. 1) he was 'angry' 'and displeased exceedingly' because his prophecy was frustrated by the repentance and reποιήσαι ὑμάς κακὸν μηθόν, οἰχ τοι ἡμεῖς δόκιμοι φακόμεν, ἀλλ. Ἰτα ὑμεῖς το καλον ποιήτε, ἡμεῖς δὶ ὡς ἀδόκιμοι ὄμεν. "οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθά τι κατὰ τῆς ἀληθεί ας, ἀλλ' ὑπὰρ τῆς ἀληθείας. "χαίρομεν γὰρ ὅταν ἡμεῖς ἀσθούρμεν, ὑμεῖς δὰ δυνατοί ἦτε τοῦτο 'καὶ εὐχόμεθα τὴν

- 6è maí,

that ye do no evil, not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is 'good, though we be as s'unapproved. For we 'cannot do anything' against the truth, s'but for the truth. For we 'rejoice when we are weak, and ye are strong: 'this also we 'pray, even your perfect

He thus uses ἀδόκιμος, in two different senses. In one sense, he would not be 'without proof;' if the Corinthians were reformed; because their reformation would be his best proof of Apostleship. In another sense, he would be 'without proof; ' because he would then lose the opportunity of displaying his power. Thus to the contrast in vi. 9, between the different phases of his character-' as deceivers, and yet true, as unknown and yet well known, as dying and behold we live,' he might have added, 'as without proof and yet as approved' (' ώς ἀδόκιμοι καὶ δόκιμοι'). The figurative sense of acortuoe is expressed by we.

His Apostleship, his happiness, his very salvation were nothing in his eyes, compared with the welfare of his converts. Comp. Rom. ix. 3, 'I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren.' It is the Christian expression of the wellknown sentiment, 'Perish my name, if only my cause survives.'

8. He gives the reason why every sign of Apostolical authority would disappear if they were reformed. For we have no strength at all against the truth, the reality of the Gospel, as proved and established in your lives. With truth against me, I can do nothing; with truth on yoide, I can do everything. δυνάμεθα refers back to δύναμες, δυνατί in Xiii. 3, 4.

9. He then gives a second reason, partly for the general clause in verse 7, partly for the dependent clause in verse 8, as in the repetition of ani yap in verse 4. 'And this powerlessness and weakness is what most delights me; for my delight is to be weak : my bodily presence may well be weak and contemptible, if only you are strong in faith." It is in fact the fulfilment of his prayer to Christ, as given in xii. 9, and the explanation of Christ's answer (xii. 10, 11). He would still remain weak and despised: but Christ's strength had appeared in the faith of the converts.

τούτο καὶ εὐχόμεθα, 'and this ύμῶν κατάρτισιν. 10 διὰ τοῦτο ταῦτα ἀπὼν γράφω, ἴνα παρὼν μὴ ἀποτόμως χρήσωμαι κατὰ τὴν ἐξουσίαν ἢν ὁ κύριος ἔδωκέν μοι εἰς οἰκοδομὴν καὶ οὐκ εἰς καθαίρεσιν.

11 Λοιπόν, άδελφοί, χαίρετε, καταρτίζεσθε, παρακαλείσθε, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονείτε, εἰρηνείνετε, καὶ ὁ θεὸς τῆς ἀγάπης καὶ εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ ὑμῶν, 12 ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν ἀγίψ φιλήματι. ἀσπάζονται ὑμῶς οὶ ἄγιοι πάντες.

* έδωκέ μοι δ Κύριος.

- 10 joining-together. Therefore 'being absent I write these things', lest being present I should use sharpness according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification and not to 'pulling down'.
- 11 Finally, brethren, "fare ye well', be "perfectly joined to-gether', be "comforted, be of one mind, live in peace, and 12 the God of love and peace will be with you. "Salute one another with a holy kiss. All the saints salute you.

subject of my joy is in fact what I pray for;' in allusion to εὐχόμεθα in verse 7.

τὴν ὑμῶν κατάρτισιν, 'namely, your restoration.' For καταρτίζω, see note on 1 Cor. i. 10. The substantive occurs nowhere else in the N. Test.

 In this verse he sums up the substance of the main argument of his address (x. 1—17, xii. 12—xiii. 10), recurring especially to the words of x. 8, εἰς pecially to the words of x. 8, εἰς οἰκοδομήν καὶ οὐκ εἰς καθαίρεστν. ἀποτόμως only occurs again, in the N. Test. in Tit. i. 13; ἀποτομία in Rom. xi. 22; 'harsh,'

'violent.'

After χρήσωμαι must be understood ὑμῖν, 'use you harsh-ly;' as in Esther i. 19, ix. 27

(LXX).

11. Here, then, the Epistle properly ends, and the salutations and farewells begin; still, however, slightly coloured by the preceding, as will appear by the repetition of words and thoughts already familiar to his readers.

Aoπόν is here in a state of transition, between the ancient and usual sense 'for the future.' and the modern Romaic sense 'therefore.' For a similar use of it see Acts xxvii. 20; 1 Cor. i. 16.

χαίρετε. 'The word unites a valediction, and a cheering hope; 'farewell,' and 'fare ye well,' as in Phil. iii. 1, iv. 4, and in the Greek announcement of victory, χαίρετε, χαίρομεν.

χαίρετε, χαίρομεν. καταρτίζεσθε, 'amend yourselves,' referring to κατάρτισιν in verse 9.

παρακαλεῖσθε, 'be comforted and exhorted.' The keynote of i. 1—11 is here repeated.

rò αὐτὸ φρονεῖτε, εἰρηνεύετε, 'have the same thoughts,' 'repress your factious spirit.' This sums up 1 Cor. i.—iv. 15, and refers back to 2 Cor. xii. 20.

cai δ 3teς... εστα μεθ ὑμῶν.
This depends on the two previous precepts. 'Have the same thoughts, and then the God of love will be with you' (referring back to 1 Cor. xiii.): 'be at 13 Ή γάρις τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἡ κοινωνία τοῦ ἀγίου πνεύματος μετά πάντων ນໍ່ແຜິນ.

· Add Aufe. Ποδε Κορινθίους δευτέρα έγράφη από Φιλίππων τῆς Μανεδυνίας, διά Τίτου και Λουκά.

The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all.

peace, and then the God of peace will be with you.' Comp. Luke x. 6, 'if the Son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it; if not, it shall return to you again. 12. For the forms of salutation, see note on 1 Cor. xvi. 20. 13. This benediction is the most complete of all Benediction, which occur in St. Paul's Epistles.

It differs from dogmatical statements of the doctrine of the Trinity, by beginning, not with the mention of God, but of Jesus Christ. First comes, as in all the benedictions of St. Paul, the 'favour' or 'pro-Favour of tection,' - the light Christ. of the countenance-(χάρις) of Christ. Comp. xii. 9, 'my grace (yapis) is sufficient. In this 'favour' is usually comprised the whole benediction of the Apostle. But here it is expanded into the two blessings which are included in Love of God. it. 'The Love of God' for man (h aγάπη τοῦ θεοῦ) is brought home to the human race by the favour and goodness (yang) of Christ. 'The joint participation in the pure and holy Spirit,' which that Love sheds abroad in our hearts, is the great gift (χάρις) which Christ left to Communion the whole body of believers. The 'faof the Holy Spirit.

your,' the 'benediction' of Christ, with which the Apostle always parts from his readers, is, he now finally assures them, the nearest approach of God to man, the nearest approach of man to God. It is no less, on the one hand, than the expression of the Creator's affection for His creatures; it is no less, on the other hand, than the union of the hearts and spirits of men with the Heart and Spirit of God.

And this blessing he invokes not on a few individuals, or on any one section of the Corinthian Church, but With all. expressly on every portion and every individual of those with whom, throughout these two Epistles, he had so earnestly and so variously argued and contended. As in the First, so in the Second Epistle, but still more emphatically, as being here his very last words, his prayer was, that this happiness might be with them all' (usrà marrur ύμῶr). The subscription rests on the authority (with some alight variations) of Subscription. E. (?) J. K. Svr. Cont.

The place 'Philippi' is not con-tradicted by the Epistle. The mention of Titus is founded on viii. 16, the mention of Luke (and in some few cursive MSS. of Barnabas) on conjectural explanations of viii. 18, 22.

PARAPHRASE OF CHAP, XII, 11-XIII, 13,

And now my folly is over. That I should have indulged in it, is your fault, not mine; for you knew better than others how little I needed any such commendation for myself; for amongst you were wrought by me the signs of an Apostle, equal to those of the very greatest Apostle.

Yet I am wrong, you will soy. There is one injustice which I have done you. Whilst others, whilst my own companious, were supported by you, I alone have remained independent. But this is an injustice which I must continue to commit. Look at my affection for you. This is the third time I am ready to come; and sow, as before, I am determined still not to ask your support. It is not your money, but yourselect that I seeh. I am a father to you, and must act as a father, in not merely spending money, but in being myself spent and squandered for your sakes; even although for this love I receive from you hotred.

But no, you will say, this is no real proof of my lose. Although I personally received nothing from you, I was canning enough to get your money through the means of my emissaries. Can you really believe this? Did I gain anything from you through those men? When Thus and his companion were charged by me to go to you, did Thus gain anything from you? Was not our path guided by the same Spirit, did see not step in the same footmarks? was not the same Divine Spirit around our steps? were not the footmarks those of our common Matter?

You think, perhaps, that all through the Epistle I have been making my defence as if you were my judges. No: God alone is my Judge, Christ alone is my Cause. Yet, coper as I am to vindicate my independence, the real purpose of saying all that I say bit that I say bit you say in your faith. There is a fear constantly before me, lest you should be turned from me, lest thould be driven to severify, lest Corinth knould be a scene of fuction, of calumny, of disorder; lest when I come I should find all my labour misspent, and have to mourn over the impenience of those who have failed in the suss of heinous sensuality.

Once, twice, thrice, as in the Mosaic Law of the three witnesses : by my first visit-by this Epistle, as though I had accomplished my second visit-by the third visit, which I now hope to accomplish-I warn you that I shall not spare my power when I come. You are always seeking for a proof of my Apostleship; you shall have it. For Christ who speaks in me, though in the weakness of humanity He died the shameful death of the cross, in the strength of God He lives and acts still; and in Him, weak and poor as I seem to be, I shall still live and act towards you. But why do I speak of myself? You vourselves my converts are the best witnesses of my Apostolical power, and long may you be so! If, indeed, you should have lost this best proof of my Apostleship in the reformation of your own lives, then indeed you shall have the proof in my severity. But my earnest prayer is that there may be no occasion for it. May my power and the proof of it perish if you prove that you do not need it! Against a true and blameless life the highest Apostolical power is powerless; and if you have this power of truth and goodness, I am well content to part with mine. It is to draw you to a sense of this that I write this whole Epistle, in the hopes that my Apostolical authority may be turned to its fitting purpose of building up, not of pulling down.

And now, in conclusion, Farwell and fare ye well. Reform yourselves. Be comforted and instructed by all I have said. Restore harmony and peace; and then the God of love and of peace shall dwell with you. Salute each other by the sacred kiss of Christian brotherhood. Receive the salutations of all Christians here. The goodness and favour of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is no less than the love of God Himself towards you, and your joint union in the Spirit of Holiness, be with you all.

THE EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS

IN RELATION TO

THE GOSPEL HISTORY.

"Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?"-1 Cor. ix. 1.

The two Epistles to the Corinthians, as has been already observed, are eminently historical; and in the course Historical of the remarks made upon them, it has been my claracter object to draw out as clearly as possible every illustration or testimony which they afford to the history of the early Church. But there is another kindred question which is so important in itself, that though partially touched upon in the several passages which bear upon it, it may yet not be out of place at the close of these Epistles to consider it as a whole

The question which the Apostle asked of his Judaizing opponents, and which his Judaizing opponents asked of him, 'Have I not seen Jeaus Christ our Lord?'—is one which in our days has often been asked, in a wider sense than that in which the words were used by the Apostle or his adversaries. 'Is the representation of Christ in the Epistles the Torie relasance as the representation of Christ in the Gospels? One to the What is the evidence, direct or indirect, furnished Gospels by St. Paul to the facts of the Gospel history? If the Gospels bad perished, could we from the Epistles form an image of Christ, like to that which the Gospels present? Can we discover between the Epistles and the Gospels any such coincidences and resemblance as Paley discovered between the Epistles and the Gospels and such coincidences and resemblance as Paley discovered between the Epistles and the Gospel of the Evangelical Apostle different from the "Gospel" of the Evangelistic narratives?'

Such an inquiry has been started sometimes in doubt, sometimes in perplexity. It is suggested partly by the nature of the case, by that attitude of separation and independent action which St. Paul took apart from the other Apostles, and which, even irrespectively of his writings, awakened in the minds of his opponents the suspicion that, 'he had not seen the Lord Jesus,' that he was not truly an 'Apostle of Christ,' and that therefore, 'he taught things contrary to Christ's teaching.' It is suggested also by the attempts which in latter times have been made, both by those without and by those within the outward pale of Christianity, to widen the breach between the teaching of the Epistles and the Gospels; both by those who have been anxious to show that the Christian faith ought to be sought in 'not Paul but Jesus;' and by those who believe and profess that 'the Gospel' is contained, not in the Evangelical History, but in the Pauline Epistles.

From many points of view, and to many minds, questions like those will seem superfluous or unimportant. But, touching as they do on various instructive subjects, and awakening in some quarters a peculiar interest, they may well demand a consideration here. The two Epistles to Corinth are those from which an answer may most readily be obtained; both because they contain all or almost all of the most important allusions to the subject of the Gospel history, and also because they belong to the earliest, as well as the most undisputed, portion of the Apostolical writings. At the same time it will not interfere with the precision or unity of the inquiry, if it includes such illustrations as may be furnished by the other Epistles also.

1. The coincidences to which we most naturally turn, are

I. Albaious those which relate to isolated sayings of Christ. to sayings of Christ. This (partly for reasons which will be stated here) it he least satisfactory part of the inquiry. It cannot be denied that they are few and scanty, and that, in these few, there is in no case an exact correspondence with the existing narratives.

There are in St. Paul's Epistles only two occasions on which I co., our Lord's authority is directly quoted. In I Cor. vii. 10, vii. 10, when speaking of marriage, the Apostle refers to a command of the Lord, as distinct from a command of his own, and as the command he gives the words, 'tet not the wife depart from her I cor. husband.' In I Cor. ix. 14, when speaking of the right of the ix. 14. Apostles to receive a maintenance from those whom they taught, he says, 'even so the Lord "appointed" that they which "proclaim" the Gospel should live of the Gospel.' In neither case are the exact words of the existing records quoted; but we can hardly doubt that he refers in one case to the prohibition, 'whosever shall put away his wife . . . causeth her to commit adultery' (Matt. v. 32; Mark x. 11; Luke xiv. 18); in the other, to the command to the Twelve and the Seventy, 'Carry neither purse nor scrip nor shoes, . . . for the labourer is worthy of his hire' (Luke x. 4, 7; Matt. x. 9, 10).

1 See the Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 1; the Second Epistle to the Corin2 Cor. xii. 1—6. Introduction to thians, pp. 352, 3.

To these we may add, the quotation in the Acts of the Apostles (xx. 35), in his speech to the Ephesian elders: 'Re- Acts member the words of the Lord Jesus, how He soid, 'wit is more xx. 35. blessed to give than to receive.'' It is also to be observed, that in closing the discussion on the conduct of Christian assemblies (I Cor. xiv. 37), he says: 'if any one think himself to be a 1 cor. prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that 'xiv. 31. I write unto you are a commandment of the Lord' (cupiow brewly). The form of expression seems to imply that here, as in vii. 10, he is referring to some distinct regulation of Christ, which he was endeavouring to follow out. But if so, this, like the saving auoted in Acts xx. 35 is lost.

Four other passages may be mentioned which, not from any distinct reference on the part of the Apostle, but from their likeness of expression, may seem to have been derived from the circle of our Lord's teaching. (1) 'Being reviled we bless' (λοιδορούμενοι εὐλογοῦμεν, 1 Cor. iv. 12), may have some rela- 1 Cor. tion to Luke vi. 28, 'bless them that curse you' (εὐλογεῖτε iv. 12, τους καταρωμένους). (2) 'Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world' (1 Cor. vi. 2), may refer to Luke xxii. 30, 1 Cor. Matt. xix. 28, 'ye shall sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes vi. 2. of Israel.' (3) In the command that the woman is to 'attend on the Lord without distraction' (εὐπάρεδρον . . . ἀπερισπάστως, 1 Cor. vii. 35), the two emphatic words are substan- 1 Cor. tially the same 1 as are employed in the narrative containing the vii. 35. commendation of Mary-'Mary sitting . . . Martha cumbered' (παρακαθίσασα . . . περιεσπάτο, Luke x. 39, 40). (4) In 1 Cor. xiii, 2, 'faith, so that I could remove mountains,' may be 1 Cor. an allusion to Matt. xvii. 20, 'if ye have faith, ye shall say xiii. 2. unto this mountain, remove hence.' These instances, however, are too doubtful to serve as the foundation of an argument.

But with respect to all three, remarks may be made more or less important: First, their want of exact agreement with the words of the Gospel narrative implies (what indeed can hardly be doubted for other reasons) that at the time when the Epistles to Corinth were written, the Gospels in their present form were not yet in existence. Secondly, this same discrepancy of form, combined with an unquestionable likeness in spirit, agrees with the discrepancies of a similar kind which are actually found between the Gospel parratives; and, when contrasted with the total dissimilarity of such isolated savings as are ascribed to Christ by Irenæus, show that the atmosphere, so to speak, of the Gospel History extended beyond the limits of its actual existing records, and that within that atmosphere the Apostle was included. The Apostle, to whom we owe the preservation of the saying, 'it is more blessed to give than to receive,' has thereby become to us truly an 'Evangelist.' Thirdly, the manner in which the Apostle refers to these savings proves the undisputed claim which they have already established, not only in his own mind, but in that of the whole Church. He himself still argues and entreats 'as the scribes;' but he quotes the sentence of Christ, as that from which there was to be no appeal- as of one having authority.' 'Not I, but the Lord' (1 Cor. vii. 10), is the broad distinction drawn between his own suggestions respecting marriage and the principle which the Lord had laid down, and which accordingly is incorporated in three out of the four Gospels, and once in the discourse' especially designed to furnish the universal code of Christian morality. So, too, the command that the teachers of the Gospel were 'to live of the Gospel' (1 Cor. ix. 14), had received such entire and absolute acceptance, that it was turned by the Judaizing party into a universal and inflexible rule, admitting of no deviation, even for the sake of Christian love. Already the Lord's words had become the law of the Christian society; already they had been subjected to that process by which, as in later times so in this particular instance, the less enlightened disciples have severed the sacred text from the purpose to which it was originally applied, and sacrificed the spirit of the passage to a devout but mistaken observance of the letter. II. From the particular sayings, we turn to the II. Allusions

See note on 1 Cor. vii. 35.

II. Allusions to the acts of the life of Christ. These appear of Christ. These spear more frequently, though still not so generally as at first sight we should naturally expect.

To the earlier events it may be said that the allusions are

¹ Matt. v. 32; Mark x. 11; Luke xvi. 18.

next to none. 'Born (γενομένου) of the seed of David after the flesh' (Rom. i. 3), 'born of a woman' (in yuvauros)
The Nati-'born under the law' (ὑπὸ νόμον, Gal. iv. 4), are the only distinct references to the Nativity and its accompaniments. So far as they go, they illustrate the stress laid by the Evangelists on the lineage of David (Luke ii. 23; Matt. i. 1), on the announcement and manner of his birth (Luke ii. 4, Matt. i. 23), and on the ritual observances which immediately followed (Luke ii, 21-24). But this is all; and perhaps the coincidence of silence between the Apostle and the two Evangelists, who equally with himself omit these earlier events, is more remarkable than the slight confirmation of the two who record them. The likeness to St. Mark and St. John in this respect may, if we consider it, be as instructive as the unlikeness to St. Luke and St. Matthew.

Rom Gal iv. 4.

Neither is there any detailed allusion to the ministry or miracles of Christ. To the miracles, indeed, there is none, unless it be granted that in the expression, 'Ye can-The minisnot partake of the Lord's table, and the table of try and devils' (δαιμονίων, 1 Cor. x. 21), the peculiar stress miracles. laid on that word is deepened by the recollection that He x. 21. whose table they thus profaned had so long and often cast out the very 'demons' with which they now brought themselves into contact. To the general manner, however, of our Lord's mode of life, there is one strong testimony which agrees perfeetly both with the fact and the spirit of the Gospel narrative-2 Cor. viii. 9, 'for your sakes He became poor' (ἐπτώ- 2 Cor. yeurs). To this we must add the corresponding though somewhat more general expression, in Phil. ii. 7: 'He took upon Phil Him the form of a slave (μορφήν δούλου). It is possible, per- ii. 7. haps probable from the context, that in both these passages the Apostle may have meant generally the abnegation of more than earthly wealth and power, the assumption of more than earthly poverty and humiliation. But the context shows also, that poverty in the one case, and lowliness of life in the other, each in its usual sense, were the special thoughts in the Apostle's mind; and in the case of 'poverty' the word ἐπτώχευσε can signify nothing less than that He led a life not only of need and want, but of houseless wandcring and distress, It points exactly to that state implied rather than expressly described in the Gosnels, in which 'He had not where to lay His head; and in which He persevered when He was rich;

1 Cor.

xv. 8.

that is, when He might have had the 'kingdom of Judea.' 'the kingdoms of the world,' and 'twelve legions of angels' to defend Him.

But it is in the closing scenes of our Lord's life that the Apostle's allusions centre. In this respect, his prac-The Pas-tice is confirmed by the outward form of the four Gospels, which unite in this portion of the history and in this portion only. This concentration, however caused, is the same both in the Evangelists and in the Apostle. His 'Gospel,' it would seem, in his narrative of the events of the Evangelical history, began with the sufferings of Christ. delivered to you first of all, how that Christ died for our sins' (1 Cor. xv. 8). And the main subject of his preaching in 1 Cor. Corinth and in Galatia was the Crucifixion of Christ, not mercly the fact of His death, but the horror and shame of the manner of His death-'the Cross of Christ' (1 Cor. i. 17, 18): 17, 18, 'Christ crucified' (ii. 23); even vividly, and if one may so ii. 23. say, graphically portrayed before their eyes; 'Jesus Christ evidently set forth ('as in a picture,' προεγράφη) crucified amongst them' (Gal. iii. 1). Gal.

The distinct allusions to His sufferings are few, but precise: iii. 1. for the most part entirely agreeing with the Gospel narratives, and implying more than is actually expressed. There are two not contained in these Epistles, but certainly within the limits of the teaching of the Apostle. One is the allusion to the agony in the garden, in Heb. v. 7, 'In the days of His flesh, Heb. v. 7. when He had offered up prayers and supplications and strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared.' That the account is drawn from a source independent of the four Gospels is clear, from the mention of tears, which on that occasion nowhere occurs in the Gospel narratives. But the general tendency is precisely similar. The other is the allusion in 1 Tim. vi. 13 to vi. 13. 'the good confession' which Christ Jesus 'witnessed before Pontius Pilate.' This is the more remarkable because, although it may be sufficiently explained by the answer, 'thou savest,' in Matt. xxvii. 11, yet it points much more naturally to the long and solemn interview, peculiar to the narrative of St. John (xviii, 28--xix, 12), But the most definite and exact agreement of the Apostle's writings with the Gospel narratives is that which in 1 Cor. xi. 1 Cor. zi. 23 22-26 contains the earliest written account of the institution of the Lord's Supper. It is needless to point out in detail what has already been shown in the notes The Lord's on that passage. But it is important to observe how Supper, much it implies as to the Apostle's knowledge of the whole story. Not only are the particulars of this transaction told in almost the same words—the evening meal, the night of the betrayal, the Paschal loaf, the Paschal volt, the solemn institution—but the form of words is such as was evidently part of a fixed and regular narrative; the whole history of the Passion must have been known to St. Paul, and by him told in detail to the Corinthians; and, if so, we may fairly conclude that many other incidents of the sacred story must have been related to them, no less than this which, but for the peculiar confusions of the Corinthian Church, would have remained unrecorded.

The Resurrection, like the Death, of Christ is the subject of allusions too numcrous to be recounted. But here, The Resuras in the case of the Death, we have one passage which shows us that not merely the bare fact was stated, but also its accompanying circumstances. In 1 Cor. 1 Cor. xv. 4-7 we have the account of five appearances after the Resurrection, besides the one to himself. The general character of the appearances remarkably agrees with that in the Gospel parratives. They are all spoken of as separate and transient climpses, rather than a continuous and abiding intercourse. Some of the instances given are identical in both. Such are the appearances to the two collective meetings of the Apostles. The appearances to Peter, to the five hundred, and to James, are distinct from those in the Gospel narrative; and it may be remarked that this variation itself agrees with the discrepancies and obscurities which characterise that portion of the Gospel narrative. The appearance to James in particular, agreeing as it does with the account of a rejected Gospel (that according to the Hebrews), and not with those of the canonical Gospels, indicates an independent source for the Apostle's statement. The appearance to Peter is also to be noticed especially, as an example of an incident to which there is an allusion in the Gospel narrative,1 which here only receives its explanation. The Apostle's mention of the appearance to the five hundred exemplifies in relation to the Gospel narratives, what is often to be observed in relation to the Acts;

¹ Luke xxiv. 34.

6, iv. 8.

1 Tim. iii. 16. Heb.

vii. 20, iv. 14.

ix. 24.

namely, that he, writing nearer the time, makes a fuller state ment of the miraculous or wonderful than is to be found in the later accounts; the reverse of what is usually supposed to take place in fictitious narratives.

The prominence given to the burial of Christ and its connexion with the resurrection, exactly agrees with the Gospel narratives, especially those of St. Luke and St. John.

The final result of the comparison thus shows that thirty years after the event, there must have existed a belief in the main outline of the Gospel story of the Resurrection, much as we have it now: and also that there was, beside the four accounts preserved in the Gospels, a fifth, although in substance the same narrative, yet different in form, and from an independent source; there are still the same lesser discrepancies between the Apostle and the Evangelists, as between the several Evangelists themselves.

In the accounts of the Ascension there is a remarkable parallel between the Epistles and the Gospels. In the early Epistles of St. Paul, including those to Corinth, as The Ascenin the Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Mark 1, and St. John, the Ascension is omitted, as though it were a mere accompaniment of the Resurrection rather than a distinct event in itself. But in the later Epistles, as in the Gospel of St. Luke and the Acts, it is prominently brought forward. Eph. i. 'Set at God's right hand . . . in heavenly places . . . ascended up on high '(Eph. i. 20, ii. 6, iv. 8), 'received up into glory' (1 Tim. iii. 16), 'entered within the veil' and 'into Heaven' (Heb. vii. 20, iv. 14, ix. 24). The coincidence is more easily stated than explained. Yet it may be fairly ascribed to the fact that the Ascension (as in Acts i. 9-11) was regarded as part rather of the life of the Church (of which these later Epistles treat) than of Christ Himself.

In concluding these detailed references to the Gospel History, it may be observed that they almost all, so far as they refer to one Gospel narrative rather than another, The allnagree with that of St. Luke. The exceptions are sions chiefly agree with the doubtful allusions to the interview recorded by St. Luke. St. John, in 1 Tim. vi. 13; to the saying recorded by St. Matthew, in 1 Cor. xiii. 4; and the agreement with St. John and St. Mark, rather than with St. Luke, in omission of distinct references to our Lord's early history and (as just observed) to the Ascension. All the rest, even to work and phrases, have a relation to St. Luke's Gospel so intimate, as to require some explanation; and there is no reason why we should not adopt the account anciently received, that the author or compiler of that Gospel was the companion of the Anostle.

The account in Mark xvi. 9-20 is of later insertion.

These are the main facts which are recorded from the Gospel History. Perhaps they will not seem many; yet, so fast they go, they are not to be despised. From them a story might be constructed, which would not be at variance,—which in all essential points would be in unison,—with the Gospel narrative.

III. But the impression of this unison will be much confirmed if from particular sayings or facts we pass to the general character of Christ as described in these Epistles.

(1) It may be convenient, in the first instance, to recall those passages which speak of our Lord in the most general manner; 10.00 as 1 Cor. i, 30, which tells us that 'He was made if the great wisdom unto us, and righteousness, and holiness, mad redemption; '1 Cor. viii. 6, which speaks of 'the 'viii. 6 and redemption; '1 Cor. viii. 6, which speaks of 'the 'viii. 6 une Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by 100 milm; '1 Cor. xv. 45, in which He is called 'the Scool av. 45.

Adam; '2 Cor. v. 10, 19, in which He is spoken of as the '20cc' under of all the winder of the control of the contro world unto Himself by Him. Other passages to the same effect might be multiplied, but these will suffice.

We are so familiar with the sound of these words, and so much accustomed to apply them to other purposes, that we rarely think of the vastness and complexity, and, at the same time, freshness and newness of the ideas employed in their first application to an actual individual Man. Let us imagine ourselves hearing them for the first time, perceiving that they were uttered by one who had the deepest and most sober conviction of their truth, perceiving, also, that they were spoken, not of some remote or ideal character, but of One who had lived and died during the youth or early manhood of him who so spoke. Should we not ask, like the Psalmists and prophets of old, 'Who is this King of Glory? Who is this that cometh, travelling in the greatness of His strength?' With what angerness should we look at any direct account of the life and death, to which such passages referred, to see whether or not the one corresponded with the other!

Let us (for 'the sake of illustration) conceive ourselves, in the first instance, turning to the Apocryphal Gospels—the Gospels of the Infancy, of James, of Thomas, and of Nicodemus, from which (it is no imaginary case) was derived the only picture of our Lord's life known to the Arabian and Syrian tribes of the 7th century, in the time of Mahomet; and we should at once feel that, with the utterly trivial and childish fables of those narratives, the Apostle's representation had no connexion whatever. The Koran, wishing to speak with high respect of 'Jesus the Son of Mary,' contains a chapter devoted to the subject. The following is the speech which He is represented as uttering, to commend Himself to the Jews:—

"I come to you, accompanied by signs from the Lord. I shall make of clay the figure of a bird; I shall breath eynon it, and, by God's permission, the bird shall fly. I shall heal him that was born blind, and the leper; I shall, by God's permission, raise the dead. I will tell you what you have eaten, and what you have hid in your houses. All these facts shall be as signs to you, if you will believe. I come to confirm the Pentateuch, which you have received before me. I will permit to you the use of certain things which have been forbidden you. I come with signs from your Lord. Fear Him and obey me. It is my Lord and yours. Adoer Him; this is the right path.' 1

It may be that the Arabs to whom this picture of Christ was presented, could not have risen at the time to anything higher. But we cannot wonder that such a picture should have produced no deep impression on them, or have seemed inferior to the prophet who had himself risen up amongst them. And from seeing what might have been the image of Christ presented to us, we may form a livelier notion of that which has been presented to us.

From these Apocryphal Gospels let us suppose ourselves turning for the first time to those of the New Testament. No one, even though doubting the inferences which the Apostle draws, could doubt that the Christ there exhibited must have been He of whom he spoke. Even if the name were different, we should feel sure that the person must be the same. Here alone in that age, or any age, we should find a life and character which was truly the second beginning of humanity;

¹ Koran, iii. 43, 44.

here, if anywhere, we should recognise God speaking to man. In that life, if in any life, in those words and deeds, if in any words and deeds whatever, we should see the impersonation of wisdom, and righteounses, and holiness, and redemption. As the readers of the Prophets instinctively acknowledged that 'to Him bare all the Prophets witness,' so if we had up to this time been readers of the Epistles only, and now first become acquainted with the Gospel narratives, we should even thus far be constrained to say: 'We have found Him of whom "Paul in his Epistles wrote," Jesus of Nazareth, the son of 'Joseph.'

The Apostle's words, then, thus considered, may be regarded, on the one hand, as a striking testimony to the general truth of the Gospel narrative; on the other hand, as a striking prediction of what has since taken place. On the one hand, they presuppose that a character of extraordinary greatness had appeared in the world; and such a character, whatever else may be thought of it, we actually find in the Gospels. We feel that each justifies the other. The image of Christ in the Gospels will be by all confessed to approach more nearly to the description of the Second Adam, the new Founder of humanity, than any other appearance in human history; and if we ask what effect that life and death produced at the time of its appearance, we are met by these expressions of the Apostle. uttered, not as if by any effort, but as the spontaneous burst of his own heart, within one generation from the date of the events themselves. And as these expressions correspond with the past events to which they refer, so also do they correspond with the future to which they point. If the expression of 'the Second Adam,' was meant to characterise a great change in the history of the human race, we should expect to find such a change dating and emanating from the time when the Second Adam had appeared. Such a change we do in fact find, of which the beginning is crowned with the life of Christ, It is true that the great division of modern from ancient history does not commence till four centuries later; and it is undeniable that the influx of the Teutonic tribes at that time, had a most important influence in moulding the future destinies of the civilised world. But still the new life which survived the overthrow of the Empire had begun from the Christian era.

Christianity, with all that it has involved in the religion, the arts, the literature, the morals of Europe, beyond all dispute originated with Christ alone. The very dates which are now in use throughout the world are significant, though trivial, proofs of the justice of the Apostle's declaration, that Christ was the Second Man; that 'as in Adam all died, even so in Christ all were made alive.'

(2) Thus much would be true, even if nothing more precise were recorded. But every shade of this general character is, if one may so say, deepened by the Apostle's more special allusions; and, although perhaps without the help of the Gospel narratives we might miss the point of his expressions, yet with that help, the image of Christ comes out clearly, and we still see it to be no invention of the Apostle's magination, but the same historical definite character which is set before us in the Gospels.

1 Cor. (a) 'Christ Jesus was made unto us wisdom' (1 Cor. i. 30).

i. 30. , Col. ii. H 3. Eph. i. 17. P

'In Him were hid all the treasures of neisdom and knowledge' His wisdom. (Col. ii. 3). 'The Spirit of neisdom is given to us in the knowledge of Him' (Eph. i. 17). These expressions may be merely general phrases of reverence, but how nuch clearness do they gain when they are compared with the actual display of wisdom stored up in the living instructions of Christ! There is no special reference by the Apostles to any of the parables or discourses of the Gospels. But how completely do those 'things new and old' brought out of 'His treasure'! answer to this general description of His character!

'Wisdom' is not the attribute which a zealous convert would necessarily think of applying to the founder of his religion. It is so applied by the Apostle, and we see from the Gospels that his application of it cannot be questioned.

(b) He speaks of 'the truth of 'Christ' (Rom. xi. 10), 'the truth as it is in Jesus' (Eph. iv. 21), in both instances, His truth. as the context shows, the truthfulnest; and he dwells

7.21. His truth. as the context shows, the crustylaness? and ne dwells racterised all His life. 'In Him was not yea and nay,' but Cor. 'yea and Amm' (2 Cor. 1. 20).² It is at least a string illustration of these passages to remember what Christ again and arain says of Himself in St. John's Gospel, as having been born

See Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 22, 45;
 Matt. xiii. 52.
 Cor. v. 13-19.
 Matt. xiii. 52.
 See Notes on this passage.

into the world for the purpose of bearing witness to the truth, as being the Truth.\(^1\) The Apostle's words are a faithful celo of the solemn asseveration and ratification of truth which runs through all the Gospel discourses, \(^1\) Verily, verily, Amen, Amen, I say unto you.\(^1\)

I say unto you."

(c) The Apostle urges on his converts the freedom of the doctrine which he preached, its contrast to the narrowness and mystery and concealment of the Jewish law, and he tells them, that they must attain this freedom through 'the Spirit of the Lord,' that is, of Christ, and through contemplation of His likeness. We turn to the Gospels, and we find in their representation of Christ this very freedom of which the Apostle speaks exemplified in almost every page; the sacrifice of the letter to the spirit, the encouragement of openness and sincerity, there emphatically urged by precept and example, at once give an edge and a value to the Apostle's argument which else it would greatly want.

Gospel story.

(d) The Apostle expressly appeals to the history of Christ as an example of surrendering his own will for the sake of the scruples of others. 'We that are strong ought to His tolerabear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves . . . for even Christ pleased not Himself, but, as it is written, "the reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me "' (Rom. xv. 1, 3). 'Give none offence . . . Rom. even as I please all men . . . Be followers of me, even as I xv. 1, 3. am of Christ' (1 Cor. x. 32, 33, xi. 1). This peculiar aspect of x. 32, the true Christ-like character in the Gospel narrative depends 38, xi. more on general indications than on special instances. But the Anostle's appeal is fully justified, the more from the very indirectness of the application. We cannot overlook in our Lord's history His constant, though not universal, acquiescence in the forms of the Mosaic Law; the limits within which He restrained His own teaching, and that of His disciples; the many things which He withheld, because His disciples were not then able to bear them; the condescension to human weakness and narrowness which runs through the whole texture of the

(e) He beseeches his converts not to compel him to say or do anything which shall be inconsistent with 'the meekness

John viii. 32, xiv. 6, xviii. 37.
See Notes on 2 Cor. iii. 1, iv. 10.

and gentleness (πραθτην καὶ ἐπειδειεα) of Christ' (2 Cor. x. 1).

His gratie- These words are not the mere expressions of ideal ness. advartion; they recall definite traits of a living human person, traits which could not be said to be specially ex emplified in the Apostle himself, but which were exemplified to the full in the life of Him to whom the Apostle ascribes them.

(f) In many passages the Apostle speaks of Love. In Cor. xiii. 1—13 he describes it at length, 'It is a new virtue. His love. It is name first occurs in his Epistles. Yet he speaks of it as fixed, established, recognised. To what was this owing? To whom does he ascribe it? Emphatically, and repeatedly, he attributes it to Christ. 'The love of Christ,' 'The love of God in Christ.' Now in all the Gospels, the self-devoted, self-sacrificing energy for the good of others, which the word 'Love' (δρύππ) denotes, is the prevailing characteristic of the actions of Christ; and by St. John it is used even more emphatically and repeatedly than by St. Paul; so that, besides its general testimony to the truth of all the Gospel narratives, it specially serves to knit together in one the thoughts and words of St. Paul and of St. John.

(a) On one occasion only the Apostle gives us an instance not of what he had 'received' of Christ as on earth, but of His strength what had been revealed to him concerning Christ perfected in by Himself. In answer to his entreaty thrice offered up to Christ as to his still present, ever-living Friend, there had been borne in upon his soul, how we know not, a distinct message expressed, as at his conversion, in articulate words, 'My grace is sufficient for thee, my strength is perfected in 'weakness.' In the similar mode of revelation at the time of his conversion, 'Why persecutest thou Me?' 'I am Jesus whom thou persecutest,' the spirit of the whole expression is the same as that which in the Gospels represents Christ as merged in the person of the least of His disciples. So these words of Christ, reported by the Apostle himself in his Epistle. are an exact reflex of the union of Divine strength with human weakness which pervades the narrative of all the Gospels. There is the same combination of majesty and tenderness, the same tones of mingled rebuke and love that we know so well in the last conversations 3 by the Sea of Galilee, the same

¹ See Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. 13; 2

² See Notes on 2 Cor. xii. 1—6.

Cor. v. 14.

³ John xxi.

strength and virtue going forth to heal the troubled spirit, as of old to restore the sick and comfort the 'afflicted.

We have now gone through the enumeration of all the most important allusions to the facts of the Gospel history which St. Paul's Epistles contain. Yet, before we proceed, it may be well to pause for a moment, and reflect on the additional strength or liveliness which this enumeration may have given to our conceptions of the Gosnel history. It is not much, but, considering from whom these instances have been taken .-- from a source so near the time, most of them from writings whose genuineness has never been questioned by the severest criticism, -it is something if it may suggest to any one a steadier standing place and a firmer footing, of however narrow limits, amidst the doubts or speculations which surround him. Nor is it wholly unprofitable to have approached from another than the usual point of view the several features of our Lord's life and character just enumerated,-to dwell on the Apostolic testimony rendered, one by one, to the several acts and words, still more to the several traits, most of all to the collective effect of the Character, which we usually gather only from the Gospels. His severe purity of word and deed,-His tender care for even the temporal wants of His disciples,-the institution of a solemn parting pledge of communion with Himself and with each other,-the hope of a better life which He has opened to us, amidst the sorrows and desolations of the world .- His steadfastness and calmness amidst our levity and littleness,-His free and wide sympathy amidst our prejudice and narrowness,-His self-denying poverty,-His gentleness and mildness amidst our readiness to offer and resent injuries. -His love to mankind,-His incommunicable greatness and (so to speak) elevation above the influence of time and fate,all this, at least in general outline, we should have, even if nothing else were left to us of the New Testament but the passages which have just been quoted from the Epistles. It may still, however, be said that these indications of the Apostie's knowledge of the Gospel history are less Gasses of than we might fairly expect; and we may still be the Apoincincid to ask why, when there are so many resistant management of the semblances, there are not more? why, if he knew so much as those resemblances imply, he yet says so little?

¹ Luke vi. 19, viii. 46.

It is impossible to answer this fully within the limits here prescribed. But some suggestions may be made, which, even if they do not entirely meet the case, may yet be sufficiently important to deserve consideration.

I. It must be remarked that the representation of the life,
The life of belonged to the oral, and not the written, teaching of the Apostle. The Gospels themselves have every
of the Apostle. The Gospels themselves have every
of the Apostle. The Gospels themselves have every appearance of having grown up out of alcommuteaching.

which must have been employed by the Apostle substantially for the same kind of instruction as that to which it is applied in the titles of the histories of our Lord's life, is by him usually, if not always, used in reference, not to what he is actually communicating in his Epistles, but to what he had already communicated to his converts when present.1 This supposition is confirmed by the fact that the most express quotation of a distinct saying of Christ occurs, not in a letter of the Apostle, but in the eminently characteristic speech to the Ephesian elders (Acts xx. 18-35), and that in the two passages in the Epistles to the Corinthians, where he most clearly refers to what he had 'delivered' to them whilst he was with them (1 Cor. xi. 23-26, xv. 3-7), it is clear that his instructions turned, not merely on the general truths of the Christian Faith, but on the detailed accounts of the Last Supper, and of the Resurrection. Had other subjects equally appropriate in the Gospel history been required for his special purpose, there seems no reason why he should not equally have referred to these also, as communicated by him during his stay at Corinth. His oral teaching-that is to say, his first communication with his converts-would naturally touch on those subjects in which all believers took a common interest. The instances of that teaching, in other words, the everlasting principles of the Gospel are contained, not in tradition, nor yet (except through these general allusions) in his own writings. but in the Four Gospels. His subsequent teaching in the Epistles would naturally relate more to his peculiar missionwould turn more on special occasions-would embody more of his own personal and individual mind. 'I, not the Lord.' And in ancient times, even more than in our own, in sacred authors no less than classical, we must take into account the effect of the entire absorption of the writer in his immediate subject, to the exclusion of persons and events of the utmost importance immediately beyond. Who would infer from the history of Thucydides the existence of his contemporary Socrates? How different, again, is the Socrates of Xenophon from the Socrates of Plato! Except so far as the great truth of the admission of the Gentiles was, in a certain sense, what he occasionally calls it, 'his own' peculiar 'Gospel,' he had already 'preached the Gospel' to his converts before he began his Epistles to them. In the Epistles he was not employed in 'laying the foundation' (that was laid once for all in 'Jesus Christ,' 1 Cor. iii, 10), but in 'building up,' 'strengthening,' exhorting,' settling.' In one instance the Gospel and the Epistle of an Apostle are both preserved to us. No one can doubt that the Gospel of St. John and the Third Epistle of St. John are intended as accompaniments to each other; and that the Gospel was intended by its author as the more important of the two. Yet, had the Gospel been lost, how little could we have inferred its contents (in detail) from the Epistle!

¹ See Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 1-10.

² 1 Cor. vii. 12.

II. But, further, the Apostle in his individual dealings with his converts was swayed by a principle which, though The spirit implied throughout his Epistles, is nowhere so strongly tual chaexpressed as in these two. When called to reply racter of the Apoto his Jewish opponents, who prided themselves stle's on their outward connexion with Christ, as He-teaching. brows, as Israelites, as Ministers of Christ, as Apostles of Christ, as specially belonging to Christ (2 Cor. v. 12, x. 7, xi. 22, 13), when taunted by them with the very charge which, in a somewhat altered form, we are now considering, that he 'had not seen Jesus Christ our Lord' (1 Cor. ix. 1), his reply is to a certain extent a concession of the fact, or rather an assertion of the principle, by which he desired to confront any such accusations. With the strongest sense of freedom from all personal and local ties, with the deepest consciousness that from the moment of his conversion all his past life had vanished far away into the distance, he answers, Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet henceforth know we Him no more' (2 Cor. v. 16). Startling as this declaration is, and called forth by a special occasion, it yet involved a general truth. It is the same profound instinct or feeling which penetrated, more or less, the whole Apostolical, and even the succeeding, age with regard to our Lord's earthly course. It is the same feeling which appears in the absence of local or personal traditions; no authentic or even pretended likeness of Christ has been handed down from the first century; the very site of his dwelling-place at Capernaum has been entirely obliterated from human memory; the very notion of seeking for relics of His life and death, though afterwards so abundant, did not begin till the age of Constantine. It is the same feeling which is perpetuated in the fact that our name of 'Christian' is taken, not from the man 'Jesus,' but from the Lord 'Christ,' It is the same feeling which, in the Gospel narratives themselves, is expressed in the almost entire absence of precision as to time and place-in the emphatic separation of our Lord from His kinsmen after the flesh, even from His mother herself-in His own solemn warning, 'What, and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where He was before: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life. It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing,' And this is the more observable when contrasted with the Apocryphal Gospels, which do to a great extent condescend to the natural or Judaic tendency, which the Gospels of the New Testament thus silently rebuke. There we find a 'Gospel of the Infancy,' filled with the fleshly marvels that delighted afterwards the childish minds of the Bedouin Arabs: there first are mentioned the local traditions of the scene of the Annunciation, of the Nativity, of the abode in Egypt; there is to be found the story, on which so great a superstructure has been built in later ages, of the parents and birth of her whom the Gospel history calls 'blessed,' but studiously conceals from view.1

The Apostle's reserve no doubt was strengthened by his antagonism with his Jewish opponents; but the principle on which he acted is applicable to all times. It explains in what sense our Lord's life is an example, and in what sense it is not. That life is not, nor ever could be, an example to be literally and exactly copied. It has been so understood, on the one hand, even by such holy men as Francis of Assisi, who thought that the true 'Imitation of Christ' was to produce a facsimile of all its outward circumstances in his own person. It has been so understood, on the other hand, by some in our own day, who have attacked it on the express ground that it could not, without impropriety, be literally re-enacted by any ordinary person in England in the nineteenth century. But it is not an example in detail; and those who try to make it so, whether in defence or in attack, are but neglecting the warning which Bacon so beautifully gives on the story of the rich young man in the Gospels: 'Beware how in making the portraiture thou breakest the pattern.'1 In this sense, the Christian Church, as well as the Apostle, ought to 'know Christ henceforth no more according to the flesh.' All such considerations ought to be swallowed up in the overwhelming sense of the moral and spiritual state in which we stand towards Him. In this sense (if we may say so) He is more truly to us the Son of God than he is the Son of Man. His life is our example, not in its outward acts, but in the spirit, the atmosphere which it breathes-in the ideal which it sets before us-in the principles, the motives, the object with which it supplies us.

¹ See 'Evangelia Apocrypha' (ed. Tischendorf), pp. 1-11, 68, 79-81, 184, 191-201.

III. This brings us to yet one more reason why St. Paul's Epistles contain no further details of our Lord's ministry. It was because they were to him, and to his converts, superseded by an evidence to himself, and to them. Clinist in the far more convincing than any particular proofs or Apostle's facts could have for them—the evidence of his own writings.

constant communion with Him in whom he lived, and moved, and had his being. He had, no doubt, his own peculiarities of character, his own especial call to the Gestlies. These gave to the Epistles a character of their own, which will always distinguish them from the Gospels. But still the spirit which pervaded both alike was (to use his own words, often and othen repeated) of Christ, and 'in Christ.' 'The life that he lived in the flesh, he lived in the flesh of the Son of God, who died and gave Himself for him; 'and this 'faith,' on which he dwells with an almost exclusive reverence, is not, it must be remembered, faith in any lone part or point of Christ work, but in the whole. 'Faith in His blood,' are expressions which, though employed in later times, and, like other scholastio or theological terms, sometimes justly employed, as summaries of the Apostle's statements, vet are, in no instance, his own statements of his own belief or feeling. Measured by the modern requirement which demands these precise forms of speech from the lips of all believers, the Apostle no less than the Evangelists will be found wanting. The one grand expression, in which his whole mind finds vent, is simply 'the faith of Christ.' It is, as it were, his second conscience; and, as men do not minutely analyse the constituent elements of conscience, so neither did he care minutely to describe or bring forward the several elements which made up the character and work of his Master. And, though these elements are distinctly set forth in the Gospels, yet the Gospels agree even here with the Epistles, in that they, like the Epistles, put forward not any one part, but the complex whole, as the object of adoration and faith. The language of our Lord in the Gospels, like that of St. Paul regarding Him in the Epistles, is (not 'Believe in My miracles,' 'Believe in My death,' 'Believe in My resurrection,' but) ' Believe in Me. IV. Finally if it be said that this is an impression too vague and impalpable to be definitely traced, the answer is in the The spirit of Apostle's character. Much there was doubtless performs in the culiar to himself, much that was peculiar to his own Apostle's especial mission. But, if in any human character character. We can discern the effect produced by contact with another higher and greater than itself, such an effect may be discovered in that of St. Paul. 'The love of 'Christ,' the love which Christ had shown to man, was, as he himself tells us, his 'constraining' motive. That Love, with the acts in which it displayed itself, was the great event which rose up behind him as the single point from which all his thoughts diverged in the mast, and to which they converged again in the future. Unless

Bacon's Essays; 'Of Goodness, and Goodness of Nature.'

¹ The apparent exception in Rom. iii. 26 is, it need hardly be observed to those acquainted with the original language, only apparent. The nearest approach to the requirement of fatth in any special act of Christ in in Rom. 20, if I thou shalt conjusted to the conference of th be saved.* The Resurrection, in this passage, as in others, is probably selected as the especial fact which constituted 'the glad tidings,'—the Gaptel. Had the Gospels closed with the Crucifixion, however instructive they might have been, we feel that the effect of the story would have been simply mournful and trafficial, not, as now, inspiriting and joyful.

2 Cor. v. 14, and the Notes on that chapter.

a Love, surpassing all Love, had been manifested to him, we know not how he could have been so constrained; and, we must also add, unless a freedom from his past prejudices and passions had been effected for him, by the sight of some higher Freedom than his own, we know not how he could have been thus emancipated.

Such a Love, and such a Freedom, we find in St. Paul's Epistles. Such a combination,-rarely, if ever, seen before, rarely alas! seen since, -is one of the best proofs of the reality of the original acts in which that combination was first manifested. The Gospel narratives, as we now possess them, were, in all probability, composed long after these Epistles. But the Life which they describe must have been anterior. That Life is 'the glory,' of which, as the Apostle himself says, his writings and actions are 'the reflection,' Whatever other diversities, peculiarities, infirmities impassably divide the character of the Apostle from that of his Master, in this union of fervour and freedom there was a common likeness which cannot be mistaken. The general impulses of his new life-'the grace of God, by which he was what he was '-could have come from no other source. Whatever may be the force of the particular allusions and passages which have been collected, the general effect of his whole life and writings can hardly leave any other impression than that,-whether by 'revelation,' or by 'receiving' from others, whether 'in the body, or out of the body,'1 we cannot tell-he had indeed seen, and known, and loved, and followed Jesus Christ our Lord.

Gal. i. 12; 1 Cor. xi. 23—xv. 3; 2 Cor. xii. 3.

APPENDIX.

THE APOCRYPHAL EPISTLES OF THE CORINTHIANS TO ST. PAUL,

AND OF ST. PAUL TO THE CORINTHIANS,

PRESERVED IN THE ARMENIAN CHURCH.

THE genuineness of the two canonical Epistles to the Corinthians has never been doubted. But there are two other Epistles extant, one claiming to be from the Corinthians to St. Paul, the other from St. Paul to the Corinthians. They were discovered in an Armenian MS, in the possession of Gilbert North, first mentioned by John Gregory, and Usher (See Fabricius, Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti, vol. ii. pp. 920, 921), first published by Wilkins from an imperfect MS.; then by La Croze. with a dissertation and translation from a perfect MS. in the possession of Whiston; then by Whiston's two sons, William and George Whiston, with a Greek and Latin translation of their own, in an Appendix to their edition of Moses Chorenensis, 1736. The last and most complete translation is that made jointly by Lord Byron and Father Pasquale Aucher, of the Armenian monastery of St. Lazarus at Venice, from MSS. in that convent; and published in Moore's Life of Lord Byron (vol. vi. 274, 275).

In the Armenian Church they, in at least one MS., are inserted after the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, under the title of 'the Epistle of the Corinthians to St. Paul,' and the 'Third Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians.'!

It has sometimes been imagined that the Epistle from the Corinthians is that alluded to in I Cor. vii. I, and that the Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians is that alluded to in I Cor. v. 9. Not only, however, is their general style absolutely fatal to their genuineness; but all their details are incompatible with such an hypothesis, or even with the belief that any such reference could have fallen within the scope of the intention of the framers of these Epistles.

(1) Even if it could be maintained that 1 Cor v. 9 alluded to a separate 1 Epistle, that Epistle must have been written, not in answer to the Corinthian Epistle of 1 Cor. vii. 1, but before it, the real answer to the Corinthian Epistle being the genuine First Epistle itself; whereas in his spurious correspondence the Corinthian letter precedes that of the Apostle.

¹ Curzon's Armenia, 225.

(2) The 'Epistle from the Corinthians' mentions no one tonic which their letter (as alluded to in 1 Cor. vii.-xiv.) must have contained, neither marriage nor sacrificial feasts, nor the questions as to public assemblies or spiritual gifts, whilst, on the other hand, it complains of heresies, which, with the exception of the denial of the resurrection of the body, are not noticed at all in the First Epistle.

(3) The 'Epistle of St. Paul,' in like manner, contains no allusion to the only topics which (on the hypothesis of its being that alluded to in 1 Cor. v. 9) it must have contained, viz. the warning to avoid immoral brethren, the only passage of the kind being the warning in verse 31 to avoid heretics.

(4) The bearers of the genuine Corinthian letter (as described in 1 Cor. xvi. 15) are quite different from those named amongst the bearers of the spurious Epistle, with the exception of Stephanas (or, as he is there called, 'Stephanus'). There is, moreover, not a single name identical with those mentioned either in the Acts or in the genuine Epistles; the heresies mentioned belonged to a later period than any writings of the New Testament; the answers of St. Paul are a feeble imitation of 1 Cor. xv., and his other expressions are in part copied from the Gospels and the Epistle to the Galatians, in part entirely unlike his own style.

The only points of coincidence between these spurious Epistles and the hypothesis of an early date are

(1) That Paul is described in the section which intervenes between the two Epistles as being in Phoenicia, which would agree with his passage to Antioch (Acts xviii. 22) immediately after his first visit to Corinth.

(2) That in the 'Epistle of St. Paul,' verse 2, their conversion is spoken of as recent.

(3) That Corinth is described in the first verse of 'The Epistle of the Corinthians' as governed by Presbyters, as in Clem. Epist. ad Cor. i. 21, 44, 47, 54, 57; Const. Apost. vii. 46; Eus. H. E. iv. 22, 23.

(4) That Paul is called simply 'the brother,' which agrees indeed with a more primitive mode of address, but is hardly reconcilable with the relation of the Corinthian Church towards him, 1 Cor. iv. 15, ix. 2.

(5) The conduct and language of St. Paul (in the intervening Section) are natural and in agreement with the Acts and Epistles. 'He grieved and said with tears, "It had been better for me to have died before, and to be with the Lord."

It would not have been worth, while to notice these details, but that it seemed important to call attention to the irreconcilable differences both of fact and style between two indisputably genuine Epistles of St. Paul on the one hand, and two indisputably spurious Epistles on the other hand:

First, as showing the impossibility of confounding the two together.

Secondly, as showing the ignorance and clumsiness with which forgers of later times compiled their imitations of the genuine Apostolic works.

[The following text is given from Moore's Life of Lord Byron, vol. vi. p. 269-275, ed. Murray, 183, collated with the Latin translation of the Whistons. The variations not noticed by Lord Byron are here inserted in brackets.]

THE EPISTLE OF THE CORINTHIANS TO ST. PAUL THE APOSTLE.

- 1 CTEPHEN,² and the clders with him, Dabnus, Eubulus, Theophilus, and Xinon, to Paul, our father and evangelist, and faithful master in Jesus Christ, health.³
- 2 Two men have come to Corinth, Simon by name, and Cleobus, who vehemently disturb the faith of some with deceitful and corrupt words:
 - 3 Of which words thou shouldst inform thyself: 5
 - 4 For neither have we heard such words from thee, nor from the other apostles:
- 5 But we know only that what we have heard from thee and from them, that we have kept firmly.
 - 6 But in this chiefly has our Lord had compassion, that,
- ¹ Some MSS. have the title thus: Eule Epistle of Stephen the Elder to Paul the Apostle, from the Corinthians.
- ² In the MSS, the marginal verses published by the Whistons are
- ³ In some MSS, we find, The clders Numerus [Whistons, Nemerus]

Eubulus, Theophilus, and Nomeson, to Paul their brother, health! 4 Others read, There came certain 4 Others read, There came certain men, . . and Clobeus, who vehemently shake.

⁵ [Whistons, whose words thou oughtest to resist.]

whilst thou art yet with us in the flesh, we are again about to hear from thee.

7 Therefore do thou write to us, or come thyself amongst us quickly.

8 We believe in the Lord, that, as it was revealed to Theonas, he hath delivered thee from the hands of the unrishteous.

9 But these are the sinful words of these impure men, for thus do they say and teach: 2

10 That it behoves not to admit the prophets.³

11 Neither do they affirm the omnipotence of God:

12 Neither do they affirm the resurrection of the flesh:

13 Neither do they affirm that man was altogether created by God:
14 Neither do they affirm that Jesus Christ was born in the flesh from the Virgin Mary:

15 Neither do they affirm that the world was the work of God, but of some one of the angels.

16 Therefore do thou make haste 4 to come amongst us,

17 That this city of the Corinthians may remain without scandal,

18 And that the folly of these men may be made manifest by an open refutation. Fare thee well.³

The deacons Thereptus and Tichus 6 received and conveyed this Epistle to the city of the Philippians.7

When Paul received the Epistle, although he was then in chains on account of Stratonice, the write of Apofolanus, yet, as it were forgetting his bonds, he mourned over these words, and said, weeping: 'It were better for me to be dead, and with the Lord. For while I am in this body, and hear the wretched words of such false doctrine, behold, grief arises upon grief, and my trouble adds a weight to my chains; when I

¹ Some MSS. [and Whistons] have, We believe in the Lord, that his presence was made manifest; and by this hath the Lord delivered us from the hands of the unrighteous.
² [Whiston, But these are their erroneous words; for thus do they say.]

Southers read, to read the Prophets.
Some MSS. [and Whistons]
have, Therefore, brother, do thou make haste.

5 Others read, Fare thee well in the Lord.

6 Some MSS. [and Whistons]
have, The deacons Therepus and ⁷ The Whistons have, to the city of Phanicia: but in all the MSS. we find, to the city of the Philippians.

Others read [and Whistons], on account of Onotice.
The Whistons have, of Apollo-phanus: but in all the MSS. we read, Apofolanus.

behold this calamity, and progress of the machinations of Satan. who searcheth to do wrong.

And thus, with deep affliction, Paul composed his reply to the Epistle.1

EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE CORINTHIANS.2

- 1 PAUL, in bonds for Jesus Christ, disturbed by so many errors,³ to his Corinthian brethren, health.
- 2 I nothing marvel that the preachers of evil have made this progress.
- 3 For because the Lord Jesus is about to fulfil His coming, verily on this account do certain men pervert and despise His words
- 4 But I, verily, from the beginning, have taught you that only which I myself received from the former apostles, who
 - always remained with the Lord Jesus Christ, 5 And I now say unto you, that the Lord Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, who was of the seed of David,
 - 6 According to the annunciation of the Holy Ghost, sent to her by our father from heaven;
- 7 That Jesus might be introduced into the world,4 and deliver our 5 flesh by His flesh, and that He may raise us up from the dead:
 - 8 As in this also He himself became the example:
- 9 That it might be made manifest that man was created by the Father. 10 He has not remained in perdition unsought; 6
 - 11 But he is sought for, that he might be revived by adoption.
- 12 For God, who is the Lord of all, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who made heaven and earth, sent, firstly, the Prophets to the Jews:
 - 13 That He would absolve them from their sins, and bring them to His judgment.
- 14 Because he wished to save, firstly, the house of Israel, he bestowed and poured forth his Spirit upon the Prophets:
- 15 That they should, for a long time, preach the worship of God, and the nativity of Christ,
- 1 In the text of this Epistle there are some other variations in the words, but the sense is the same. ² Some MSS. have, Paul's Epistle
- from prison, for the instruction of the
- Corinthians.
- disturbed by various compunctions.
 4 Some MSS. [and Whistons] have, That Jesus might comfort the
 - 5 [Whistons, all flesh.]
 - Others read, He has not remained 5 Others [and Whistons] read, indifferent.

596 APPENDIX.

16 But he who was the prince of evil, when he wished to make himself God, laid his hand upon them,

17 And bound all men in sin,1

18 Because the judgment of the world was approaching.

19 But Almighty God, when He willed to justify, was unwilling to abandon his creature:

20 But when He saw his affliction, he had compassion upon him:

21 And at the end of a time He sent the Holy Ghost into the Virgin, foretold by the Prophets.

22 Who, believing readily, was made worthy to conceive, and bring forth our Lord Jesus Christ.

and bring forth our Lord Jesus Christ.

23 That from this perishable body, in which the evil spirit was glorified, he should be cast out. and it should be made manifest

24 That he was not God: For Jesus Christ, in His flesh, had recalled and saved this perishable flesh, and drawn it into eternal life by faith.

25 Because in His body he would prepare a pure temple of iustice for all ages;

26 In whom we also, when we believe, are saved.

27 Therefore know ye that these men are not the children of justice, but the children of wrath;

28 Who turn away from themselves the compassion of God; 29 Who say that neither the heavens nor the earth were altogether works made by the hand of the Father of all things.

30 But these cursed men bave the doctrine of the serpent.

31 But do ye, by the power of God, withdraw yourselves far from these, and expel from amongst you the doctrine of the wicked.

32 Because you are not the children of rebellion 6, but the sons of the beloved church. 33 And on this account the time of the resurrection is preached to all men.

34 Therefore they who affirm that there is no resurrection of the flesh, they indeed shall not be raised up to eternal life;

35 But to judgment and condemnation shall the unbeliever arise in the flesh:

¹ Some MSS. [and Whistons] have, Laid his hand, and them and all [flesh] bound in sin.

Others [and Whistons] read, bekieving with a pure heart.
[Whistons 'in the same hody he

3 [Whistons, 'in the same body he should be convicted and made manifest. If he was not God, how did Jesus Christ . . . recall and save, &c.]

4 Some MSS. [and Whistons]
have, of God the Father of all things.

5 Others [and Whistons] read,
They curse themselves in this thing.

Others [and Whistons] read, children of the disobedient.

- 36 For to that body which denies the resurrection of the body, shall be denied the resurrection: because such are found to refuse the resurrection.
- 37 But you also, Corinthians! have known, from the seeds wheat, and from other seeds, 38 That one grain falls 1 dry into the earth, and within it first dies.

39 And afterwards rises again, by the will of the Lord, endued with the same body:

40 Neither indeed does it arise with the same simple body, but manifold, and filled with blessing.

41 But we produce the example not only from seeds, but from the honourable bodies of men.2

42 Ye have also known Jonas, the son of Amittai.3

43 Because he delayed to preach to the Ninevites, he was swallowed up in the belly of a fish for three days and three nights:

44 And after three days God heard his supplication, and brought him out of the deep abyss;

45 Neither was any part of his body corrupted; neither was his eyebrow bent down.³ 46 And how much more for you, oh men of little faith;

47 If you believe in our Lord Jesus Christ, will He raise you up, even as He himself hath arisen.

48 If the bones of Elisha the prophet, falling upon the dead, revived the dead,

49 By how much more shall yes, who are supported by the flesh and the blood and the Spirit of Christ, arise again on that day with a perfect body?

50 Elias the prophet, embracing the widow's son, raised him from the dead: 51 By how much more shall Jesus Christ revive you, on that day, with a perfect body, even as He himself hath arisen?

52 But if ye receive other things vainly,7 53 Henceforth no one shall cause me to travail: for I bear on my body these fetters,8

1 Some MSS. have, That one grain falls not dry into the earth. ² Others [and Whistons] read, But we have not only produced from seeds, but from the honourable body of Others [and Whistons] read, the son of Ematthias. Whistons om., 'and brought

. . . abyss.']
Others [and Whistons] add, nor did a hair of his body fall therefrom.

6 [Whistons, ye who are in the flesh and supported by the Word of Christ. 7 Some MSS. [and Whistons] have, Ye shall not receive other things

8 Others [and Whistons] finished here thus, Henceforth no one can trouble me further, for I bear in my body the sufferings of Christ. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, my brethren. Amen.

- 54 To obtain Christ; and I suffer with patience these afflictions to become worthy of the resurrection of the dead.
- 55 And do each of you, having received the law from the hands of the blessed Prophets and the holy gospel, firmly maintain it:
- 56 To the end that you may be rewarded in the resurrection of the dead, and the possession of the life eternal.
- 57 But if any of ye, not believing, shall trespass, he shall be judged with the misdoers, and punished with those who have false belief.
- 58 Because such are the generation of vipers, and the children of dragons and basilisks.

 59 Drive far from amongst ye, and fly from such, with the - aid of our Lord Jesus Christ.

 60 And the peace and grace of the beloved Son be upon
- you.2 Amen.

1 Some MSS, have, of the holy elist. you all. Amen.

Done into English by me, January-February, 1817, at the Convent of San Lazaro, with the aid and exposition of the Armenian text by the Father Paschal Aucher, Armenian Friar.

BYRON.

Venice, April 10, 1817.

2 Others add, Our Lord be with

I had also the Latin text, but it is in many places very corrupt, and with great omissions.

THE END.

STANDARD WORKS.

- THE JUDGMENTS OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL IN ECCLESI-ASTICAL CASES OF DOCTRINE AND DISCIPLINE, with a Preface by the Bishop of London. Edited by Hon. George C. Brodetck and Rev. W. II. Fremante. 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- AIDS TO FAITH; A SERIES OF THEOLOGICAL ESSAYS. By Various Writers. Edited by William Thomson, D.D., Lord Archbishop of York. 8vo. 9s.
- A DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE; ITS ANTIQUITIES, BIOGRAPHY, AD NATURAL HISTORY. BY Various Writers. Edited by WM. SMITH, LL.D. With Plans and Woodcuts. 3 rols. Medium 8ro. £5 5s.
- THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY TESTAMENT. Edited with a short Practical Commerce. By Archicecon Courses, M.A., and W. Basel Jones, M.A. With more than 100 Illustrations. 2 vols. crows 8vo. 30c.
- A HISTORY OF LATIN CHRISTIANITY, including that of the Ports to the Porturcate of Nicholas V. By Dram Milman. 3rd Edition. 9 vols. 8vc. 84s.
- MILMAN'S HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY, from the Birth of Christ to the Abolition of Pagastics in the Roman Empire. Revised Edition. 3 vols. 8vo. 36s.
- MILMAN'S HISTORY OF THE JEWS, from the EARLIEST PERIOD, continued to Modern Tirses. Revised Edition. 3 vols. 8vo. 36s.
- A CHURCH DICTIONARY. By Dean Hook. 8th Edition. 8vo. 16s.

 LINCOLN'S INN SERMONS. By Wm. Thomson, D.D., Archbishop of
- York. 8vo. 10z. 6d.
 UNIVERSITY SERMONS. By ROBERT SCOTT, D.D., Master of Baliol.
- SERMONS AT LINCOLN'S INN, AND ON SPECIAL OCCA-SIONS. By Ret. Camon Cook, M.A. 8vo. 9s.

Post 8vo. 8s. 6d.

- BAMPTON LECTURES, 1858—THE LIMITS OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT EXAMINED. By H. L. Manser, B.D. 4th Edition. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- BAMPTON LECTURES, 1859—THE HISTORICAL EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE SCRIPTURE RECORDS STATED ANEW, with Special Reference to the Doubts and Discoveries of Modern Times. By Groege Rawlinson, M.A. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 14s.
- BAMPTON LECTURES, 1860—SUNDAY; ITS ORIGIN, HISTORY, AND PRESENT OBLIGATIONS. By Rev. J. A. Hessey, D.C.L. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 16s.
- BAMPTON LECTURES, 1862—A CRITICAL HISTORY OF FREE THOUGHT IN REFERENCE TO THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION. By Rev. Adam Storey Farran, M.A. 8vo. 16s.

STANDARD WORKS-continued.

- BAMPTON LECTURES, 1863—The Relation Between the Divine AND HUMAN ELEMENTS IN HOLY SCRIPTURE. By Rev. J. HANNAR, D.C.L. 870. 108. 6d.
- THE PRIMITIVE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISMAL REGENERA-TION, By J. B. Morley, B.D. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- MOZLEY ON THE AUGUSTINIAN DOCTRINE OF PREDES-TINATION. 870. 14s.
- LECTURES ON THE RIGHT USE OF THE EARLY FATHERS. By J. J. Blunt, B.D. 2nd Edition. 8vo. 15s.
- BLUNT'S UNDESIGNED COINCIDENCES IN THE WRITINGS OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, an Argument of their Veracity. 6th Edition. Post 8vo. 6s.
- BLUNT'S HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. 3rd Edition. Post 8ro. 7s. 6d.
- BLUNT'S PARISH PRIEST; His Acquirements, Principal Obligations, and Duties. 3rd Edition. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- BLUNT'S PLAIN SERMONS; Preached before a Country Congregation. 2nd Edition. 3 vols. Post 8vo.
- PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE HOLY LAND. By Rev. EDWARD ROBINSON, D.D. Post 8vo. 10s. 6d.

 HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH FROM THE APOSTOLIC
- AGE TO THE CONCORDAT OF WORMS, A.D. 64-1122. By Rev. CANON ROBERTSON, M.A. 3rd Edition. 3 Yols. 8vo. 38s.
 BIBLICAL RESEARCHES IN PALESTINE. By EDWARD ROBINSON.
- D.D. Maps. 8vo. 15s.

 HANDBOOK FOR SYRIA AND PALESTINE; the Geography, History, Antiquiries, and Inhabitants of three Countries; the Peninsula of Sinal, Edon, and the Syrian Desert. By J. L. Porter, M.A. Maps. 2 vols. Post 8vo. 24s.
- THE HOLY SEPULCHRE AND THE TEMPLE AT JERUSA-LEM. Two Lectures delivered 1862 and 1865. By James Fergusson, F.R.S. Woodcute. 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- THE BOOK OF THE CHURCH. By ROBERT SOUTHEY, LL.D. 7th Edition. Post 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. Illustrated with Borders, Initial Letters, Woodcuts, and Notes explaining the Order and History of the Offices. By Rev. Thomas James, M.A. Sto. 18s. cloth; 31s. 6d. calf; 36s. motocco.